- Water Commission — one for three years.

Friday, March 7 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 29, and for the Annual Town Election, Saturday, April 5.

Register to vote

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before town meeting or election day, may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Election (which is on Saturday, Jan. 25) will be Friday, Jan. 3 from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's office.

Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, the Cohasset Post Office and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and must be postmarked on or before Jan. 3.

RTF holiday hours

The Recycling Transfer Facility will be closed on New Years Day, Jan. 1. It will be open on Jan. 2.

Tree disposal

Christmas trees may be brought to the D.P.W. parking area until Jan. 6. Please remove all wires and decorations.

Public hearing for downtown

The Board of Selectmen scheduled a public hearing for Jan. 13 to discuss the Waterfield Group's design for the Downtown Revitalization Project. Craig Miller, the president of the group will be available to discuss the different features of the plan, from the sidewalk style to overhead lighting.

Volunteer drivers for 'Road to Recovery'

The road to recovery for many cancer patients can be a long one with many decisions to be made and hurdles to overcome. Although cancer treatments today work better than ever, temporary side effects can make patients feel too sick to drive or take public transportation to their appointments. For those without family or friends living close by, the lack of transportation may mean missing treatments that could save their lives. That's why the American Cancer Society's Road to Recovery program is currently seeking local volunteers to drive patients to and from their treatment appointments. Drivers willing to travel to Boston are urgently needed. If you have a car and are able to donate any amount of time between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays, you can really make a difference in the life of a cancer patient by becoming a volunteer driver. Drivers' availability is matched with the needs of patient who call.

Through the services of volunteer drivers, who devote just hours of their lives to cancer patients, the American Cancer Society's Road to Recovery program is committed to providing cancer patients with rides to and from cancer treatments. Last year, volunteer drivers provided 716 rides to cancer patients in the South Shore area and 4,100 rides to throughout southeastern Massachusetts.

To volunteer as a Road to Recovery driver or for more information, contact your local American Cancer Society at 1-800-ACS-2345 or visit the web site www.cancer.org.

Winter guidelines

The public works department has issued the following winter guidelines for residents:

- Do not rake leaves or other debris into roads.
- Uncover storm drains blocked with leaves, snow or other debris.
- Do not plow or throw snow from private property onto the street or sidewalk.
- Do not block sidewalks with plowed snow or motor vehicles.
- Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15. It interferes with snow removal and is prohibited by town bylaws.
- The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mailboxes within the town layout.
- Sand for resident use only will be available behind the downtown parking lot.

— YEAR IN REVIEW—

A year of planes, trains, Cohasset Harbor and Chapter 40B

There were debates on planes, trains and the revitalization of Cohasset Harbor. The $40 million project to refurbish and expand the Deer Hill and middle high schools was on time and on budget. And the third volume of the town's history was published to rave reviews. The town acquired the Barnes property and the Paul Pratt building is going to remain in the public domain.

Cohasset saw familiar figures take over the Chief of Police and DPW Superintendent positions, while honoring the men who retired from those posts.

Two local residents, Nathaniel Palmer and Bruce Herzfelder, ran for state office and Glenn Pratt was named Citizen of the Year.

With a state budget crisis of mammoth proportions looming, we may look back on 2002 as a relatively quiet year. So before 2003 gets fully underway, the Cohasset Mariner takes you back to 2002 with stories that made the headlines.

January 3

The MBTA announces that it has reached an agreement in principal with Cashman Construction of Boston and Balfour Beatty, an international company, to construct the Greenbush rail line. The company's bid of $252 million was within MBTA estimates.

The Water Commission paves the way to bring the Ellms Meadow wellfield off James Lane back online by starting construction on the new wells. It took the commission three years to get all of the necessary permits to start construction. The town does not need the water capacity now, but wants to have the wells in place just in case.

Groundbreaking for the new Paul Pratt Library is set for Jan. 17. A reception following the ceremony will be held at the Red Lion Inn.

January 10

The Zoning Board of Appeals girds for the arrival of AvalonBay and Chapter 40B in Cohasset. The ZBA, which will serve in a judicial capacity during the public hearings on the comprehensive permit application, has done research and will have Town Counsel Rick Hucksan on board to help during the process.

The new paramedic program in Cohasset begins to show results, as the town sees a $75,000 increase in ambulance receipts in the last year. The program started in November of 2000 and allows the town to charge more money for its ambulance trips because the firefighters are certified paramedics.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln announces his intention to retire after 33 years of fighting fires in Cohasset. Lincoln was hired as Fire Chief in 1993, the first local resident to serve in that capacity in over a decade.

January 17

A group of abutters joins forces in an attempt to buy three lots on Beach Street to protect the area from development. The group, known as the Great Neck Preservation Group, is concerned the development could drastically impact the environment, because of the large amounts of ledge present on site. The land also abuts to the town-owned Great Brewster Woods.

The Sewer Commission and residents of Elm Street enter into negotiation over the design of the sewer plant. After two weeks of contentious debate, the groups appear ready to agree on a plan that would put windows into the sides, repaint the building, and incorporate some level of landscaping.

Cohasset middle-high school Principal Michael Jones makes a push to add electives to the course options at the school. While the school consistently ranks near the top of the state, Jones says that there are not enough specialty options for upperclassmen to chose from.

January 24

Glenn Pratt is named Citizen of the Year for his "generosity of spirit and true dedication to his hometown." Pratt's latest endeavor was the construction of a memorial to local mothers who lost sons in wartime.

AvalonBay announces that it won't file for a comprehensive permit ,to construct a 250-unit apartment complex on Route 3A until it has resolved waste removal problems at the site. The project will be constructed under the state's affordable housing law, Chapter 40B, which allows developers to skirt local zoning laws if a town does not have 10 percent of its housing stock designated as affordable.

The town's effort to strong-arm the state into funding the school building assistance fund fails. Representatives from Norwell, Pembroke, Hull, and Cohasset went to Malden and tried to persuade Department of Education officials not to delay reimbursement. But Commissioner David Driscoll said that there was no way to fund the program, given the state fiscal situation.

Town Manager Mark Haddad narrows the number of candidates for Chief of Police from 50 to four. The only Cohasset resident among them is Sgt. Robert Jackson. The other candidates currently serve in the towns of New Bedford, Fitchburg, and Westfield.

A charcoal-colored, tweed fabric fence proposed on the property of the box-like Walter Gropius house on Atlantic Avenue is up for consideration before the Zoning Board of Appeals. The board must decide whether the fence can be installed in the flood plain.

The proposed harbor walk improvements took a hit when the Board of Selectmen voiced its disappointment with the ideas. The project was brought forward to the town by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, which had been holding public hearings on the matter.

February 7

The Social Service League hires Donald Ivas to be the organization's Administrative Director. Ivas says he hopes to breathe new life into the league which has focused mostly on the elderly population.

Cohasset gets a financial boost for the new library when the town of Acushnet announces that it will be unable to accept the $1.6 million provisional grant from the state Board of Library Commissioners. The move paves the way for Cohasset, who was next in line, to receive the funds.

As part of its negotiations with Mass-American Water Company, the Water Department tries acquire North Cohasset and put it on town water. Mass-American had approached Cohasset looking to purchase 500,000 gallons of water a day from Cohasset.

February 14

The town receives good news when its bond rating is raised to an "A." According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the bump – which was thanks to sound financial planning – will save taxpayers $758,000 over the next 20 years.

The Planning Board decides not to support the Community Revitalization Corporation's recommendation to bury the utility wires underground in the village. The CRC had been working with the town to develop plans for the redevelopment of the village area.

Arthur and Jeanette Somerville of Cohasset, who met at a Valentine;s party in Boston in 1928, celebrate their 70th wedding anniversary.

February 21

Local Police Sergeant Robert Jackson is hired by Town Manager Mark Haddad to be the department's new chief. Jackson survived a crowded field that was narrowed down from 50 to four and then finally to one.

Donald Staszko, the owner of Cohasset Plaza on route 3A is back again looking for approval to expand his plaza. It is the third time in four years that Stasko has approached the town with expansion plans.

Cohasset High School graduate Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien is selected to appear on the reality television series "Survivor." Vavrick-O'Brien attended school in town for two years and was a cheerleader and a member of the homecoming court her senior year.

February 28

A survey by the Growth and Development committee, in conjunction with its on-going effort to construct a Master Plan for Cohasset finds taxes and the preservation of the character of the town are the main concerns of residents.

The Community Preservation Committee embarks on a public relations campaign to solicit ideas for the use of Community Preservation Fund money.

Buttonwood Books (located in the Shaw's Plaza on 3A) wins the Women's National Book Association's Pannell Award. The award is bestowed upon the bookstore that excels at creatively bringing together books and children in order to inspire inter-

Cohasset ballerinas light up the stage in the 'Nutcracker'

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

IN THE "NUTCRACKER"

Three Cohasset eight-year-old girls have been busy performing in Boston Ballet's "The Nutcracker" since Thanksgiving. Hannah Rawson, daughter of Alicia and Michael Rawson, is in the third grade at Derby Academy. She has been performing in the role of a lamb. Two Osgood third graders, Anya Gruber, daughter of Liz Gruber; and Julia Canney, daughter of Kim and Paul Canney, have been performing in the roles of cherub. This has been an exciting time for the girls and their families. Congratulations, that is hard work!

ALUMNI HOCKEY

Come one, come all! The annual Alumni Hockey Game will be held at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham on Sunday, Jan. 5 at 12:20 p.m. The registration fee for those alumni not currently in college is $25. A generous benefactor who wishes to remain anonymous will pay the registration fee for those alumni attending college. Spectators are welcome at no charge. Our current varsity team will face off against alumni for an afternoon of fun on the ice. Please join us. For more information or to register to play, please call Joanne Pilczak at 781-383-0268.

DEAN'S LIST

Jordan Thomas Fiore of Cohasset has been named to the dean's list at the Savannah College of Art and Design in Savannah, Ga. for the fall quarter 2002. Full-time undergraduate students who earn a grade point average of 3.5 or above for the quarter receive recognition on the dean's list. Jordan is majoring in photography. Great work, Jordan!

TREE PICKUP

Looking for someone else to take away your Christmas tree for you? Project Safeguard, a community effort to contend with health related issues, substance abuse and prevention for the children of our town, is sponsoring a fund-raiser. On Saturday, Jan. 4 and Sunday, Jan. 5 from 10 am to 1 p.m. a group of adults and teen volunteers will be available to pick up and dispose of your Christmas tree. The fee for this service is $12 per tree, $6 for senior citizens. Just put your tree next to your driveway, place a check payable to Project Safeguard on your door. Proceeds from this year's fund-raiser will benefit upcoming programs. To order service call 383-2492 available 24 hours. Please specify which day you would prefer. For more information, call Sally Sisson-Game or Karen Oronte at 383-6737.

YOUTH LACROSSE SIGNUPS

One thing you won't want to forget as the holiday season comes to a close is that Jan. 4 is registration day for Cohasset Youth Lacrosse. Registration will be from 9 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School, for boys and girls in grades 3-8. Chuck Jaffe, who heads up the youth lacrosse program, assures me that his teams will find a way to accept everyone who makes it to registration day, but that rosters will be completely filled at this one session. That means anyone who misses sign-up should expect to miss out on the season (and if you know Coach Jaffe, you know he's not kidding around when he says stuff like this).

You can get more information at the cohassetlacrosse.com Web site, including instructions on how to register in advance if you will be away on the 4th. So what does all this mean? Don't miss out on Jan. 4, this will be the only day for sign-ups for Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, no exceptions!

BOOKS COOK PROGRAM

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades 1 and 2 Books Cook program by calling 781-383-4109.

Once Upon a Recipe is for grades 1 and 2 and will be held from 3:15 to 4:45 p.m. on Wednesdays, and will be held at the Joseph P. Osgood School. Children will enjoy making bread Boas after reading "The Day Jimmy's Boa Ate the Wash" or making candy houses after reading "Hansel and Gretel," as example.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $55 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin Wednesday, Jan. 15, continuing through Feb. 14. Each week will feature different books and cooking.

For more information details and registration, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781-383-4109.

GARAGE DANCE

There will be a dance at the Garage on Friday, Jan. 10 from 7-10 p.m. Everyone in grade six-and-up is welcome. There will be a door charge of $5 per person. Snacks and refreshments will also be sold. By the way, The Garage will not be open Saturday, Jan. 4.

AWARD-WINNING AUTHOR

The Hingham Public Library and Buttonwood Books will host award-winning author Deborah Joy Corey for her second novel, "The Skating Pond" (Berkley Books, $21.95) at The Hingham Public Library on Tuesday, Jan. 14 from 7-9 p.m. Deborah is a former resident of Cohasset and participated in Buttonwood's first "Coffee With the Authors" for her award-winning first novel, "Losing Eddie".

"The Skating Pond" takes place in a small coastal town in Maine, an isolated community of fishermen and their families and occasional visitors from outside. Elizabeth, who is left alone after tragic circumstances, falls prey to the attentions of an architect from that outside world, a man her father's age, and is swept into an intense affair that changes her life forever. The evening will include a presentation, a reading, and a question and answer period followed by a signing. This is a free event and the public is most welcome. Please call Buttonwood at 781-383-2665 to reserve your signed copy if unable to attend.

GIRL SCOUTS COOKIES

Hooray, it is Girl Scout Cookie time! Many delicious kinds of cookies are offered at a cost of only $4 a box. Make sure to look for a Girl Scout in Cohasset in the next few weeks to place your order. Booth sales will also be held at Stop and Shop and Shaw's at many different times. If you have not been approached by a Girl Scout and wish to purchase cookies, you may call 617-482-1078 and find a local troop that is participating in town. Mmmm, Mmmm Good!

I want to wish everyone a very Happy New Year! 2003 is here and I hope that all of us remember to enjoy all the small moments that happen each day and to try and slow down our pace just a little. For some reason, this year really showed me how crazy and hectic everyone's lives are and how much it affects us all in our day-to-day doings. I really think that when life feels out of control for us as adults, it passes down to our children and the people around us in a very stressed way. One of my resolutions for 2003 is to try somehow to relax just a little and spend more time enjoying my family and friends and stop putting so much worry into small and meaningless things. Life, as we have all witnessed in so many ways can change so quickly, maybe we all need to re-evaluate just a little and find within each day what is really important. I hope that everyone enjoyed the holidays and that some of you will take the time to share some photos or news about the holidays and vacation with Around Town.

Make sure to get all your news, photos and event information to me no later than Mondays at noon.

WEDDING

Hunter - Pierce

On Nov. 9, 2002, Meredith Pierce, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Miller Pierce of Perry, Ga., married Jonathan Hunter at Isle of Hope United Methodist Church in Savannah, Ga.

The Rev. Marcus Tripp officiated at the ceremony.

Mr. Hunter is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Christie Hunter of Westwood.

Relay For Life is the American Cancer Society's nationwide, signature activity. Last year, more than 600 area residents participated in the American Cancer Society's sixth annual Relay For Life in Cohasset, raising close to $140,000 for Society programs of research, education, prevention, and local patient services.

The American Cancer Society is the nationwide, community-based voluntary health organization dedicated to eliminating cancer as a major health problem by preventing cancer, saving lives and diminishing suffering from cancer through research, education, advocacy and service. Relay For Life events are taking place all around Massachusetts. To find an event near you, or for more information, please call 1-800-ACS-2345.

Razzle's cat story dazzles them all!

By Carol McDermott
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Many of you have helped us find great families for our homeless pets this year, so I thought I'd tell you a great story — one of our happiest endings yet. There are a few coincidences here, which left me humming the theme song to the "Twilight Zone."

Harold was a stray cat that was living near DiNero's restaurant on Rte. 228. He had been on the streets for about five months before we got him, but thanks to some kind-hearted employees and patrons of DiNero's, he managed to survive better than most.

In October, one of the patrons brought him to a volunteer's home on Atlantic Hill (in Hull) and asked us to take care of him. As with most "trash cats", he was underweight and malnourished, covered in fleas and ticks and infested with parasites. Our group brought him to Hingham Animal Clinic for some medical care, cleaned and fattened him up and began the task of looking for his family. We posted ads and signs for about two months, with no results whatsoever.

One night in November, I was running a few errands near the restaurant, and impulsively decided to hang up some "Found Cat" signs in the area. I stopped at West Corner liquor store, which was closed, but ran into the owner in the parking lot. He has always been very supportive of our group and agreed to hang the sign the next day. The next night, it poured outside and all of the signs I hung were ruined — or so I thought.

After caring for Harold for more than a month, we decided to try to find him a permanent home. Harold came to live with me and settled in at my apartment very quickly. At the time, I was amazed at how comfortable and relaxed he became in such a short period of time. I bought him an identification tag and hot pink collar in case he managed to get out. Hot pink usually isn't my style, but for some reason, I thought it worked for him.

Thanks to Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, Barbara is reunited with Razzle (Harold).

In December, people started expressing an interest in adopting Harold and by Dec. 23, we had a good family lined up to take him. They went away for the holidays, and were going to adopt him upon their return on the 28th. But on Dec. 25, we received an email from a woman named Barbara, who stated that she thought Harold was her cat. She described him perfectly, right down to his two different colored eyes and the "beauty mark" on the bottom of his back paw — so I knew it was her pet. She came over today to identify him. I asked her to bring vet records and photographs of the cat as proof of ownership. When I gave her my address, her voice sounded a bit odd, but I chalked it up to emotion. Later on that evening, she called again to double-check on the address. When she arrived at my house, she recognized Harold, a.k.a. Razzle, right away and they had a great reunion.

As fate would have it, Barbara, her boyfriend Bob and Razzle used to live in my apartment. She brought photos of Harold/Razzle, showed him lying on the rug in my living room and on the beach outside my door — wearing a hot pink collar. Barbara thought that Harold/Razzle somehow found his way home from the Hingham Animal Clinic to his old apartment. But he actually found his way to DiNero's, was brought to a volunteer's home on Atlantic Hill, then transferred to my home a month later. I'm not sure which version is the stranger coincidence.

Apparently, Harold/Razzle escaped from her car at the Hingham Animal Clinic last May. He hung around the woods by the clinic for a week, and Barbara went over there every day to try to coax him back, but he was too scared and finally disappeared for good one day. Harold went on the lam and ended up about 2-3 miles away at DiNero's dumpster. Barbara never gave up hoping that she'd find him and refused to get rid of his cat toys or take his photo off her desk at work. A few days ago, her boyfriend, Bob, saw the "Found Cat" sign at West Corner Liquors (on his birthday) and called Barbara to tell her he thought he found a poster of her cat. It was posted across the street from where he worked!

Carol McDermott is a volunteer with Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, a non-profit organization staffed entirely by volunteers. The organization, which can be reached at 781-925-8584, found more than 100 homes for cats in 2002.

March 7

The Community Preservation Committee votes to support articles that would refurbish the Historical Society's museums, construct ball fields at the old gravel pits and provide $60,000 for the purchase of three vacant lots on Beach Street. In accordance with the Community Preservation Act, the expenditures will have to be voted in by a two-thirds margin at Town Meeting.

Town Manager Mark Haddad decides to remain in Cohasset at the behest of the Board of Selectmen. Haddad was the lead candidate for the town administrator job in Dedham, but dropped out after the Selectmen asked him to stay, offering to renegotiate his contract. Haddad received a $12,000 raise, placing his salary at $102,000.

The Montessori Community School in Scituate sends its sixth-grade students to Sunrise Assisted Living in Cohasset to spend time with residents there. The trips are a part of the school's community service program.

March 14

The Planning Board – for the third time in four years – denies Cohasset Plaza owner Donald Staszko support for a bylaw that would allow expansion of the Plaza with a Special Permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The town announces plans to seek a $750,000 debt exclusion to Proposition 2-1/2 in order to pay for the design and engineering costs associated with the installation of sewers in Little Harbor and on Atlantic Avenue. The sewer upgrade would be the town's third sewer project in recent years and would affect 450 homes.

The Recycling Committee, in an effort to increase school recycling, offers a $50 savings bond to the student who can come up with the best plan for an effective recycling program at the school.

The town mourns at 16-year-old Jesse Sargent dies of bacterial meningcoccal disease, an infectious illness that can lead to meningitis. Sargent had twice fought battles with Hodgkin's Disease.

A Cohasset Mariner survey shows that while the prices of many other things in Cohasset are rising, the cost of groceries is comparable to other towns. The Mariner surveys six stores and found that prices were in the same range.

Cohasset High School's Drama Workshop prepares for the Massachusetts High School Drama Guild Festival. The group beat out 85 other schools in preliminary rounds to make it to the final 15 troupes.

The MBTA announces it will take Graham Waste Service (on 3A, formerly the Winter Garden Skating Arena) by eminent domain, in order to clear room for the Cohasset Greenbush MBTA station. Graham Waste Services plans to move to another area in town.

The town prepares for Annual Town Meeting, with several major issues including, ledge, the runway lawsuit, and community preservation on the docket. The meeting will mark the 10th-consecutive year that Moderator George Marlette has held the gavel during the proceedings.

Michael McWilliams of Cohasset travels to New York City to participate in an attempt to break a world record in the tunes of glory march. McWilliams, 50, only recently began bagpiping, but will join the estimated 10,000 who will participate in the event which raises money for cancer research in honor of the victims of Sept. 11.

The Cohasset Legion and Hingham VFW combine forces to bring back Blue Star Flags for families who have a child serving in the military abroad. The groups hope to give momentum to a growing effort to bring Blue Star Flags – a historical tradition – back into wide practice.

April 4

More than 450 residents attend Annual Town Meeting to vote on 19 articles. The meeting requires two days to move through the articles, but the first day provides the highlights. The Community Preservation Committee's' proposals to build new ball fields at the Gravel Pits, repair the Historical Society's two museums, and add land to the town's open space rolls all pass. The ledge article proposed by residents on Beach Street fails to garner the two-third majority needed. That article was aimed at curbing development by limiting the amount of ledge that can be disturbed on a property.

After 42 years of dedicated service to the town, Harold Litchfield steps down as the head of the Department of Public Works. Litchfield began as a laborer in 1960 and worked his way up to Highway Supervisor, which was an elected position. In 1995, when the DPW was created, he was appointed its head.

The Cohasset Road Race by the Sea goes high-tech, using electronic ankle bracelets to record finish times. It is the first year that the race has used the technology.

April 11

Laurie Lidell of 467 Beechwood St. is named Mothers Against Drunk Driving volunteer of the year. Lidell has worked with MADD since October 1999, when her 13-year-old niece Katie DeCubellis was killed by a drunk driver.

Roger Hill gives the incumbents on the Board of Selectmen a scare, coming within 120 votes of top vote-getter Fred Koed, and within about 100 of Ronnie McMorris. The results were somewhat of a surprise given that the race was not expected to be close. Hill vows to run again.

The MBTA signs an innovative $252 million contract with Cashman Construction company of Boston and Balfour Beatty, an international company for the construction of the Greenbush line. The design-build contract places responsibility for cost overruns on the contractor, unless the MBTA changes the scope of the project.

Glenn Pratt receives Citizen of the Year honors at Kimball's By the Sea. More than 100 residents attend the event, which honored Pratt who was the force behind the new Gold Star Mothers Memorial at the Woodside Cemetery and has been a constant figure in town politics for many years.

The Board of Health holds a hearing to discuss its plans for tightening tobacco sales restrictions in town. The move is aimed at further deterring stores from selling tobacco-related products to minors.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation holds a public forum to discuss proposed improvements to downtown area. The CRC installed six different styles of lamp posts in the downtown area so that residents could see what they look like. The sidewalks and lights will be incorporated into the village revitalization project, expected to be completed in 2006.

April 25

A ceiling fan in unit 42 of 100 Pond Street catches fire and sparks a two-alarm blaze. The fire causes major damage, but no one is injured. Scott Tausevich, a landscaper with Lawn King, noticed smoke billowing from the vent in the building and alerted the residents to get out.

The Cemetery Study Committee announces plans to apply for funds from the Community Preservation Fund to restore the gates at the Beechwood Cemetery.

Tom Fogerty of 95 Elm St. announces his plans to turn his small house – a former candy shop – into a three story townhouse. The move draws criticism from abutters who fear that the building is out of character with the rest of the neighborhood. Since the land is zoned "Business" Fogerty would need a variance for construction.

May 2

In just eight months, the town of Cohasset cuts out 100 tons of waste, thanks to a Pay-As-You-Throw program enacted in July of 2001. Thanks to the decrease, the town is saving about $10,000 a month in costs because of increased recycling.

Paul Barry, owner of Cohasset Heights Landfill, pays a $100,000 Department of Environmental Protection fine for exceeding the capacity of his landfill. The town is left to decide whether to seek legal action to require Barry to remove the excess fill or leave it as it is.

The issue of make-up on sixth-grade girls first comes up when Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan and the school's PSO first consider a rule banning the use of make-up in the school's dress code. Callahan said that the practice is becoming a distraction in the classroom.

The Old Man and the Kid

The Old Man sat at his desk and studied the pile in front of him. Some people would call them souvenirs, remembrances of his 12 months on duty.

What a 12 months? He called them junk.

He started packing up early, the Old Man had. He was still on duty for another 15 minutes. Then the Kid would take over. He could hardly wait to be gone from there with his package of memories.

What would he do with them? He'd like to trash them, dump them in a black hole somewhere and forget about them. But he couldn't. He knew that an event, once locked in the memory bank, could not be removed.

The words of the poet, Omar Khayyam, seemed never so true — "The moving finger writes and having writ moves on, nor all thy piety and wit can call it back to cancel half a line, nor all thy tears wash out a word of it."

The Old Man looked at the clock on the wall. Still 10 minutes to go. He turned to his packing, picking up the heaviest piece and studying it ruefully before placing it in his pack.

It was a souvenir of a place called Afghanistan and a war where people were killed: and it carried bitter memories of two planes crashing into two towers and a man name Osama bin Laden still on the loose.

It was also a future momento of a place called Iraq and a war yet to be fought where people would be killed; and it revived bitter memories of Vietnam and how a war could create such deep divisions at home.

The country had been at war almost constantly for 60 or so years, first in Europe and the Pacific, then in Korea and Vietnam and the Persian Gulf and lesser places like Grenada and Panama.

He looked at the clock again. Still five minutes away from relief. He picked up another piece of the past and handled this one gingerly for it could be more serious than even terrorism and the promise of war.

The Roman Catholic Church, long a pillar of society to those on the inside and outside alike, was starting to crumble, not as a matter of faith but as a matter of scandal among those who directed it.

That was another subject that came up on his watch and he would not be around at the finish.

The Old Man sighed as he closed up his package of memories. Those were but two of the momentous events that occurred on his watch and he felt sad and glad at the same time that he would not be around at the finish.

Midnight struck as he closed the last hasp on the pack and slung it over his shoulder. The chimes were still tolling when the door opened and the Kid came in, looking sharp in his sash labeled "2003."

He thought the Kid's mood seemed subdued, a far cry from the youngster who wore Sash 2002 and began his term so confidently and finished his term so . . . so . . . could he really be called a failure?

"It's all yours, Kid," said the Old Man. "I wish I could have left it in better shape for you, but . . . "

"I understand," said the Kid and strangely enough he really did. "And don't worry, Pops," he added, with a confidence he did not feel. "I'll get us out of it."

"I hope you do," he said.

"So do it," said the Kid. "So do I."

Drawbacks to casino gambling

MY VIEW

REV. E. CLIFFORD CUTLER

There are long term, as well as short term drawbacks to casino gambling as a partial cure for the state's economic woes. They are both serious. In the long term the link between casino gambling and the state's economy undermines the very purpose of a commonwealth. Turning to casino gambling to answer the state's budget crisis is shifting the burden from the whole community to a few towns.

Destination-style casinos in towns such as Plymouth and Wareham place an undue burden that can only partially be made up by gambling revenues. Destination-style casinos will pull away dollars from other entertainment and tourist destinations. The long term drawback to shifting the economic burden from the whole to a region such as southeastern Massachusetts, is the furthering of a fragmentation that is already eating away at the body politic evidenced by low voter turn-out and campaigns marked by negative advertising. The deepening financial problems of the state in the long term require the commitment of the whole commonwealth, not a casino solution from southeastern Massachusetts. There is a complexity and cost to our economic difficulty that is not amenable to a casino fix.

For those who argue that the state's economic predicament is a result of an appetite for more and more, casino gambling only exasperates this unfettered desire. There is an addictive quality to gambling that leads to increased tolerance so that it takes higher stakes to give the same effect of pleasure experienced previously. This hardly seems an appropriate example for and influence upon the long term fiscal health in Massachusetts.

Gaming is not playful but is loaded with the hopes and fears of economic outcome not only for individual "players" but for many state legislators seeking this answer to much needed revenue

Gaming is not playful but is loaded with the hopes and fears of economic outcome not only for individual "players" but for many state legislators seeking this answer to much needed revenue. What is wrong with the erosion of play? When the pressure-free space of play is lost, the cost to society is the absence of room for experimentation and creativity, as well as learning to work together as a team. The replacement of play with non-playful pressures to win at all costs have already undermined youth sports. To some parents the game is too important to be left to the players. Because of this pressure and exaggerated emphasis on winning 70 percent of all youth drop out of organized sports by age of 13. Casino gambling does nothing to contribute to a playfulness that has already largely been overshadowed in our society today.

The long term effects of casino gambling are a deepening fragmentation and break-down of the common good, an increased appetite for more, and further erosion of play for play's sake. The immediate impact aside from the economic cost to the tourist and entertainment industry in southeastern Massachusetts, is the increase in number of people who will certainly succumb to compulsive gambling. This leads to lives out of control, families hurt, and the cost to society of such criminality as embezzlement. One has to at least ask the question of the personal and social cost of trying to solve a state economic shortfall with destination-style casino gambling.

The Very Reverend E. Clifford Cutler is Rector, Saint Stephen's Church, Cohasset and Dean of the Episcopal Church on the South Shore.

A look ahead

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The more things change the more they remain the same, as we shall see in 2003 . . .

January — Mitt Romney is sworn in as governor of Massachusetts. House Speaker Tom Finneran tells him he can go home to Belmont now. "We'll call you when we need you," he says. "Don't I get to sign something?" asks Mitt.

February — Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist is caught on camera eating a tuna sandwich on white bread. The Rev. Jesse Jackson demands either an apology or reparations. "Unconscionable," says the Rev. Al Sharpton, "particularly when there's good dark bread available."

March — Work on the Greenbush line grinds to a halt when the project is confronted by an historic poison ivy bush on the tracks in Hingham. "I remember that bush when I was growing up," says one protester. "I believe this calls for a whole new environmental statement."

April — President George Bush orders nuclear missiles sent to the Persian Gulf in anticipation of war with Iraq. Former President Bill Clinton urges caution. "Oh, yeah!" says talk show host Rush Limbaugh. "What about Monica Lewinsky and Paula Jones?"

May — A high school senior appeals principal's ruling that he cannot escort his pet beagle to the senior prom. His attorney, Alan Dershowitz, calls it "an outrageous assault on the freedom of choice that should be enjoyed by all Americans, regardless of age."

June — The Weymouth Town Council, having banned smoking in the town to protect the health of its citizens, debates ordinances controlling the fat content in McDonald's hamburgers and the amount of sugar in the sweets sold at Levaggi's Candies.

July — Steven Spielberg announces plans to remake "Casablanca," starring Leonardo DiCaprio as Rick and J Lo as Ilsa. Setting is given a contemporary twist by becoming Rick's Americaine Café in Baghdad.

August — Red Sox draw their 3,000,000th fan of the season on the day they are eliminated from the American League race. Globe and Herald point out they haven't won World Series in 85 years. Club owner John Henry announces plans to fit five more seats on top of left field wall.

September — A leading pharmaceutical house announces a pill that cures cancer, AIDS and the common cold will go on sale after the first of the year at a cost of $100 a tablet. "How come it's only 25 cents a pill in Canada," asks a reporter. "The collation is in the hospitality room," he is told.

October — Sen. Hillary Clinton of New York says she plans to take a fall vacation in New Hampshire, "visiting with the hard-working people of that state. Denies she has ulterior motive. "Oh, yeah," says talk show host Rush Limbaugh. "What about Whitewater?"

November — Sen. John Kerry, appearing in a live shot on WMUR-TV in Manchester, denies that he has become a resident of New Hampshire just because he has spent four months there. "I just wanted to relax and get acquainted with the folks," he says. "I have no ulterior motive."

December — Americans United for the Separation of Church and State announces plans to file suit to prevent mailmen employed by the federal government from delivering Christmas cards, particularly those with a religious theme. "A clear violation of the first amendment," says the suit.

Mapping the town's catch basins

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This year, the federal government and the state will require most towns to begin implementing Phase 2 of the Clean Water Act. This involves the towns obtaining a permit to discharge storm water directly into water bodies (which they are already doing).* The minimum action required by towns under these guidelines (those towns which are highly urbanized, like Cohasset) is to develop a storm-water management plan, which must be implemented over the next five years. Part of these requirements is to list all catch basins and storm-water discharge locations, and put their location on a map. Originally, we thought about 900 catch basins exist in the entire town, but it looks like the number is closer to 1100. Moreover, the Town has done considerable aerial mapping in connection with the several sewer and water projects we have ongoing. Also, the Town applied for and received a grant to pay the cost of identifying and mapping catch basins and their outfalls — a project, which started in the fall.

Originally, we thought about 900 catch basins exist in the entire town, but it looks like the number is closer to 1100.

Now that we've made a good beginning on the project, we have some results. It turns out that two aerial services have mapped Cohasset, essentially covering the town. There remains considerable data conversion, archiving, translation, etc., but most of the actual fly over of the entire town has been done, and is "in the can" so to speak. Opening the can and getting out the contents will not be cheap, but it is still far less than getting a plane and starting from scratch. Thus the cost of the entire mapping project will probably be about what the town has already allocated for the task. The map shows what has already been done and translated. There remain several areas where ground surveys need to be done. Principally, the area in Beechwood around the Aaron River watershed, and the area around Little Harbor. It's not necessary to do unurbanized areas such as Wompatuck Park or Whitney Woods. As we go on, Beechwood and Little Harbor will be filled in and added to the archived data we already have. Still, there remains verification and actual visual confirmation of what the pictures tell us. For this we are depending on Carl Sestito's DPW and student assistance from the High School.

An unseen benefit of this activity is the fact that the contractor performing this work has prepared several storm-water management plans for towns such as ours, and, using these, with help from the DPW and student volunteers, we will be able to develop our own storm-water management plan without burdening taxpayers with added costs. As this work goes on this summer, we will keep you advised of our progress

 But now towns will need to a National Pollution Discharge Elimination System (NPDES) permit to continue these discharges.*

Romney's win, budget crisis lead top 10 list

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

January 2 is officially Inauguration Day for Mitt Romney, but a lot of political types at the Statehouse might be thinking of it as Christy Mihos Day too. It's a good bet that Mihos will be as proud and happy as Romney, and certain that he was just as much a winner this year.

Mihos is the convenience store magnate who was fired by Acting Gov. Jane Swift for voting to freeze Mass. Turnpike tolls. Mihos and fellow Turnpike board member Jordan Levy fought in the courts to win their jobs back, but Mihos didn't stop there. He commissioned a poll that confirmed what Republicans were already whispering: Romney would be a much stronger candidate than Swift.

It was the signal for which Mitt Romney had been waiting. The CEO of the Salt Lake Olympics had been hoping to find a way to capitalize his excellent performance into a political win. Once Mihos leaked his poll to the Boston media, the way was clear.

Nine months later, Gov. Elect Romney's transformation of the Massachusetts political scene has been selected the top story of 2002 in the annual State House News Service survey of Statehouse reporters.

Votes were gathered and weighted based on their cumulative ranking of importance by the reporters who responded to the survey. The results: 1. Romney Enters Race and Wins Election 2. Ongoing and Deepening Budget Crisis 3. Clean Elections Law Starts Operation, But Undercut by Referendum 4. Levy/Mihos Turnpike Board Battle with Swift 5. Catholic Church Scandal Spurs Disclosure Law, Reilly Action 6. Shannon O'Brien First Woman to Win Primary for Governor 7. Former Senate President William Bulger Pleads Fifth Amendment in FBI Probe 8. Robert Travaglini Becomes Heir Apparent as Senate President 9. Legislature Passes $1.2B Tax Increase 10. Record Spending, Pivotal Debates Keep Governorship in Republican Hands

In some ways you could have done this as the Ten Most Interesting Days of 2002. March 19 was the winner by a huge margin. No one, including Swift's leading aides, knew when it began that she had decided to give it up. Over the weekend, she'd been quoted as declaring unambiguously that she intended to battle Romney and win if he got in. But then, in the year's most memorable scene, she stood before the podium in Room 157, the press briefing room, and battled her tears unsuccessfully as she told reporters, politicians and the press that her fight for redemption was over. The first governor to give birth in office said she couldn't raise three kids, solve the budget crisis, and wage a tough fight for the Republican nomination all at the same time. Now the terrible budget situation becomes Romney's biggest responsibility, and opportunity, and the most likely candidate for biggest story of 2003.

A little later that same day, Romney stood in the snow in front of his Belmont home and said he wanted to be governor because the state has yet to fully make use of its outstanding resources.

The next most interesting day was Nov. 5 — a day in which the new Massachusetts revealed itself. "New" in this case means, "not automatically Democratic," and also, "in sync with the nation."

The last three Republican victories had come against maverick Democrats, or ones about which the party was not unified and enthused. This time, a mainstream, moderate, well-regarded Democrat went up against the Republican and still lost. Shannon O'Brien's campaign didn't get very high marks from the pros, or truly seem to wow voters — both neither did Romney's.

The difference appears to be that the electorate has moved to the right and away from party identification at the same time. Massachusetts is more like the rest of the nation politically. The state went along with a Republican tide on a day of historic victories for the GOP in off year election — but part of what made defeat bitter for the Dems was that their party actually performed decently in gubernatorial races overall.

In between Romney Day and Election Day, there was a plethora of stories:

—Romney set a new record for spending. —The Democrats embarked on a disastrous challenge of his residency. —Robert Reich, and every other Democrat, crossed the 15 percent mark at the convention after weeks of speculation about who wouldn't make it. —Jill Stein and Carla Howell did not tip the balance in anyone's direction, as many feared or hoped they would. —Howell's "repeal the income tax" question did shockingly well, leading to a new unwillingness to mess with tax rates in the coming fiscal year.

The budget mess was the other major story of the year, and actually tied with Romney's win in the reporter balloting. Other stories about Romney's ascension were also cited by reporters as among the biggest of the year, so it was easy to declare Romney a bigger story than the budget, but it was still obviously the most important of the remaining nine:

• No matter how many times revenue benchmarks were adjusted, the state still seemed to be spending more than it was taking in. House Speaker Thomas Finneran went on a huge public relations campaign in the winter and spring, laying out the way the cost of government — especially health care for the poor — was rising at the same time revenues were falling. The Finneran-controlled House Ways and Means Committee went so far as to put out a budget with $2 billion in cuts, to show the public what "no new taxes" would mean. The budget for the current year was eventually balanced with about $300 million in cuts, $1.2 (some say $1.4) billion in one-time revenue drains, like spending out of the state's "rainy day" savings account, and a $1.4 billion tax hike. But still more cuts had to made later in the year — and must still be after Romney takes office.

• Court-ordered sale of property funded the first — and perhaps only — year of public campaign financing in Massachusetts. Lawmakers put a question on the ballot they said was simple enough for voters to understand, the contention being they didn't understand the question when Clean Elections was approved in 1998. Voters overwhelmingly said "no" to a question that asked if they approved the spending of public funds for political campaigns. House leadership are pointing to the referendum as supporting evidence for a repeal of the law in 2003. Clean Elections gubernatorial candidate Warren Tolman won few converts to the cause by using some of his $3 million for negative ads attacking other candidates' integrity, and a spot in which his wife said baldness is sexy.

• The year began with hearings into whether they should be fired for voting to block toll hikes needed to pay bondholders for the Big Dig. By the time the Supreme Judicial Court ruled on May 7 that the Turnpike Twins had not been fired "for cause," as Swift had claimed, her political career was on hold, the 'Pike fight having done so much damage to her viability that Romney had pushed her aside.

• The Attorney General convened a grand jury in the biggest Massachusetts story of the year, much bigger than anything in state government. Early in the year, the House and Senate reached agreement on a bill adding clerics to the list of those obligated under the law to report child abuse. The issue was difficult because it involved questions of what priests and other people of God can and must share of what they learn in confidence and in confession.

• She won the Democratic battle rather handily, and led the race from start to finish. O'Brien's strongest competitor was probably Robert Reich, and one stills hears grumbling that he would have been better against Romney. That's an imponderable, but there's no arguing that no one worked harder than O'Brien, making sure she pulled out a win in a long, chaotic convention that Senate President Thomas Birmingham needed in order to build momentum. After the convention, O'Brien kept her network motivated and kept her message before voters with lots of TV time, staving off a Reich surge in late August.

• This story may be like those movies that win Oscars because they're released late in the year, but certainly the halls of the Statehouse are still murmuring with discussion of the Bulger situation. The UMass President and his attorney argued they were being set up for a perjury trap, after transcripts of Bulger's 2000 testimony before a grand jury was leaked to the Boston papers. That leak came as Bulger was subpoenaed before the US House Committee on Government Reform, which is holding hearings on the FBI's use of informants. The most famous Boston informant is Bugler's brother James. "Whitey" Bugler is wanted in the deaths of more than 20 people. Bulger's acknowledgement in his grand jury testimony that he spoke to Whitey in 1995 had people debating whether a public official has an obligation to help put his own brother in jail, and whether the former Senate president had ever done anything to keep Whitey out.

• The East Boston veteran is known as a consensus builder, and he proved it by putting together the votes needed to win unofficial coronation as Birmingham's successor two months before the actual vote. Senators expect Travaglini to allow committees more power over the fate of bills, and a more inclusionary policy consideration style in the president's office.

Fashion show museum benefit

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of The Board of Trustees for Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum, we would like to extend our most sincere gratitude to all those who made our 2002 Holiday Luncheon and Fashion Show held at Atlantica Restaurant on Thursday, Dec. 12 an overwhelming success.

Many thanks to Talbots for donating their time and beautiful clothes for the fashion show. Thank you to Ms. Robyn Azzarone, Store Manager, Talbots, Hingham; Ms. Christine Lawless, Assistant Store Manager, Talbots, Hingham; and to Ms. Betsy Thompson, Director of Public Relations, Talbots. Thank you to Joe Campbell, Director of Operations and Michelle Scully, Function Manger, at Atlantica Restaurant and to our wonderful planning committee – Helen Arnold, Janet Campbell, Beryl Campedelli, Michelle Cayer, Regina Church, Patty Connors, Amy Fitzpatrick, Lisa Hutchkiss, Debbie Kuppens, Christine McCarron, Molly McGowan, Trish Morse, Chris Powers, Deirdre Prescott, Melissa Tierney, and Sally Young. And a special thanks to our models: Lorraine Carroll, Stephanie Faubion, Susan Galligan, Molly McGowan, Amber Nolan, Sally Newhall, Nora Speer, Sara Sullivan, Lorraine Tarpey, Jill Tedeschi, Elaine Tedeschi, and Sally Young.

And of course, a round of applause first to all our local merchants and artisans who gave so generously towards our raffle, and second to our local bakeries for donating our centerpieces which were all incredibly festive and delicious!: Farsh Oriental Rugs, Artist's Son Gallery, Talbots, The Ritz Carlton — Boston, Sweet Surprises, Paperscapes, Good Sport, ek designs, Cards and Shards, Cohasset Hardware, Curtis Liquors, Village Wine & Spirits, Rudolph Adamo, Hernan Salon, Cohasset Pizza House, Diane Johnston, The Red Lion Inn, RGP-Really

Community Design Partnership hold a brainstorming discussion at Town Hall to plot a plan of action for creating the town's Master Plan. Attendance was light, but the small number helped facilitate the discussion.

Glenn Pratt launches his effort to curb the Greenbush line's impact on the recently renovated and expanded Woodside Cemetery with a letter to the MBTA. Pratt is concerned that the right-of-way clearing will destroy the natural barrier of vegetation that has grown in the 40 years since the line was last operational.

Republican Nathaniel Palmer announces his candidacy for the Third Plymouth District seat in the House of Representatives. Palmer, 32, is a California-native, who moved to Cohasset three years ago. He is also the president and co-owner of Delphi Group, a consulting firm out of Boston.

The Red Lion Inn announces a plan to add 36 rooms to the hotel. Owner Gerd Ordelheide believes that the addition – which includes two new bridal suites – will actually decrease traffic and congestion in the area by allowing more people involved in wedding parties to stay at the hotel.

The decision whether to let sixth-grade girls wear make-up to school is pushed to the forefront after Deer Hill principal says the practice is disrupting the classroom. School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn says parents in the town that he has talked to are split on the issue.

Polly Logan, the grand dame of the Massachusetts Republican party, has her portrait hung in the statehouse as part of a traveling exhibition of portraits sponsored by the Boston-based Women's Education and Industrial Union.

The South Shore Voice of the Faithful holds its first meeting at St. Paul's Church in Hingham. The state-wide group of concerned Catholics formed in Wellesley in response to the sexual abuse scandal in the Archdiocese of Boston.

The battle over ledge removal continues, as David Walsh moves forward with a plan to develop his property, known as "Lot 2" on Beach Street. Abutters, concerned that the construction would change the character of the neighborhood, have already tried twice to institute a ledge removal bylaw that would prevent construction that removes significant amounts of ledge from a property. Walsh's plan calls for the removal of approximately 4,500 sq. feet of ledge, mostly to construct a 700 ft. driveway.

The American Cancer Society's Relay for Life draws more than 700 people to Cohasset High School's football field to raise money for cancer research. The participants, who solicited sponsorships prior to the event, walked around the track all night.

Cohasset High School grad Kathy Vavrick-O'Brien makes it to the final day competition on the reality show "Survivor," before being voted off the island. Vavrik-O'Brien graduated from Cohasset High School in 1972.

Two tragedies are narrowly avoided as graduating seniors from Cohasset High School begin to mix bad decision with their celebrations. Only 10 of the 81 seniors attended school on Senior Skip Day, and later at a massive party on Bassing Beach, a teen nearly drowns after the rowboat he was in capsizes. Then another senior crashed his 1988 Porche while speeding along Jerusalem Road.

The traditional Memorial Day remembrance includes a tribute to the heroes of Sept. 11. Lt. Ted Macklin, a Cohasset native and retired Naval Officer spoke to the community, saying that the events of Sept. 11 "add a dramatic backdrop and significance" to the day's events.

A new turning arrow and left turn lane are installed at the 3A and Beechwood Street intersection. Deemed the most dangerous intersection in Cohasset by town officials, MassHighway decided to take action and improve the site to cut down on accidents.

June 6

Kathy Vavrick O'Brien, a former Cohasset resident and one of the stars of the television reality show "Survivor" is rumored to be returning to town to participate in her high school class reunion. Vavrick-O'Brien attended Cohasset High School for two years, graduating in 1972. Despite the hype, Vavrick-O'Brien never shows up.

A forum held by the Cohasset Revitilization Corporation and the Cohasset Common Landscape Preservation Committee to discuss possible changes to the Town Common produces 30 recommendations. Among them were realigning Jason Road with Depot Court, moving the Christmas Tree, and repositioning the Town Hall driveways.

Selectman Merle Brown works to reestablish the Private Way Committee. Brown had been instrumental in the creation of the original committee eight years prior. Private ways are owned by individuals and do not qualify for town or state aid.

A four-alarm fire destroyed the antique Federalist-style home at 83 Summer St. It took 70 firefighters from seven towns to extinguish the blaze. The fire began in the attic and spread from there. Both people inside the home at the time were able to escape unscathed. At the time the Mariner went to press, the cause of the fire was still under investigation.

The Class of 2002 graduates from Cohasset High School. The students wore patriotic sashes in sad remembrance of the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11. Class President Robin Murphy points out that in a few years, the Class of 2002 will be entrusted with power. He then quoted the new Spiderman movie, saying that "With great power, comes great responsibility."

Tom Carroll of Cashman Construction becomes the MBTA's community liaison for the Greenbush Project. Carroll worked for four years on Cashman's Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel community outreach team prior to becoming the Greenbush liaison.

The third volume of the Town History is published by the Town Committee on History after a slight delay. The latest edition was written by Jackie Dormitzer and is 430 pages long, covering from 1950 to the present. The project to write the third book began in January of 1997.

The Red Lion Inn is pushed to the forefront of town news after an abutter, Michael Karp, charges that the Inn has not been a good neighbor. Due to a communication error, the meeting with the Planning Board is rescheduled to June 26.

Abutters to 419 Jerusalem Road are up in arms after hearing of Lisa and Leonard Kupsc plan to raze the small structure currently on the property and replace it with a much larger taller building. The original building was designed by noted American architect Royal Barry Wills.

The controversial plan to build a new runway at Logan Airport moves a step closer to reality, after the Federal Aviation Administration decides to support a compromise plan. Area residents are concerned that the runway, which will only be used on days when winds from the Northwest cause delays at Logan, will increase air traffic over Cohasset.

The middle-high school's new cafeteria, which will be completed in September, offers student a food-court style lunch experience, rather than a typical one-size fits all meal plan.

We have a dream — to build an incredible museum where children of all ages can meet, play and learn how much we, as fellow inhabitants of this earth, have in common. We celebrated our groundbreaking in November and renovations are underway to the museum's space which will be located adjacent to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The monies raised by this event, and future events, will be used to complete the design and construction of the exhibit spaces, the exhibits themselves, and the initial program development. We need to raise $1,500,000 to fund this project and we are one-third of the way towards our goal. Thank you all for helping to make this dream a reality.

Blizzard open house

TO THE EDITOR:

Members of the community are invited to the Hull Lifesaving Museum on Thursday evening, Jan. 9, from 7 to 9 p.m., for a "Blizzard of '78 Exhibit" Open House. The event will be a forum for South Shore residents to share their memories of the storm, and to preview plans for the upcoming exhibit, slated to open on February 8.

Guests are encouraged to bring with them any photographs, newspaper clippings, or other mementos of the storm. Remember, yesterday's "junk" is tomorrow's artifact, and we would love to see it all! Representatives from several news outlets, including Fox 25 News, the Hingham Journal, and WBZ will be on hand to record any stories visitors care to tell. If you would like to share a memory or an image but can't make the open house, please call Victoria Stevens, the Museum Educator, to arrange another meeting time at 781-925-5433. Please join us for a fun evening of relaxed refreshments and reminiscences about this legendary event.

• This is a subset of the budget crisis story, but significant in its own right. Lawmakers could have cut instead of taxed, but Finneran laid the groundwork for the increase by doggedly showing how deep and wide the cuts would be. Polls showed a lack of anger over the increases — in fact, a majority in most polls favored tax hikes as part of the solution to the budget problem. But a totally different message emerged from the election, as the question to completely wipe out the income tax and its $9 billion in revenue was defeated by only six percentage points.

• It will never be known for sure what gave Romney the victory — O'Brien reportedly ran a poll in December to find out. What is known is that no one's message was on the air as often as the erstwhile Utahan's. That's because he raised ($9.8 million) and spent ($9.4 million) more than anyone else in history to win the governorship. Democrats will tell you that's why he won. Privately, they'll also tell you they don't understand why Shannon O'Brien didn't loosen up and come across as less combative and scripted in the debates, particularly the last one. It may well have cost her the race; polls had her in the lead by a few points before the showdown moderated by Tim Russert, which will be remembered for Romney's use of the word "unbecoming," and perhaps the strangest question of the campaign: "Would you like to see my tattoo, Tim?"

Probably the most important story that didn't make the Top Ten list – and it just barely missed – was the MCAS test's first year as a "must-pass" exam. Other significant stories mentioned by reporters were the elimination of the bilingual education program by referendum, Boston's selection as the site of the 2004 Democratic national convention, and John Kerry's apparent desire to be the nominee of that convention.

The voting for Press Secretary of the year was much more spread out than usual, perhaps because the campaign spread the talent around. This year's winner was Denis Kennedy of the Office of Campaign and Political Finance. Happy New(s) Year and best wishes to all.

plete weapons training. Though the need to use a weapon in Cohasset is rare, all of the officers are well-trained in case of emergencies.

July 4

The third edition of Cohasset's history flies off the bookshelf. Author Jackie Dormitzer's book covers from 1950-2000. The book is relentlessly local, but also provides perspective showing how the town marched through the Eisenhower, Vietnam, Reagan, and Clinton eras.

The Osgood School introduces a program called Second Step, which teaches social skills to youngsters. The program received an exemplary rating from the U.S. Department of Education's Expert Panel on Safe and Drug-free schools.

The new traffic light at the intersection of Route 3A and Beechwood Street is installed, much to the pleasure of many town officials, who called the intersection the most dangerous in town.

Polly Logan is recovering after intruders bound and gagged her during a home invasion. Logan was left in a sweltering upstairs bedroom. Within weeks of the attack, the remarkable Logan is back out around town, shopping and working as a fundraiser for GOP candidates.

The Little League's plan to sell naming rights to the new ball fields constructed at the old Gravel Pits is met with harsh resistance by the Board of Selectmen. The board felt that selling the naming rights of the fields to the highest bidder undermined Cohasset values.

The tuition for Cohasset students attending the South Shore Charter School is taking a large chunk out of the school department's state aid. Cohasset has nine students attending the school, which cost the town $71,856, an amount taken off the top of the state funds before they are given to the town.

July 18

Michael Westcott of River Road heads up the new anti-40B group, Cohasset Action. The group seeks to curb the affect of Chapter 40B – the state's affordable housing law – in response to AvalonBay's proposed 200-unit 40B-apartment complex. Chapter 40B allows developers to skirt local zoning if a town's affordable housing stock is under 10 percent of their total housing units.

"Mansionization" is again pushed to the forefront as Lisa and Leonard Kupsc plan to replace the ranch-style house at 419 Jerusalem Road with an 8,500 sq. ft. Victorian structure. The issue pits the owners, who express a desire to do what they want with their property, against the neighbors, who want to preserve their ocean views as well as what they term to be the "character" of their neighborhood.

Thanks to student volunteers from the high school, the Historical Society's museum at the Capt. John Wilson house is re-opened for tours. Eight teens work part-time at the 200-year-old house during the summer to keep it open to the public.

Bassing Beach is closed because of high-bacteria levels. Enterococci levels – the red flag when testing for bacteria at town beaches – are too high for safe swimming. The bacteria can causeear infections, conjunctivitis, and rashes. The cause of the pollution is unknown.

Cohasset Action, the anti-40B group, begins to take shape, holding its first meeting at Cohasset Travel. Michael Wescott, the spokesman of the organization, says that it is important for the town to take steps to address the problem of 40B as well as the problem of affordable housing in Cohasset.

Cohasset Health Agent Joseph Godzik sounds the warning about the childhood obesity problem in America. Godzik spoke with school officials about getting a healthier menu for the system's cafeterias.

August 1

Cohasset Harbor is again in thew news as proponents of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's plan to refurbish the area clash with abutters who claim the harbor is fine as is. The issue remains at the forefront for the next four months.

The Cohasset Central Cemetery is put up for consideration for listing with the National Register of Historic Places. The cemetery, which dates back to the early 1700s, is under strong consideration for inclusion thanks to the diligent work of the cemetery's trustees.

West Corner, located at the intersection of Hull Street and Jerusalem Road, is highlighted because of a spat of development or proposed development in the area. The Greek Orthodox Church is adding a community center and the restaurant DiNero's is in search of the right to expand their restaurant and parking area.

August 8

Proponents of AvalonBay, a 40B development on Route 3A (across from Atlantic Bagel), announce that they will proceed with their project in two phases. The first will be a 200-unit phase, followed by a 54-unit addition at a later date.

Lou Chin, an anti-40B activist from Scituate, meets with Cohasset Action to help the group develop its plans. At the meeting, the idea of holding a Special Town Meeting and declaring a moratorium on 40B project in town first comes up.

With too many non-residents using Sandy Beach, the Board of Selectmen mulls increasing the amount of fees charged and having cars towed. Selectmen tabled the matter.

A lightning storm gives the newly installed sewers in North Cohasset a jolt, frying out the individual sewer panels on each house.

August 15

Paul "PJ" Trendowicz drowns after a game of kneeboarding off of the Cunningham Bridge. Trendowicz, 18, had graduated from Boston College High School in June.

Mark Haddad celebrates his five-year anniversary as the Town Manager of Cohasset. Haddad has done much to streamline the performance of Town Hall during his tenure.

The school construction projects are deemed a 'slam dunk' after both projects appear poised to go off without a hitch – or an increase in the budget. The Deer Hill School is schedule to open fully in Jan. 2003 while the middle-high school will follow in Jan. of 2004.

August 22

Local opposition to Chapter 40B builds, as Cohasset Action begins to expand. Meetings are now held in the Town Hall auditorium, a much larger venue than Cohasset Travel where they began. The group formed in response to the 200-unit 40B project proposed by AvalonBay on Route 3A. Chapter 40B allows developers to skirt local zoning laws if less than 10 percent of a town's housing stock is affordable.

Early retirement suddenly becomes an option for janitor Kevin Soule. In the face of pressure from Soule, the School Committee asks the Board of Selectmen to reconsider its decision not to include Soule in the state's early retirement incentive plan. Initially the School Committee said it was not interested in having any early retirements because it would cost them money.

Cohasset's Kate Bosworth debuts in her first leading role in Hollywood, starring as Anne Marie in the movie "Blue Crush." Bosworth attended Cohasset High and also had a role in "The Horse Whisperer."

The School Department announces that after unsuccessfully putting the school transportation system out to bid twice, it will have to run the busing system itself. The move forces the department to hire bus drivers as well as repair the town-owned buses.

Department of Public Works worker Kenny Thayer has a need for speed and details his weekend life as a drag racer. Thayer travels to the New England Dragway in Epping, N.H. every weekend to race the car that he built.

Children prepare to return to school on Sept. 4, as the school department readies the construction effort to once again deal with the presence of students. Both the Deer Hill and middle-high schools are on-time and on-budget.

September 5

A solemn Sept. 11 ceremony is planned by the Board of Selectmen in remembrance of those who were killed during the terrorist attacks. All of the local clergy were consulted and a simple plan to ring the church bells around town from 8:45 when the first plan hit until 9:03 when the second hit, was devised.

The Capt. John Wilson and Cohasset Maritime Museum are both up for consideration by the Massachusetts Historical Commission for inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places. State approval is the major hurdle in the application for inclusion on the register, and the Historical Society — which owns the buildings — feels confident that the buildings will meet the grade.

September 12

The town enters into a purchase and sales agreement with the Barnes family to acquire the 32-acre parcel known as the Barnes property, which abuts the town-owned Wheelwright Park. The Community Preservation Committee was the driving force behind the agreement, negotiating with the family behind the scenes until the deal could be made.

Under overcast skies, the town's subdued and understated memorial to the victims of Sept. 11 is a huge success. With church bells tolling under overcast skies, residents filled the Town Common to remember those who were affected by the terrorist attacks.

Cohasset Action, the town's anti-40B citizen group, gets 200 signatures to call a Special Town Meeting, but instead agree to bring the issues up at the regular Special Town Meeting with assurances the articles will get good placement on the warrant. The group plans to call for a moratorium on 40B projects in Cohasset.

The state Primary is expected to draw a crowd, thanks to the campaign of Cohasset resident Bruce Herzfelder. Town Clerk Marion Douglas estimates that about 20 percent of the registered voters in town will vote.

September 19

Turnout for the state Primary hits 32 percent. Cohasset resident Bruce Herzfelder loses his race for state Treasurer to fellow Republican Dan Grabauskas.

The Police/Fire Study Committee announces a stopgap plan to create space at the Police and Fire Station on Elm Street. A vote at town meeting to build a new fire station failed at last year's town meeting. The Committee is requesting that an article for $60,000 to study and further the design plans be included on the Special Town Meeting warrant.

Stuart Ivimey, the chairman of the Community Preservation Committee, explains the intricacies of the Community Preservation Act.

September 26

Jerusalem Road Estates, the controversial subdivision across from Straits Pond more than six years in development, still faces several hurdles before construction can begin. The major problem facing the development is a plan for wastewater disposal. Several options, including buying sewer capacity from Hull, are still on the table.

The School [illegible] announces its plan [illegible] Town Meeting for $99,000 in order to fund the purchase of a new bus, the preservation of the elementary school health program, and the early retirement of janitor Kevin Soule

AvalonBay hosts a walk-around at the proposed site of its planned 200-unit 40B development on Route 3A.

October 3

Selectman Tom Callahan asks the Board of Selectmen to reiterate their position on the Little League's plan to sell naming rights out of fear the board is caving in. Callahan feels that the Little League had backed the town into corner, because the money derived from the naming rights was a major part of the project's funding.

The town picks Grand Gables Realty Group of North Scituate to market the Paul Pratt building. After two unsuccessful tries out to bid, the Board of Selectmen resorted to hiring a real estate agent, because the $700,000 sale of the Paul Pratt building was built into the budget for the renovation of the old Osgood School into the new Paul Pratt Library.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation and the Friends of the Harbor group again butted heads at a Selectmen's meeting. At issue this time was improvements to the fence that runs along the Harbor. The CRC wants to bring the fence up to code, which would qualify the project for grant money, but the Friends of the Harbor want to leave it alone.

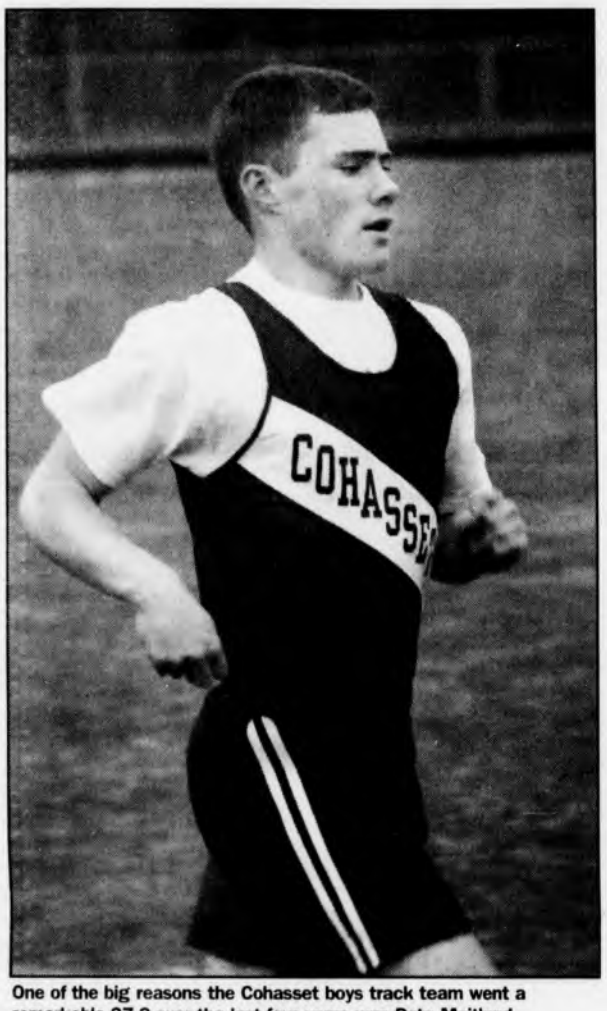
Cohasset Sports - Top 10 stories of the year

1) The Cohasset High hockey team enjoys a best ever regular season, going unbeaten at 19-0-1

Led by league top scorer Greg O'Connell, and four of the other top eight in points in John Durkin, Tom Anderson, Matt Davis and Rob Carpenter — along with some truly great defense provided by Tim Straughn, Mike Devine, Eric Libby and goalie Dan Kinchla — the Skippers outscored their opponents 156-20 before losing to Bourne in the Division 3 Sectional semifinals, 3-1. This run proved a great way for Dennis Walsh to end his distinguished 38-year coaching career, and provided a lifetime of memories for the members of that hockey team and their fans.

2) The CHS boys track team wins its second consecutive South Shore League championship

These were also, incidentally, the first two track titles CHS had won in 28 years. Pete Maitland, Tim Baird, Steve Laney, Jason Brown, Liam Martin, Dan Kinchla, Jay Bertovich and Jared and Brian Krupczak formed the core of a team that compiled a 27-2 record over the last four spring seasons under head coach Al LaFontain, including the unbeaten campaigns of 2001 and '02.Clearly, this is a feat that would be remarkable for any high school team, but that goes two or three times over for a school like Cohasset High. The reasons: 1) it is by far the smallest school in the South Shore League, 2) it offers more spring athletic programs than any of the other six SSL schools, with lacrosse, tennis and baseball all drawing away male athletes from track, 3) unlike the other six SSL schools, Cohasset has no fall cross country or winter indoor track program to hone technique and conditioning.



One of the big reasons the Cohasset boys track team went a remarkable 27-2 over the last four years was Pete Maitland.

3) The CHS girls tennis team reaches the Southeastern Mass. semifinals

This furthest ever venture into the postseason followed an 11-1 regular season and a share of the South Shore League title. And the best part of this story is seven of the team's top eight players will be back this spring, including all four girls who played singles last season: senior Lindsay Grossman (31-3 over her high school career), sophomore Elizabeth Stone (who did not lose even a single set as a freshman in singles match play last spring), junior Holly Graham and sophomore Emily Sullivan. Only SSL all-star doubles player Kelly Stone was lost to graduation.

4) CHS wrestlers stun Rockland to win Pilgrim Conference title

The predominantly younger squad had a nice unbeaten season in league play going at 5-0, but virtually no one gave the Skippers a shot in the Feb. 2 regular season finale against defending PC champ Rockland. The Skippers overall record stood at 11-10 heading in, but that was a little deceiving, as veteran coach Torin Sweeney always wrestles one of the toughest non-league schedules in the state, proffering that "it's all about what happens at the end of the season." Indeed, this philosophy proved out, as Cohasset's grapplers stunned their Rockland rivals, 39-32. The Skippers most accomplished wrestler from the previous season, senior captain Dan Littauer returned from a season long elbow injury to win his bout at 152 pounds, a pivotal win in a match that could have turned on one decision. Wins were also recorded by Joey Kehoe, Mike Casey, Cosimo Cambi, Matt Baroud, John Hussey and Ian Hickey. The end-of-the-season successes continued the following week when Cohasset took fourth at the Div. 3 South Sectionals and advanced seven wrestlers to the State championships: Kehoe, Terry Baroudi, Chris McKenna, Matt Casey, Phil Strazzulla and brothers Dan and Jon Littauer.

The Cohasset High wrestling team shocked the wrestling community by capturing the Pilgrim Conference title in 2002, especially since this was achieved with the team's most accomplished wrestler, Dan Littauer (top), injured for virtually the entire season.

5) The joint Norwell-Cohasset High gymnastic team wins its first ever Pilgrim Conference title this winter

Led by Kristen Sheerin and Meredith Bixby, the Coh-Nors went 6-0 in conference competition and 11-1 overall. The team then finished sixth at sectionals, falling just short of advancing to All-States, though Sheerin and Bixby did advance to that meet in individual competition. Sheerin graduated last spring holding every single Cohasset High gymnastics record. Bixby, now a senior, has returned to lead this winter's team that also expects big contributions from Katherine Coyne, Sarah Dennis, Nancy Durkin and Jen Guiney.

6) The CHS girls soccer team qualifies for state tourney for the first time since 1995

The lady booters shook off the memory of a long string of better forgotten seasons with a 10-7-1 regular season finish, and though they fell in the opening round of the postseason to powerhouse Ashland, there seems plenty of reason to hope that this success was more than a one year aberration. Junior Jenn Buckley emerged as one of the South Shore League's truly outstanding players. She had a direct hand in nearly half of her team's goals with 14 tallies and four assists, and proved just as instrumental from her midfield position at the defensive end. Senior captain Julie Lordan and juniors Holly Graham and Gilian Weber were also big contributors, leading a talented crew of younger players who will only get better.

7) The Cohasset Post 118 Legion baseball team's remarkable late season run

Coach Scott Arnold had said all summer that he'd put his best nine up against just about anyone else's top nine. The problem was he was generally without a handful of his best through the first half of the season for one reason or another, and the 3-8-1 record was the result. Arnold's claims proved prophetic, though, as once his top players all became available, the Post 118ers ripped off seven wins in their final eight games to grab the last playoff spot in Zone 6. The team then stunned number one seeded Norwood in the opening round, sweeping the best-of-three series with wins of 4-0 and 2-1 on consecutive nights. Scituate's Jesse Cole (now a full Div. 1 scholarship baseball player at Wofford University in South Carolina) was the key figure in both of these wins. He went the distance on the mound in the 4-0 win and knocked in five of his team's six runs for the two game series. Tom Fitzgerald, of Scituate and B.C. High (now pitching for Babson College) was the winner in game 2. Scituate's Jason Connelly (now playing ball at Western New England), and Cohasset's Paul Demahowski, Chris Carr, Mike Snowdale and brothers Tim and Ted Straughn.

8) Cohasset 12-year olds end their Little League careers with a bang

Right up through the ranks of Little League, starting as nine-year old summer league traveling all-stars, it was a great run for Ian Cundell, Sam DeGiacomo, Chris Rose, Cliff Musto, Pat Doonan, Tommy Chase, Greg Gallagher, Christopher Morgan, Alexander Hunt, Kenny Muir, Kyle Pinkus, David Snowdale, Brian Hill and Mike Grimm, as well as coaches Mark DeGiacomo, Bob Morgan and Bill Grimm. This group enjoyed numerous noteworthy successes during their four summer seasons together. Still, few expected them to end their Little League careers with a win over unbeaten Scituate in the District 8 championship showdown on Aug. 8. But that's exactly what they did, winning 4-2. Hill went the distance on the mound, surrendering just four hits and three walks to the high powered Scituate team that had averaged better than eight runs per game while compiling a 19-4 summer record (including 8-0 in District). Hill helped his own cause with a 2-run homer that proved the difference, and Rose (2-for-2 with a walk) scored two runs.

9) The Cohasset Swim Team wins South Shore Swim League championship

With a team made up entirely of Cohasset youngsters and teenagers, the CST first surprised by going unbeaten in regular season competition and then stunned by winning the league championship meet on Aug. 9, edging the favored MASK team (Marshfield Area Swim Klub), 465-432, and defending champs, the Scituate Knights of Columbus. The CST is a loosely structured "fun first" summer program, whereas MASK is a year round club program well known for recruiting top swimmers from all over the South Shore.

10) CHS boys lacrosse team plays well into postseason for second straight year

In what was supposed to be something of a rebuilding season coming off of a 2001 run to the Div. 2 state championship game, the Skippers put together a solid 13-7 regular season to qualify for the state tourney. They then lambasted Boston Latin in the playoff opener, 21-4, and surprised higher seeded, veteran laden Norwell, 11-8, behind five goals from team leading scorer Curt Kahn, and some great work in net by two-time all star goalie Kyle Weber. Unfortunately, the season ended for the second straight year with a loss to Hingham — this time in the quarterfinals, two rounds earlier than the previous year. Five players from that team – seniors Weber and Eric Libby and juniors Kahn, Matt Davis and Nick Spirito – were named Mariner All-Scholastics, and three others received Honorable Mention nods: senior Paul Previte and juniors Tom Anderson and Robert Hickey.

Maura McKenney (#11) earned Mariner All-Scholastic honors for her part (team best 54 goals, 22 assists) in leading the CHS girls lacrosse team to its best season ever.

Commission over the placement of two benches on the Town Common. Haddad initially asked the CCHDC for permission to place the benches, but after he was told no, exercised his power as Town Manager and installed them anyway. Despite its opposition, the CCHDC was in agreement that the benches were installed in the right place.

A dead crow tested positive for West Nile Virus, after several birds tested positive last year. The disease, which is carried by mosquitoes, can be fatal, especially when the victim is elderly or sick.

The one-way plan for Elm Street that was proposed in conjunction with the village revitalization project is set for a trial run on Oct. 15.

October 17

The Homecoming Dance goes terribly awry, leading to several suspensions for alcohol and discipline-related issues. After a freshman male was taken to a room for questioning his senior friends followed him to confront Principal Mike Jones. A large crowd gathered outside the window. Later, vandals broke the windows of the school, although the incident may not have been related.

The school department receives news that Cohasset students again scored near the top of the state on the MCAS.

Early reviews of the one-way trial on Elm Street are not good, and the idea of scrapping the plan before it runs its one-month course first comes up.

October 24

The one-way trial on Elm Street is trashed after only one week. Resident feedback was unanimously negative towards the experiment, which was scheduled to last for one month.

After some waffling, the Board of Selectmen voted to allow the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's plan for Harbor improvements to stay on the Special Town Meeting warrant. The 3-2 vote set the stage for an STM showdown.

Cohasset middle-high school introduces its new school newspaper the Spinnaker. Staffed by students in grades 9-12 with advisor Christine Berman providing guidance, the paper is set to release its first issue later in the school year.

October 31

The state election is expected to draw 75-percent of the town's voters to the polls, largely thanks to the hotly-contested governor's race between Mitt Romney and Shannon O'Brien.

A fire at 108-110 Elm St. is quickly contained thanks to the response of the Fire Department. Fire Chief Roger Lincoln credited the mutual aid system, where firefighters from other towns provide back-up. No one was injured in the fire, which started in the second story wall due to an electrical problem.

Three teens were injured in a car accident on Norman Todd Road. The driver was arrested at the scene for Operating Under the Influence of Alcohol. Several open cans of beer were found in the car, and there was more alcohol found in the trunk.

November 7

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, both won reelection campaigns by large margins. Hedlund defeated Democrat Ted LeClair of Hingham and Bradley bested Republican challenger Nathaniel Palmer of Cohasset.

Cohasset businessman Francesco Scarpino alleges that the Department of Environmental Protection is running him into the ground. Scarpino says that the contamination at the Cohasset Service Center was not caused by him, but he his bearing the brunt of the financial repercussions.

November 14

Cohasset middle-high school principal Jack DeLorenzo is named the Assistant Principal of the year for the state by the Massachusetts Secondary School Administrators' Association.

School Business manager Ivan Klimko is arrested on domestic violence charges. Klimko is suspended indefinitely by the school.

A 103-unit 40B project is proposed for Beach Street by Great Neck LLC. Ellen Morrissey of 488 Jerusalem Road, is one of the partners in the project.

At Special Town Meeting, the town approves the $1 million purchase of the Barnes property, an $800,000 debt exclusion override to Proposition 2-1/2 to bury the wires in conjunction with the downtown revitalization project, among other things. The town also votes to call for a moratorium on Chapter 40B projects while shooting down the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's proposed plan for the revitalization of the Harbor area.

The school department holds a forum to discuss underage drinking, after the Homecoming Dance problems. More than 100 people attended.

The Historical Society announces its intentions to place a bid for the Paul Pratt Building. The Society plans to sell its current home, the Lothrop House, to fund the purchase.

December 5

After two unsuccessful tries to market the Paul Pratt Building via a bidding process, the third time – with the aid of Grand Gables Realty Group – generates three bids. John Barry has the high, no-contingencies bid, but the Historical Society also made a bid on the building.

The Master Plan begins to come into focus after nearly two years of painstaking information gathering. The Growth and Development Committee finished a first draft of the housing component of the plan and announced that it would present the plan to the Planning Board

The Historical Society's bid to purchase the Paul Pratt Building was saved when a group of six financiers fronted the money for the purchase.

The proposed 103-unit 40B development on Beach Street hits a snag when the Massachusetts Housing Partnership refuses to rule on Great Neck LLC's application, because it could not establish control of the property.

December 19

John Barry, who was legally entitled to the Paul Pratt building, decides to assign his rights to the Historical Society so that the building will remain in the public domain.

Contamination onsite at AvalonBay's proposed location for its 200-unit 40B project could prove to be a snag for the project.

Cohasset joins the fight for 'quad' gates at all grade crossings along the Greenbush line. Currently, the MBTA is proposing dual gates at all crossing with a curbing system in the middle.

December 26

The budget team at the Town Hall headed by Town Manager Mark Haddad focuses on the bottom line as the town attempts to deal with a decrease in state aid.

The School Department announces that in response to the problems with drinking at the school dances, a police detail will be stationed at every dance in the future.

The School Department also contends that a 4 percent budget increase would significantly impact the department's ability to provide a good education for students.

OBITUARIES

Nancy J. BerBerick

Nancy J. (Lawson-Geddes) BerBerick, 64, of Hull formerly of Cohasset, a school bus driver in Hull and Cohasset for many years, died Dec. 18, 2002, at Northeast Specialty Hospital in Braintree.

Mrs. BerBerick also worked as a secretary in the medical center in Hull.

She enjoyed making crafts.

Born in Boston, she grew up in Cohasset and lived in Hull for 26 years.

Mrs. BerBerick was a graduate of Cohasset High School.

She leaves her husband, Raymond BerBerick of Rockland; a daughter, Amy Lee Allen of Hull; a son, Marc Geddes of Cohasset; two sisters, Roberta Figueiredo of Cohasset and Candace A. Eno of Moosup, Conn.; eight grandchildren; and four step-grandchildren.

A Memorial Service will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 4, at First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church, 23 North Main St., Cohasset. Relatives and friends are invited. Interment is private. There are no visiting hours.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to Northeast Specialty Hospital, 2001 Washington St., Braintree, 02184.

Elizabeth I. Silvia

Elizabeth I. "Libby" (Cortez) Silvia, age 82, of Cohasset, a homemaker, died Dec. 25, 2002 at Harbor House Nursing Home in Hingham following a long illness.

Mrs. Silvia was a member of the American Legion Women's Auxiliary and the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 118 for many years.

She was a lifelong resident of Cohasset.

Wife of the late Edmund F. Silvia, she leaves her son, Michael J. Silvia of Marshfield; her two daughters, Marsha O'Quin of Scituate and Joan M. Loughran of Huntington Beach, Calif.; a sister, Mary E. O'Quin of Mississippi; two brothers, Harold and Richard Cortez, both of Scituate; her three grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Dec. 30 at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Diversity program at St. Stephen's

Whenever the Israeli defense force invades the West Bank with tanks and troops, Palestinians call one another on a kind of extended telephone tree saying, "The cousins are coming!" The phrase refers, in a light-hearted manner, to the fact that Jews, Christians and Muslims are sons and daughters of Abraham—hence, cousins.

Paul Hood, 76, of Burlington, Vt. visited the Ramallah Friends School (K-12) in Ramallah, Palestine for four weeks in the summer of 2002 and he is producing a documentary film titled, "The Cousins Are Coming." The epithet conveys, in a deep sense, the wish for a day when visiting cousins will be welcomed.

The Cohasset Diversity committee will host "The Cousins Are Coming" on Friday, Jan. 3 at 7:30 p.m. in the Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church. Hood will speak on this subject and share previews of the film. He is a World War II combat veteran who later renounced war and became a member of the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers). Currently, he works to alleviate poverty and to try and bring about peace and reconciliation among warring people. He is also the volunteer coordinator of Small Potatoes, a program that feeds homeless people. Hood has been a regular attendee at a weekly discussion group at the Ohavi Zedec ("lovers of justice") Synagogue in Burlington for several years. He has had a long interest in the Friends School as a source of peace and reconciliation between Jews and Arabs.

Free will offerings to benefit the Ramallah Friends School will be gratefully accepted in lieu of admission fee. For more information, please call Kathryn Earle in Cohasset at 781-383-0061.

Christmas tree pickup

On Sat. Jan 4 and Sun. Jan 5, parent and teen volunteers will be available to pick up and dispose of your tree. To order service, leave a voice-mail message on The Garage phone line at 781-383-2492, 24 hours a day. Then, just leave your tree by your driveway by 10 a.m. that morning and tape a check to your door. Fee is $10 per tree, $5 for seniors. Please make checks payable to "Project Safeguard."

Project Safeguard is a community initiative to support youth and parents with child and adolescent health-related issues— including bullying, social and academic stress, and substance abuse prevention. All proceeds will benefit upcoming programs for Deer Hill and the Middle/High School.

Dance therapy helps cancer patients

New program at South Shore Hospital

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

The words "breast cancer survivor" and "dance" may not always be uttered in the same breath. But a program at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth has cancer survivors moving for the sheer joy of it.

The "I Hope You'll Dance" therapy program for breast cancer survivors, featuring pain-free dance music choreographed to upbeat and inspiring music, promotes relaxation for mind and body while encouraging a positive self-image.

In the upcoming new year, a new program, "I Hope You'll Dance, Too," for survivors of any type of cancer will begin Jan. 11.

The classes are taught by Susan Osofsky-Ross, a former Boston Ballet instructor, dance lover and breast cancer survivor herself.

South Shore Hospital spokesman Scott Pickard said the new schedule of classes sprung from the success of the original classes, which have been taking place at the hospital since 2000 and have helped hundreds of cancer patients and survivors.

"The classes are very popular. We have people coming back session after session. It's a very uplifting experience," he said.

Susan Osofsky-Ross, far left, is starting a dance therapy program for cancer patients and cancer survivors.

Pickard said the fact that the classes were conceptualized, planned and taught by a breast cancer survivor makes them all the more meaningful for participants.

"This is taught by somebody who knows what she is doing and knows what everyone is going through," he said.

Pickard said the choreography has been checked out by hospital oncologists and all movements are low-impact and safe. Prior dance experience is not needed.

"The doctors here think it's great. There is plenty of evidence that gentle dance can help patients' circulation, cardiovascular health and muscle development," he said.

Pickard stressed that the classes are about having a good time, not about performance.

"The atmosphere is light and fun. I've seen them in feather boas and top hats, having a great time," he said.

Pickard said the new class, "I Hope You'll Dance, Too," is for everyone, men and women, young and old.

"We've noticed that cancer is a disease that is affecting people younger and younger now. We have found that people are less inclined to accept the disease and more inclined to fight it if they stay in shape. If they are more out there and stay active and involved they tend to feel better," said Pickard.

"I Hope You'll Dance" for breast cancer survivors begins Monday, Jan. 6, from 7 to 7:45 p.m. "I Hope You'll Dance, Too" for survivors of any type of cancer begins Sat., Jan. 11 from 10-11:30 a.m. Both classes meet in the Outpatient Satellite Gym of South Shore Hospital in Weymouth. Call 781-340-8153 for more information.

Impressions from the home front

Marshfield artist captures local color in black and white

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Mary Felton's artistic career has taken her from freelance commercial illustration and graphic design to picture framing in her native New Hampshire to her current original work, in her chosen charcoal illustration medium, as a now permanent resident in Marshfield.

The artist has caught some notable public attention in recent years with her strikingly detailed charcoal portraits and landscapes, exhibiting in venues as diverse as Border's Books in Braintree and the Newton Free Library along with a number of other galleries, festivals and libraries. Felton draws her work admittedly from photographs — both her landscapes and particularly her portraits but also from well-rooted life experience on the creative side.

Felton is thus one of the best area artists to display an exhibit called "Local Color In Black & White," which is her one-person show on view at Marshfield's Ventress Library through Feb. 1. The show entertainingly lives up to its catchy, wordplaying title with a recognizable local flavor, if also a strong slant on the artist's Marshfield hometown.

"In choosing the subject matter for this exhibit, I tried to be very specific and stay within the boundaries of the theme," said Felton in her artist's statement for the show. "Usually my solo shows are simply showcases for my newest work with varied images. The challenge for me this time was to stay true to my sense of design and drama to capture the flavor of this place I call 'home'."

A number of pieces in "Local Color" focus on two subjects — sports and horses — that the artist believes "define the spirit of the area." In the former category, Felton applies her keen sense of detail and shadow/light play to her usual diverse array of subjects, from the numbered backs of the Marshfield Rams on the sidelines, and a row of female band members just behind the players in the bleachers, to the basketball ace taking a break on the court in "Key Player," and even a catchy double-entendre describing the view of the baseball player in "Joe's Back In the Outfield." The artist, who works out at a Pembroke gym, also includes a striking, large-scale portrait of her personal trainer, titled "Inspiration."

Felton goes on to observe that "horses are everywhere here (in Marshfield)." "Colleen and Cat," another large-scale work, poses an equine model with the artist's daughter again with the sharp eye for detail. Felton's landscape pieces include such vast, wide-angle views as "Hingham Sunset," from a photo taken at World's End, and "The View From Route 3A," detailing in part how the town of Marshfield got its name. But also contained are displays of versatility with a series of smaller frames rendering landscape scenes in more faded, Impressionistic view.

A pair of North River sites — "Marsh" and "Inlet" — and other self-descriptive pieces such as "White Farmhouse" and "Stonewall Gate" effectively spread out the textures for the smaller picture scope.

"My landscapes may not all be found on the beaten path, but I feel they pay homage to the natural beauty that abounds here on the South Shore," Felton also said in her statement.

Mary Felton's charcoal works "Joe's Back in the Outfield," "Go Rams Go" and "Key Player" show her ties to her hometown of Marshfield.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy CNC Film Critic

'Hours' of great viewing

David Brudnoy picks his top 10 films of 2002

In 2002, I saw just shy of 300 movies — not counting old faves on TV. Is this a job for a sane man? Not a bad year; several excellent films along the way. But still plenty of stinkers. These are the 10 I most look forward to seeing again.

1. "The Hours." Three women (Nicole Kidman, Meryl Streep, Julianne Moore) in three decades, in situations that test their abilities to survive great tensions. Flawlessly acted.

Kathy Bates and Jack Nicholson in "About Schmidt."

2. "About Schmidt." Vintage Jack Nicholson. He plays a man trying to make something out of the emptiness that faces him. With Kathy Bates as rarely seen before.

Catherine Zeta-Jones and Renee Zellwegger in "Chicago."

3. "Chicago." The hit stage show is beautifully remade for the screen, and gives us Richard Gere in his undies, Renee Zellwegger and Catherine Zeta-Jones hoofing and warbling. And all that jazz.

4. "The Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers." This sequel advances the story, improves on the first episode, and shows that a masterful classic book trilogy can become (thus far) two masterful films.

5. "The Road to Perdition." Two criminals (Paul Newman and Tom Hanks) in a tug-of-war for survival, along with the younger character's efforts to save his son from the mob life.

6. "Spider Man." It's as good a live-action version of a popular comic book character as we've seen in ages and demonstrates, again, that Tobey Maguire is one of the best of his generation.

7. "Igby Goes Down." The second of two Kieran Culkin vehicles this year, this is a kind of "Catcher in the Rye" for our era. A bright, impossible kid makes his way, not always wisely or well.

8. "Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets." The second of a likely seven, enough to keep us with the Hogwartz wizards through the decade. Adults, kids, special effects, all boffo.

9. "Far From Heaven." An homage to and undermining of the 1950s, a perfect marriage (Julianne Moore and Dennis Quaid) flawed. Superb work by them and co-star Dennis Haysbert.

10. "The Pianist." Adrien Brody plays a Polish Jew who, alone among his family, survived the Holocaust. A true story told with honesty, guts, terror and hope.

10 worst films of 2002

I'd rather listen to Eminem shrieking for 24 hours straight than ever see these 10 movies again.

1. "Bowling for Columbine." Scummy Michael Moore's latest attempt to twist the realities of American life into his ideological lock box of distortion, opportunism, and smarm.

2. "The Adventures of Pluto Nash." It's so bad, Eddie Murphy is likely to leave it off his filmography, if he can. Deadeningly unfunny in virtually every scene. A vanity project gone awry.

3. "The Master of Disguise." Dana Carvey's talents are again wasted, this time in a comedy not only mirthless but also witless. The old line — this man needs a new agent, pronto! — applies perfectly here.

4. "Ghost Ship." It boasts one of the horror genre's most ghastly opening scene, a mass slaughter on board the eponymous vessel. It goes downhill from there. Can a movie be worse? Doubtful.

5. "Half Past Dead." The acting is about as mature and nuanced as the rap-mewling that bombards the ear. Steven Seagal, Morris Chestnut, and Ja Rule all stink in it.

6. "Jackass the Movie." It shows what the TV series didn't think it could broadcast. The violent stunts are less grotesque than the merely disgusting ones, like gobbling a urine-soaked ice cone.

7. "The Tuxedo. The incomparable Jackie Chan's remarkable acrobatic brilliance is buried in a consummately stupid story. Biggest talent waste of the year.

8. "Ballistic: Ecks vs. Sever." An absurd title, and the story, pointlessly arch, is even worse. Antonio Banderas and Lucy Liu must run from the room when this turkey is brought up.

9. "The Count of Monte Cristo." The gazillionth remake, about as unnecessary as one of "Caddyshack," and about as intelligently conceived. A feather flick to tickle no one's fancy.

10. "Who Is Cletis Tout?" It tried to present a movie lover cum killer-for-hire as an intriguing fellow, but all it showed was that Tim Allen and Christian Slater also need new agents.

On to 2003!

Potato soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Everyone knows that soups make quick and easy dinners yet most of us stick to the run-of-the-mill variations such as vegetable, chicken noodle, or tomato. Few of us have made potato soup, a staple of many cuisines, which is hearty and, if well made, also complex. The problem is achieving just the right texture - creamy rather than slippery - as well as enhancing flavors so that the soup does not turn out bland.

The first issue was the selection of the potatoes. I tried low starch (red), medium starch (all-purpose and Yukon gold), as well as high starch (russet) potatoes. The red potatoes were the worst of the lot - they didn't offer enough body to the soup and their texture was 'slippery.' In addition, their sweet flavor was not enough of a balance to the heavy cream. Next, I tried all-purpose and they were too bland. The texture was decent but the flavor was unremarkable. Yukon golds, if you enjoy their distinctive flavor and yellow color, were good (I find their strong and slightly unusual flavor to be a bit overpowering for this recipe) but the russets offered the most body and their earthiness was a welcome addition to what could be a very dull main course recipe. This recipe needs big potato flavor and the russets deliver.

The onion is no surprise nor is the addition of leek as the pairing of potato and leek is a French classic. I had decided early on to use a balance of chicken stock and heavy cream and finally settled on 3 1/2 cups of stock to 1/2 cup heavy cream. I did not want to overpower the potatoes with too much dairy. I also tested half-and-half and light cream but the soup was too milky. The addition of one tablespoon of herbs to the soup while it simmers and then a healthy dose of raw herbs to garnish just before serving brightened the flavor considerably. I also tried adding a couple of tablespoons lemon juice but it tasted like anchovies in a slice of apple pie – definitely out of place. The only other unusual addition is just a 1/2 teaspoon of sugar which kicks up the flavor.

POTATO SOUP WITH LEEK AND CHIVES

Use russets for this soup since both red potatoes and all-purpose potatoes don't deliver enough flavor. This soup can be puréed for a more elegant version which is best done before the cream is added. Try using tarragon with this soup for a more interesting flavor combination.

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 medium onion cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 1/2 cups
1 large leek, white part only, cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 cup
1 1/2 pounds potatoes, russet or Yukon gold preferred, peeled and cut into 1/2 inch dice (about 3 russets or 4 Yukon gold)
1/2 teaspoon sugar
3 1/2 cups chicken stock, homemade or Swanson0s preferred
1/2 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon fresh thyme, tarragon, or other herb
1/2 teaspoon salt or to taste
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1/4 cup finely chopped chives or parsley, for garnish

Heat the butter and olive oil in a large pot. Add onion and leek and cook, covered, over low heat for about 15 minutes, or until they are very soft but not browned. Add the potatoes, sugar, and stock and bring to a simmer. Cook, until the potatoes are tender about 25 minutes. Add the heavy cream and herbs and cook 5 minutes longer. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Garnish each serving with chives or parsley. Serves 4

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 1, 2003

2003 begins as Mercury turns retrograde, signaling a change of pace and priorities. January is a month to focus on improving the quality of your inner, personal life. It brings a time for looking back and letting go, reassessing your values and setting new goals. Between January 1-22 concentrate on yourself and your needs; take on new studies, begin self-improvement programs, broaden your horizons.

A lunar opposition to Saturn at 9:10 a.m. can make for a rough start to this day. Stay upbeat and go with the flow. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Uranus at 12:23 p.m. and becomes inactive. The final windup to the new moon begins at 6:42 p.m., when the moon enters Capricorn. Plan a quiet evening. Pay attention to your dreams.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 2

It may be difficult to get back to business this morning. The dark side of a new moon remains in effect. Others may be sleepy, distracted, grouchy. In addition, Mercury is stationery, preparing for retrograde travel at 1:19 p.m. That means that there may be delays, obstacles. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Mercury will retrograde in the sign Capricorn until January 22. The new moon culminates at 3:23 p.m., 12-degrees Capricorn.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 3

The light side of a Capricorn new moon sets the stage for a productive day. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging and follow through. Clean out the clutter; get rid of items that are no longer useful. Keep your nose to the grindstone. A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Uranus warns against making important decisions or purchases. Others may be restless, changeable, difficult to please. The Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury at 7:56 p.m. and becomes inactive. An Aquarius moon takes over at 10:56 p.m.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4

The combination of an Aquarius moon and harmonious Mercury-Venus alignment makes this weekend prime for social activities. Impromptu get-togethers are highlighted. Be more adventurous. A lunar alignment to Neptune today urges you to follow your instincts. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. You can find fresh inspiration and express yourself in new ways.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 5

This day tops the charts for relaxing and enjoying life to the max. The moon travels in freedom-oriented Aquarius, active throughout the day. Avoid rigid time schedules; spur of the moment ideas will be the most successful. Step out of your usual routine and follow your bliss.

MONDAY, JANUARY 6

This morning may be slow-starting. At 3:44 a.m. the Aquarius moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive until 5:57 a.m., when it enters laidback Pisces. Don't take on more than you can handle. Creative projects continue to get the green light. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7

Venus enters Sagittarius at 8:08 a.m., remaining there until February 4, and bringing a time for new experiences on an inner, personal level. Travel, mentally or physically, and expand your horizons; open your mind to new possibilities. The moon remains in Pisces today. However, there is one trouble spot in effect between 3:35 p.m.-6:35 p.m., when a 90-degree alignment of the moon and Pluto occurs. Deep feelings or hidden emotions may surface. Choose your words carefully; be more sensitive to the needs and feelings of others. The plus side of this planetary combination can spark new awareness and insights to help you break negative, self-destructive habits.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8

It may be difficult to get motivated and organized this morning. Don't take on more than you can handle. Avoid jobs that may be tedious and require mental or physical exertion. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 6:55 a.m., traveling at the tail end of the zodiac. Influences turn around completely, however, at 4:15 p.m., when the moon enters energetic Aries. In addition, a harmonious alignment of Mercury and Mars helps you to catch up on unfinished work projects and get them out of the way in short time.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 9

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. The moon continues its travel in fiery Aries, active throughout the day. Get back on track with exercise regimens. Tackle projects that require physical exertion. On the other hand, don't act on impulse or jump to conclusions.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 10

Gear up for a hectic day. The Aries moon forms 6 major contacts to planets. In addition, Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, prepares to align with Uranus. Slow your pace. Drive defensively. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:15 a.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate January 18. You can be most productive today, if you have a clear plan of action and follow it. At 10:10 p.m. the moon interacts with Uranus and becomes inactive.

LOSING YOUR HAIR (CELLS)?

Sensorineural hearing loss, one of the two basic types of hearing loss, results from damage to the sensory (or hair) cells located in the cochlea of the inner ear or to the nerves that transmit sounds to the brain. Over time, hair cells grow old and die, inhibiting the conduction of sound wave messages to the brain. More than 80% of people with impaired hearing have this type of hearing loss. Noise is the greatest contributor to hair cell loss, whether it is an extremely loud sound or everyday exposure to sounds above 85 decibels, such as hair dryers and loud music. This loss can be permanent. Once it occurs, a hearing instrument may prove very helpful.

Discovering and acknowledging that there is a hearing problem is the first step towards correcting it. The next step is turning to a board-certified hearing instrument specialist for comprehensive examination, evaluation, and expertise in matching the most appropriate instrument to the impairment. Do you suspect there is a problem with your hearing? Call us at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-878-9723, to arrange for a free, comprehensive hearing test. We're located at 80 North Avenue, Rte. 139, North Medical Building, Abington.

P.S. Presbycusis (or age-related hearing loss) is a type of sensorineural hearing loss.

Car fire may have sparked blaze

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It wasn't the way anyone wished to see 2002 come to an end. New Year's Eve, a time of revelry for many, was anything but a celebration for members of a Cohasset family or the dozens of firefighters that tried to save their home.

Fernway, a small cul de sac off Red Gate Lane, housed a sea of fire engines, ambulances and police cars Dec. 31 as the two-alarm fire raged, lighting up the dark sky. Firefighters from Cohasset, Hull, Hingham and Scituate worked to contain the blaze that had started in the garage of the McAuliffe home #34 Fernway.

Neighbors clustered together in the cold-night air stood by in disbelief as firefighters tried valiantly to save the 1963 garrison colonial. For others, who were returning home from dinner and holiday gatherings, their initial curiosity quickly turned to shock as they realized what was happening.

The cause of the fire that sent three Cohasset firefighters to the hospital is still under investigation by the state Fire Marshal's office. But officials think the fire started in the 2002 Volkswagen Passat parked in the garage and worked its way into the main house.

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the first call came in at 7:21

Bad news from state

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, sounded the alarm before the Board of Selectmen Tuesday night, telling them to prepare for a 10 to 20 percent cut in local aid and revenue from the state lottery.

The town also may be asked to rely on its "stabilization fund," money originally set aside to help pay the debt service on the town's $40 million school projects after the state decided to delay its share of payments last year.

"Our job is to give you the most dire forecast possible," Bradley told the selectmen.

"You're doing a good job," Town Manager Mark Haddad quipped.

The announcement came on the same night that Haddad presented selectmen with the first draft of the town's $29.4 million operating budget for the Letter carrier takes retirement route

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Post Office opened as usual Monday. And to most patrons, the service and general operation seemed much the same.

But there's a tinge of sadness behind the scenes because it's the first full week without Gerard "Gerry" Conte, who retired Friday after 38 years, two months and one day on the job in Cohasset. To say Conte is a familiar figure is an understatement. Born a short distance away on Spring Street, the "townie" as he affectionately calls himself, hardly ever missed a day. At retirement he had accumulated 80 weeks or 3,300 hours of sick time.

"I always enjoyed my job."
— Gerard "Gerry" Conte

"I attribute that to luck and taking care of yourself," the 70-year-old says with a smile.

Supervisor Jim Polito said work without Conte is going to be an adjustment.

"I've been with him everyday for 20 years," Polito said, adding that Conte was his letter carrier when he was a little boy on Lamberts Lane

"He'd throw the football with us," Polito recalled.

Conte says the biggest change over the years in the postal service has been the reduction in hand-written letters. He says the quantity of greeting cards is up as well as catalogs. Another change is mailboxes located at the street rather than on the house.

But even when Conte, who has a ready smile and congenial personality, walked the route — he never had any trouble. Even dogs loved him.

"It's the tone of your voice," he said, adding that he'd even talk to big, threatening dogs.

Conte, who lives on Pleasant Street with his wife Lucille, said he loves gardening [his tomatoes are legendary], so he'll

Roger Hill ready to run again

Seeks Sullivan's selectman seat

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

After narrowly losing to two incumbent selectmen in the last election, Roger Hill is ready to give town politics another try.

Hill visited Town Hall on Monday and collected his nomination papers for the upcoming April 5 election, in which one seat on the Board of Selectmen will be up for grabs.

Hill's potential opponent, incumbent Michael Sullivan, said Tuesday he had not yet decided whether to run for another term. Sullivan is serving his third, three-year term on the board, having sat out one year in 1999. He is currently chairman of the selectmen, a position that rotates annually.

Last April, Hill, who had no previous political experience, lost to incumbent selectmen Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris by about 100 votes.

Having campaigned under the slogan "It's time for a change," Hill said the narrow margin of defeat showed many residents were upset with the way the town was run.

Despite losing, Hill said last year's campaign was a worthwhile experience. "I learned a lot," he said. "I enjoyed the process."

Not being elected hasn't kept Hill from following town issues closely. He said he has attended 70 to 80 percent of selectmen's meetings since the last election. "I just don't get the chance to participate as much as I would like," he said.

This week in COHASSET

New assessor is on board

Town Manager Mark Haddad introduced selectmen to the town's new deputy assessor/appraiser Monday night, Mary Quill of Pembroke. Quill, who replaces Cheryl Pooler, held the similar position in Whitman before accepting the Cohasset post. Pooler accepted a position in East Bridgewater.

"She comes very highly recommended from the Town of Whitman," Haddad said.

Quill's salary is $58,000.

Roof at old Osgood

The contractors working on the new Paul Pratt Library, Town Manager Mark Haddad said, will replace the roof over the back wing of the former Osgood School. Cost estimates are from $26,000-$30,000, he said. The money will come from the DPW maintenance budget that will be reimbursed at the annual Town Meeting. The roof over the rear wing, where the Our World Children's Discovery Museum is being built was not part of the $3.9 million library project. The museum will lease the wing from the town, which as the landlord is responsible for the roof, Haddad said.

Basketball court

The Cohasset Recreation Department wants to keep the basketball court behind the old Osgood School. Town Manager Mark Haddad will set up a meeting between officials of the Our World Children's Discovery Museum, which is leasing the rear wing of the former school, and the Rec to discuss the matter. Haddad said the Basketball Boosters would like the court to remain in operation and are planning to upgrade the court. Recreation Department Director Jack Worley will provide selectmen with a plan for the work sometime this spring, he said.

Burying wires

The Gerd Ordelheide Foundation has offered to pay up to $100,000 over four years toward the cost of burying the wires in the village, if the town votes to approve the Prop. 2-1/2 debt exclusion override for the project at a special election Jan. 25.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the money would decrease the debt service for the $800,000 project and reduce the cost to the average taxpayer to about $56 a year for five years.

Forest Ave. sidewalks

Selectmen gave Town Manager Mark Haddad the go ahead to advertise the Forest Avenue sidewalk project utilizing a "Cape Cod berm" instead of granite curbing to get an idea of the cost. "Other than reprinting the plan specifications, there would not be any significant cost to the town to put it out to bid," he said. He estimated the cost at about $200. The town has $178,000 that was appropriated at last year's Town Meeting for the project.

Hagerty Property docks in compliance

Town Manager Mark Haddad said contrary to claims made by Russ Bonetti and Paul Pattison of the Hagerty Committee at a prior selectmen's meeting, construction of the docks at Mariner's Park are in compliance with the plans filed with the Army Corps of Engineers.

"I have reviewed the matter with our engineer John Modzelewski, and the Army Corps permit was amended in November 2001 based on plans filed by Civil Designs (the town's consulting engineers) in August 2001," he said. Modzelewski and Harbormaster John Winters have been invited to the selectmen's Jan. 14 meeting to further discuss the issue.

Liquor license fees

The town compiled a comparison of the fees Cohasset charges for liquor licenses and found Cohasset's fees are consistent with those of other towns. Fees for liquor licenses bring in about $20,000 annually, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. But at least one selectman was in favor of raising the fees to match the upper end of the scale.

"Just putting our fees up there would raise another $3,800," Selectman Merle Brown said.

For example, Cohasset charges $750 for an all-alcohol club license, while Hingham charges $1,550 and Cohasset charges $1,400 for an all-alcohol package license, while Duxbury, Hull, Norwell and Hanover charge $2,000.

After Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested the town examine all fees across the board, the selectmen held off taking any action to raise the liquor license fees until the issue is revisited at a later meeting.

Memorial gardens

Selectmen are seeking volunteers interested in helping to create memorial gardens in the town cemeteries. They will also ask Cemetery Committee chairman Glenn Pratt to a meeting to discuss the issue. Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

Government study

Selectmen are interested in seeing the Government Study Committee reactivated to examine all aspects of town government. It is also timely because the Town Manager Act went into effect five years ago. Members of the committee would be appointed by the Trioka that consists of the chairman of the Advisory Committee, Selectmen Chairman and Town Moderator. Anyone interested in serving should call the selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

Planning Board legal 40B legal counsel

Selectmen want an estimate of the cost before giving the OK for town counsel to advise the Planning Board on Chapter 40 B issues. The Zoning Board of Appeals has signed off on the proposal, Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen. Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan explained the Planning Board doesn't agree with the state's affordable housing law, through which AvalonBay has proposed a 200-unit apartment complex off Route 3A. But Selectman Ronnie McMorris said she would like to know what the town is getting into financially before saying OK. Her fellow board members agreed and Haddad will provide estimates next week.

Avalon concerns

Selectmen will forward their concerns about the proposed AvalonBay, 200-unit apartment complex, to Town Manager Mark Haddad, who will compile the comments into a comprehensive memo for the Zoning Board of Appeals. Selectman Merle Brown, who attended Monday's ZBA Avalon hearing, pointed out the Water Commission and Board of Health are both weighing in on the project. As an example, Brown said he thinks Avalon should be forced to install sidewalks from the complex's driveway along Route 3A to Cohasset Plaza. He also thinks Avalon should be responsible for its own snow plowing.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Tuesday Jan. 6::

Cohasset Historical Commission, Jan. 13 at 7:30 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Jan. 13 (regular) , and Jan. 27 (Avalon), all at 7:30 p.m. All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Town Census for 2003

The Town Census for 2003 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain benefits for veterans, and reduced-tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms are on a tear-off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2003. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible, although you may have recently renewed your 2002 license.

If you did not receive your census, please contact the Town Clerk's office.

Village design hearing Monday

Selectmen are holding a public hearing starting at 7 p.m. Monday in their office at Town Hall to review plans by the Waterfield Design Group to revitalize the village. The hearing focuses on the entire village project including streetscape improvements and sidewalks, and will not just focus burying the utility wires, Selectman Ronnie McMorris said. The hearing will also be televised live on Cable-TV Channel 10.

She stressed the hearing will review the entire downtown design.

"It's really an important meeting," she said.

Last Saturday's nor'easter at high tide created the worst flooding in the harbor area since the No Name Storm of 1991, Police Chief Robert Jackson said. Shortly after this photo was taken around noontime, police shut down Border Street to traffic.

Local legislators not happy with pay hike

By Michael Kunzelman
CNC STATEHOUSE BUREAU

State legislators are entitled to a 6.5 percent pay raise this year, Governor Mitt Romney announced Monday, but many lawmakers are vowing to turn down the raise or donate the money to charity.

The Legislature's 200 state representatives and senators, who earn a base salary of $50,123, can collect an extra $3,250 this year from the raise.

But some lawmakers, including Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said it isn't appropriate to accept a pay raise while the state in mired in a budget crisis.

"I'm going to all three Boards of Selectmen in my communities and telling them to bite the bullet regarding cuts in local aid," he said. "This raise sends the wrong message.

"The bottom line is I won't be taking it," said Bradley, who was not in office when the legislature set the stage for the ballot vote. In 1998, voters approved a constitutional amendment that calls on the governor to set the rate of legislators' pay raises based on the state's median household income.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said the entire issue is ludicrous.

"We're the only legislative body in the world with a constitutional guarantee for pay raises," he said. Hedlund, who explained the legislature voted affirmatively in two constitutional conventions in two successive legislative sessions to place the issue on the ballot, wished the major media had scrutinized the issue at the time.

"I knew this would happen," said Hedlund, who voted against the amendment both times. "I'd love to see the papers go back and see who voted against it."

Thanks to raise issue — which is now codified in the state constitution — lawmakers received an 8 percent pay hike two years ago. This year, Romney relied on income estimates provided by the U.S. Census Bureau to settle on a rate of 6.5 percent.

"It's a mechanical action," said Romney spokeswoman Shawn Feddeman. "Mitt Romney has no discretion. Now it's up to the Legislature."

Lawmakers can accept the raise, defer it for a year or forfeit it altogether, said Eric Fehrnstrom, Romney's communications director.

"We're the only legislative body in the world with a constitutional guarantee for pay raises."

— State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth

"Forfeiting your pay is a very personal decision," he added. "The governor would not inject himself in that decision-making process."

Romney met Monday with House Speaker Thomas Finneran and Senate President Robert Travaglini to discuss the raises.

Finneran and Travaglini both said they would consider donating their raises to charity, according to the State House News Service.

Barbara Anderson, executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, said Romney relied on hazy income estimates in setting the rate. She argued that pay raises should be frozen until the "real numbers" for the state's median household income are known, sometime this fall.

"I wouldn't give them anything on credit," she said. "I would make sure I have actual numbers."

Anderson said lawmakers drafted the 1998 constitutional amendment in an attempt to "trick voters into thinking it would prevent them from voting on their own pay raises."

"I don't think legislators should be taking the raises under any circumstances," she added, citing the Legislature's recent freezing of the state's income-tax rollback. "If this was a company, they would be fired, not getting a raise."

Bradley said currently there is no mechanism in place for legislators not the take the raises, which are not optional.

"No, I won't be taking it but how to go about that is open for debate," he explained. "There is no set procedure now."

Bradley said it's up to the State Treasurer's Office to set up a procedure similar to the one used for the eight-day furlough in the last legislative session, and that hasn't happened yet. Last year, in a show of solidarity with other state employees, many House members, including Bradley, took a voluntary eight-day salary furlough.

Bradley thinks the money should go back into the general fund.

"That way you don't have to remember to write a check every month (to a charity)," he said.

Hedlund, who said he would not take the raise, wants the issue to be put forward in a vote so it is handled the same way for everyone.

"We could vote to prevent it (raise) from taking effect," he said. Hedlund said his office is drafting language to put forth a mechanism so the raise would not take effect this year.

Heldund said the old way of having legislators vote for their raises was better because at least they could be held accountable.

"It wasn't so long ago that legislators were making $30,000 base pay and the public would accept a reasonable increase," he said. "I'm dead set against having the provision in the constitution."

Last week, Romney and Lieutenant Governor Kerry Healey announced they will defer their salaries in order to pay for pay raises for some senior-level members of their staff.

Water issues are far from crystal clear at Avalon site

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When it comes to AvalonBay, the controversial 200-unit luxury apartment complex proposed off Route 3A, any simplicity has long disappeared.

That was the only point that was clear Monday night when a room full of consultants debated water runoff from the site before an often perplexed Zoning Board of Appeals.

At issue is where the water goes once it leaves the proposed development, any potential contaminants it may carry with it, and the protection of Lily Pond, the town's water supply.

But as the consultants waded into the depths of "hydrological-ese," they left any lay observers in the audience completely baffled back on shore.

Avalon is seeking to build under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, that allows developers to skirt local zoning laws in exchange for providing 20-25 percent of the project as affordable housing. Avalon has applied to the zoning board for a comprehensive permit.

At the meeting it was decided the consultants for AvalonBay, the zoning board and water commission would meet yesterday [after the Mariner went to press] to see if there is any common ground. The zoning board will hear the "final status" on water issues at the Feb. 3 Avalon hearing.

What was determined Monday is that mixing the debate on "groundwater" and "storm water" was the same as "mixing apples and oranges," according to the consultants – although nearly everyone misspoke at one time or another, confusing the terms.

Then there's the thorny matter of existing contamination at the site, which is the former home of Norfolk-Conveyor and whether it must be cleaned up to "Groundwater I" (GWI) standards.

Here's a synopsis of the issues:

- AvalonBay needs a surface water discharge permit for its proposed septic system. The direction of the flow is critical here because the state Department of Environmental Protection won't issue a discharge permit if the groundwater flows toward Lily Pond, which is the town's drinking water supply. The DEP does not issue surface water permits for Class A watersheds. However, Avalon says it has evidence the proposed septic system site is in the Weir River Watershed.
- Avalon and the Water Commission disagree about contamination at the site. Avalon says the site has been cleaned up but the Water Commission says because the site is located in a Watershed Protection district, it must be held to the higher GWI standard.
- Avalon says its comprehensive storm-water management system is a big improvement over what's there today and includes over-sized detention ponds that are proven to have better treatment capacity for storm water. But the zoning board's consultant suggested some sort of physical alteration to prevent any storm water flow toward Lily Pond would be beneficial. But a potential snag there is Avalon does not own the land where the berm or berms would be needed, the Trustees of Reservations do.

The challenge ahead is to whittle away what can be agreed on and highlight what can't, attorney Mark Bobrowski, who is the zoning board's 40B legal consultant.

"You're saying north is OK," he said about the water flow. "Your saying south is not OK.

"Ultimately, it's going to be the DEP and the EPA's call," Bobrowski said, explaining the zoning board could condition the comprehensive permit on Avalon's being able to get a discharge permit.

"We've got to make our case to the DEP and EPA," Avalon's Scott Dale added.

The CHS Hockey Team and the Cohasset Hockey Boosters thank the generous merchants who donated to this raffle and all the Cohasset residents who purchased raffle tickets. We wish you all a healthy, happy and peaceful New Year and hope to see you at a varsity hockey game!

ART EXHIBIT

The South Shore Art Center will be showcasing the artwork of students who have taken classes and workshops at the Center throughout the year. All students participating in SSAC courses and workshops have been invited to submit one piece for this winter exhibition. The show will augment the January faculty show — Who's Who: South Shore Art Center Faculty Artists, opening Jan. 10, 6-8 p.m. and continuing on display through Feb. 23. Both exhibitions will afford viewers a convenient opportunity to view the artwork of students and faculty and at the same time register for a winter art class or workshop. Registrations are still being accepted for courses for adults and children to begin the second and third week in January.

HAVING A BALL!

SWEET REVENGE

There was no time off for the Cohasset High School Hockey Team participated in the 5th Annual Canalmen Classic Tournament on Dec.26 & 27 at Cape Cod. In the opening round it was sweet revenge against Bourne High School. Last year, Bourne handed Cohasset their only defeat of the 2001-2002 season and elimination from playoff contention. Fortunes were reversed with 14 seconds remaining in overtime, Co-Captain John Durkin scored the game winner to cap an exciting and exceptional hockey contest. The following evening Cohasset faced off against Division III State Champion Westwood High School. A solid effort came up short with a hard fought 4-2 defeat. Two excellent performances in goal by freshman Stefan Parnell, earned him "Tournament Most Valuable Player" and was named to the "All Tournament Team" along with outstanding center John Durkin. Fantastic job to all of the hockey players.

THAYER HONORS

Thayer Academy Headmaster Eric Swain is pleased to announce that the following student from Cohasset achieved academic honors at Thayer Academy Middle School in Braintree. Cohasset's Peter Gregory Oswald earned Grade 7 Honors. Great work, Peter.

PARTNERS IN EXCELLENCE

Partners HealthCare presented its seventh annual Partners in Excellence Awards to more than 4,400 employees of the Partners institutions during award ceremonies held throughout December 2002 and January 2003. 2002 Partners in Excellence Award Recipients from Cohasset are: Paula Buick (Partners), Grace Deveney (Massachusetts General Hospital), Patricia Fitzpatrick (Brigham and Women's), Patricia Moran (Mass. General),Travis Quigley (Dana-Farber/Partners Cancer Care), and Thomas Shipp (Brigham and Women's).

Established in 1996, the Partners in Excellence Award recognizes individuals and teams at all levels within Partners who have contributed to Partners' excellence as a healthcare provider. Recipients are nominated by their colleagues and are selected on the basis of their "above and beyond the call of duty" contributions in the categories of: Quality Treatment and Service; Leadership and Innovation, Teamwork, Operational Efficiency and Outstanding Community Contributions. This year's award programs recognized the achievements of employees at Brigham and Women's Hospital and Massachusetts General Hospital, the founding members of Partners, as well as at Dana-Farber/Partners Cancer Care ,Faulkner Hospital, McLean Hospital, Newton-Wellesley Hospital, North Shore Medical Center, Partners Community HealthCare, Inc., Partners Home Care, and Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital Network.

I would like to take this time to let Laura and Bill McAuliffe and their family of Fenway know that so many people our thinking of them in their time of need, my family included. As most of you know, the McAuliffes' home suffered a major fire on New Year's Eve and everything was lost to flames, smoke and water damage. Firefighters from Cohasset and several surrounding towns helped to battle the blaze and the family and dog were all physically ok. I have had so many calls and emails from people in town wanting to express how sad they were to hear of this tragedy but how grateful they were to know that everyone was ok and safe.

That is all for this week. I hope that everyone is ready to greet this New Year with a positive outlook if possible. At times, it seems so hard to do when everything around us is so unstable but I guess as they say, "attitude is everything." Happy New Year, Cohasset!

Students' talent takes center stage

Cabaret planned for next Thursday

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Expect a full house at this year's Cohasset High School Winter Cabaret, scheduled for Thursday, Jan. 16, at Kimball's by the Sea.

The event has sold out to crowds of more than 100 people the past two years.

Cabaret has showcased Cohasset students' musical talents for more than 15 years. About 100 students will participate this year, led by high school choral director Bryan Marks and band director Stephanie Hoskin.

"It's probably on of the best opportunities to see how extensive some of the individual talents are at the school ," said Marks. "There's really not a year that goes by when you don't see someone there and say 'Wow, someday that person is going to have their name up in lights,' so to speak."

"It's probably on of the best opportunities to see how extensive some of the individual talents are at the school."

— Bryan Marks, choral director

This year's Cabaret will include vocal and instrumental performances from individuals and small groups, as well as a mock fashion show. The high school chorus will also perform.

"It provides the kids with a venue that's professional," said Donna O'Donnell, president of the Cohasset Arts Boosters, an organization that helps plan the event. "It's really nice for the kids and they look forward to it."

Proceeds from Cabaret will go toward the Arts Boosters, who help pay travel costs and provide small scholarships, extra materials, books, and software for Cohasset art programs.

Snacks will be served at 7 p.m. and the concert will be from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

Tickets are $8 and can be purchased by sending a check payable to Cohasset Arts Boosters, c/o Debbie Trachtenberg, Treasurer, 324 South Main Street, Cohasset 02025 or by contacting Stephanie Noble at (781) 383 6278 or Donna O'Donnell at (781) 383 6113.

have plenty to keep him busy.

He praised his coworkers and the work itself.

"I always enjoyed my job," he says. "I enjoyed being outside in both good weather and bad. You adjust to it, you dress for it.

"I've worked with good people over the years and met a lot of nice people."

Hired by former postmaster Gerard Keating, Conte started his career in Cohasset at the old post office on Depot Court. When Conte came on board there were five postal routes in town but a sixth was created because the routes were "getting heavy." He covered Route 6 for some 37 years that includes Forest Avenue, Forest Circle, Forest Notch, Tadd Lane, Howe Road, Old Coach Road, Surry Drive, the lower end of Jerusalem Road, Windy Hill and Black Rock Road.

Polito said Conte has a refreshing attitude.

"He was always the same and would do anything to help anyone out," he said. "You could always count on him."

Conte said he gets his work ethic from his father, who came from Italy and taught him to get a job, keep it and appreciate it.

During a special farewell ceremony Friday, Conte thanked his coworkers and congratulated them on a job well done.

"We are a small postal station with a small workforce and a big volume of work," he said. "But it always seemed that the job was accomplished."

He added that he'd miss more than the work.

"I'll miss all the professional information and advice that was given out on every imaginable subject, whether you like it or not!"

Then Conte got back to work sorting the mail for his route.

Bad news from state

fiscal year 2004.

Haddad had planned for a 10 percent cut in local aid when he drafted the budget, but did not take into account the cut in lottery revenue, which would cost the town an additional $40,000 to $80,000, depending on the percentage cut.

Haddad and selectman Merle Brown said the move was violation of the lottery's charter. "They're supposed to put it all back to give back to the towns," Brown said. "Now they're taking it back again."

Haddad said the cuts in local aid and lottery revenue would cost Cohasset $230,000, based on a 10 percent reduction across the board.

Bradley warned that towns with more money saved in stabilization funds could be forced to take larger cuts in aid. "I don't agree with that," he said, "I think that communities that have prepared should be able to use that (money) to offset, but I have heard some minimal discussion about that, so if you do have a rainy day account that has been spoken for, change the name of the account."

"Our job is to give you the most dire forecast possible."

— State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham

Bradley said any money that wasn't designated for a particular expense would be considered "free cash" by the state. He said a 10 percent cut in local aid to all Massachusetts towns would generate $1.5 billion to help make up a state budget deficit of $2 to 3 billion.

Two quarterly local aid payments remain to be paid this fiscal year, one in March and another in June. Already, the state used $800 million of a $1 billion credit line to make those payments in December.

"Were going to limp to the finish line this fiscal year," Hedlund said.

Selectmen chairman Michael Sullivan said the state's schools would be hit the hardest. "Most towns have 60 to 70 percent of their budget for their schools. You're ultimately hurting the kids of the community," he said.

"I understand that," Bradley said, a phrase he repeated several times in response to complaints from selectmen. "This is not something I got into government to do."

Haddad said he is asking the School Committee to accept a limited increase in funding next year, from an average annual increase of 7 percent down to 4 percent.

Selectmen plan to ask residents for a $485,000 Proposition 2-1/2 override for next year's budget. Haddad asked Bradley and Hedlund to return when they knew exactly how much aid would be cut to Cohasset.

If the amount to be cut increases after the override is arranged at Town Meeting in March, "then we're really in big trouble," Haddad said.

Car fire may have sparked Dec. 31 blaze

p.m. and the first police officer on the scene reported the garage was engulfed with the car in it. The initial call came from the homeowners, William and Laura McAuliffe, who were both at home. A neighbor made the second 9-1-1 call after hearing an explosion, Lincoln said.

The senior man in charge of the first Cohasset fire engine at the scene called for a second alarm, Lincoln said. The paramedic unit from South Shore Hospital and a "rehab unit" that provides fluids to help keep firefighters hydrated also responded.

Lincoln said Mr. McAuliffe looked around after noticing smoke on the second floor of his house. He opened the door to the garage and saw fire around the front of the car. He alerted his wife and when they checked the garage again before getting out, the fire had intensified to the point that the heat singed their eyebrows.

McAuliffe, who initially thought the smoke he smelled and saw might be from the fireplace, said he and his wife were out of the house within about 30 seconds of calling 9-1-1. The dog also got out safely and the McAuliffes two children were at a concert.

McAuliffe had nothing but praise for the firefighters and other emergency personnel.

"They're brave and did a great job," he said.

Lincoln explained the fire traveled from the garage into the adjacent family room and a second-floor bedroom. He said firefighters spent a lot of time pulling down ceiling and taking up flooring as fire, heat and smoke worked its way through the different construction components in the house that was built before current building codes that went into effect in 1975. At one point firefighters climbed onto the roof and were completely obliterated by dense black smoke as they used a chain saw to cut through roof to create a vent.

Also while battling the blaze, a second explosion also sent a burst of fire propelled by gasoline from the garage onto the soaked driveway that had become a river, but the travelling flames were quickly doused by firefighters.

Lincoln said in the early stages as additional lines were attached to the same engine to help keep the fire from the main house, the water department was called to start a pump in the plant to maintain the fire power. The Hull ladder was able to be deployed from a neighbor's driveway.

"Mutual aid is our savior," Lincoln said. "With four men on duty, we can't roll the ladder until an off-duty man gets in." The on-duty firefighters take the initial attack engine, second engine and ambulance to the scene. He explained some full-time firefighters have to travel some distance to get to town. Call firefighters also responded, he said.

Lincoln said car fires are not unusual. "In my career, I've seen fires in cars of all ages and conditions," he said.

Last week's house fire was the fourth serious house fire in 2002. The others were at 100 Pond Street (April), 83 Summer St. (June) , and 108-110 Elm St. (October). The last New Year's Eve fire was a relatively minor house fire on Nichols Road in 1998.

Two of the three injured firefighters were suffering from dehydration, the third sustained a shoulder injury.

Lincoln said he was happy no one was seriously injured although he knows how devastating losing a home and belongings can be.

"A lot of things can be replaced but not a human life," he said.

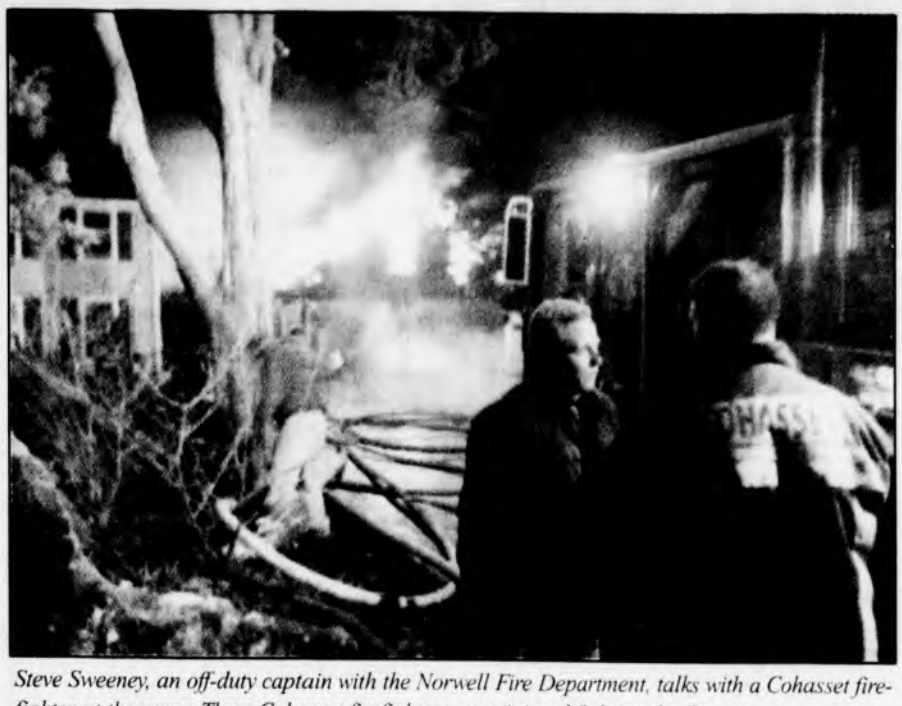
Building Inspector Bob Egan said the main house is still structurally sound but has extensive smoke, heat and water damage. The house is assessed at $680,800, according to the Assessors' Office.

McAuliffe said his neighbors and the town have also been great. As an example, he said when he and his wife went up to pay for new shoes at the Shoe Market in Cohasset Plaza, the store insisted they take them for free.

The McAuliffes plan to rebuild the home they have lived in for 16 years, a process that will take a year. In the meantime, they are looking into different, temporary housing options.

The experience isn't one that his family will soon forget.

"It's kind of like an out-of-body experience," McAuliffe said. "You think you're watching a movie, but it's you."



Steve Sweeney, an off-duty captain with the Norwell Fire Department, talks with a Cohasset firefighter at the scene. Three Cohasset firefighters were injured fighting the fire.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

No to pay raises

Talk about bad timing. Just when you thought it couldn't get any crazier on Beacon Hill, legislators are now poised to receive a 6.5 percent pay hike. That's an average increase of $3,258. Are they kidding?

Newly inaugurated governor Mitt Romney is floating the pay raise incentive which, to be fair, was approved by the voters in 1998. However, the 1998 economic climate is a far cry from what we are facing in 2003. It clearly doesn't make sense for our elected officials on Beacon Hill to be giving themselves raises when the economy is struggling, at best.

The news only serves to turn off the electorate even more. At the Marshfield CVS this week, an elderly woman was furious when discussing the idea with another senior citizen waiting in line. She was irate that officials are willing to add a $1-plus tax on prescriptions to help fund the budget deficits and yet on the other hand are giving themselves more money.

She has a very valid point.

And it seems many of the senate members are hearing it. The Senate president announced yesterday that the majority of state senators have said they will reject the raise as a gesture of good will. Smart thinking on their part.

At this time when the state is searching for every dollar to make ends meet and cutting critical programs and services, now is not the time for legislators to give themselves a pay hike. This has nothing to do with whether they deserve it or not. Many of our South Shore legislators are hard working, committed and dedicated public servants.

It does, however, have everything to do with what's fair.

Check any private sector jobs and you would be hard-pressed to find companies or corporations handing out 6.5 percent pay hikes this year. It just isn't happening. If workers are lucky, they are getting 3 or 4 percent hikes. Many local companies have wage freezes to try and dig out from this economic slump.

Add to that all the jobs lost in the past year or so and more people on unemployment. You have to wonder what our leaders are thinking.

We're glad this isn't a slamdunk issue, though. The fact that senators and house members see a problem with the raise is a positive sign that many of them "get it." They are mindful that it is not appropriate to accept the legally-mandated increase given the state's severe fiscal problems.

The constitutional amendment approved by voters four years ago allowed lawmakers' pay raises or decreases based on changes in the state's median household income. It's up to the governor to calculate the change, and determine how much lawmakers receive.

We urge our local legislators to continue to do the right thing and reject the increase at this time.

Recreation budget

TO THE EDITOR:

Referencing the Cohasset Mariner article on Town Budgets (Dec. 26, 2002 edition), it was reported that the Recreation Commission budget would see a three percent budget increase in Fiscal Year 2004.

In fact, we will se an approximate seven percent decrease in our budget, losing $10,000 of the $15,600 in our Youth Resources allocation. That is, our budget of $131,000 was cut $10,000—all of it from the Youth Resources portion of our budget. The $15,600—now $5,600—is for staff supervision of the Teen Garage. It has been incumbent upon us to pay, via fees from dances and other special activities, all other costs of operating the Teen Garage.

That is, we must raise our own money to pay the bills for heat, light, telephone, toilet paper, cleaning supplies, games, other equipment and supplies via small, per capita fee changes and donations. The Recreation Commission budget supports only our summer Playground program and Youth Tennis program; all other services are provided through our revolving account funds on a 100 percent self-supporting basis.

Further, all our financial self-supporting services provide, along with 100 percent of the costs of operation, an additional 10 percent of gross revenue produced for commitment to the General Fund of the town; hence, recapitulated revenue that goes back to the payers.

Roughly, we have been producing about $65,000 per fiscal year in our recapitulating efforts, or replacing to taxpayers about one-half of our budget costs to taxpayers.

It will be incumbent upon us to recapitulate closer to 100 percent of our costs via General Fund revenue production only, starting in FY '04.

The agreement with the Town Manager was actually 75 percent recapitulation as the Recreation Commission budget contains revenue for various items, such as Porta-Potties for Milliken Field, outside lighting, and other general, town-operating costs.

Tree pickup, a big success

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to thank the 100-plus people in town who signed up to have their Christmas trees picked up by Project Safeguard volunteers this past weekend. Proceeds from this fundraiser will go towards programs for the sixth- and eighth-grade classes this spring, in addition to the annual program for seventh graders held in the fall. Over time, Project Safeguard hopes to expand to cover more programs for a wider age group, including High School.

This fundraiser would not have been possible without the following people, who hauled the trees and made countless trips to the dump: Justin Drybanski; David Game & Josiah Stevenson; Jim Graham & Lee Dickson; Don & James Ivas; Stephen & John Oronte; Wallace & Robby St. John; Jim, Derry & Alex Schwantner; Fred, Justin & Tyler Wood. You guys (and girls) are great! Special thanks also to Jack Worley, director of the Recreation Dept., for setting up our phone line, to Eleanor & Scott Coughlin for the use of their truck, and to the Rev. Cliff Cutler for his support and help and with this fundraiser.

Project SAFEGUARD is a community initiative to support youth and parents with child and adolescent health-related issues—including bullying, social and academic stress, body image and eating disorders, and substance abuse prevention. The consortium includes parents, clergy, and representatives from the PSO, Cohasset Public Schools, and the Social Service League. Your support is greatly appreciated.

Supports four quadrant gates

Michael Sullivan
Chairman, Cohasset Board of Selectmen
Dear Mr. Sullivan:

I am very pleased to learn that the Cohasset Selectmen have joined the other Greenbush Line towns in calling for a hearing by the Army Corps of Engineers regarding the use of four-quadrant gates. The property owners at 39 Beechwood St., have felt bewildered and beleaguered in our meetings with the MBTA and Cashman/Balfour Beatty regarding their plans to relocate our driveway. We are so relieved that we are not alone in believing, that median barriers on Beechwood and other streets would be a terrible mistake.

You may know that our home, which abuts the Greenbush right-of-way, was built in approximately 1895 by George Mealy, the town ice merchant. It has since undergone several incarnations and has been converted into five condominiums. Despite some slight changes it retains a considerable degree of charm in a lovely setting and is a part of Cohasset history. Across Beechwood Street are the two old "railroad houses" which have significant historic connection to Cohasset and the Old Colony Railroad line. Neighborhood residents are horrified by the MBTA's proposal to widen the street and install 9-inch granite curbs in front of these houses, construct a 4-foot wide median barrier extending 60 or more feet in front of our house, and to cut a new driveway across the front of this historic property.

It is the median barrier that would make most of the proposed changes necessary because it would make it impossible to use our existing driveway. In addition to being ugly and out of proportion to the landscaping of this Victorian house, the proposed new driveway presents serious safety problems for the residents of 39 Beechwood St., by making access by fire engines and service trucks very difficult or even impossible under some circumstances.

Widening of Beechwood Street in the bowed out configuration proposed, diverting traffic around the 4-foot wide median barriers, and "channelization" of traffic, rainwater, and snow enforced by high curbs on all sides will surely cause dangerous situations for all the vehicles that use this primary route between South Main Street and Route 3A. A unique factor is the limited visibility of approximately 100 yards from the grade crossing to the curve before Talarico Road. Even now Beechwood Street is heavily traveled by all types of vehicles, and we can only expect more traffic in the future. Please consider the potential for traffic incidents when cars and trucks are backed up waiting for trains to pass.

The problems on Beechwood Street are most likely very similar to those that will occur on Sohier Street and perhaps others if median barriers are installed. What about sidewalks? We've seen Forest Street, and know that Beechwood is waiting in the wings. Where will the sidewalks go if the MBTA's street widening/high curb over development takes place with the installation of median barriers? What about snow removal?

Certainly at the Beechwood grade crossing there is a serious water-management situation to complicate things during rainy periods. Recently we asked for your help in facing the MBTA's pressure and we are asking for it again. Four-quadrant gates instead of median barriers will be the best solution to most of these problems.

The train will come, and all of us will eventually go, but the changes wrought in the next few months will forever affect the appearance of Cohasset and the lives of its residents.

The MBTA proposes to make Cohasset's historic streets resemble the parking lot at Stop & Shop. I urge you to use your influence to ensure the brightest possible future for Cohasset by insisting that the MBTA live up to its agreements stipulated in the Programmatic Agreement and that it recognize its obligations under Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act. In addition, I ask you to look carefully at Cohasset's grade crossings, case-by-case, and do a thorough evaluation of the safety problems as well as the esthetic issues. There is much unfinished business that needs to have a public hearing in order to achieve satisfactory resolution. It appears that the MBTA is ignoring years of study and public opinion in its effort to dodge the installation of four-quadrant gates and to force inappropriate construction and development upon us. Please do not allow this to happen.

Thank you for your consideration of these critically important matters. We are counting on you to delve into these issues and to represent the best interests of Cohasset and its citizens.

HEALTH NOTES

Don't trash needles and mercury at RTF

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Following the holidays, many of us have taken stuff to the RTF. Thanks to Merle Brown and many others, but mostly those in Town who use the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF), we have an enthusiastic and effective recycling program in Cohasset. However, ours is a modern suburban society with a great diversity of threats to our health from a variety of sources. Some of these threats are far from obvious or even apparent. The two, which appear to be least understood, are sharps and mercury. A discussion of mercury has appeared in this column in the past, and the topic will be reviewed below, but disposal of so-called sharps (hypodermic needles and lancets) is a different and increasing problem.

According to the Coalition for Safe Community Needle Disposal (CSND), consisting of the American Medical Association and organizations dedicated to dealing with diabetes and AIDS, and several others, each year 8 million syringe users will administer 2 -3 billion injections outside of traditional healthcare facilities. Whereas most sharps are discarded into the public solid waste system, waste handlers, barrel pickers and others are at risk. Each needle-stick injury results in significant cost for providing post-injury counseling and prevention measures. The number of such injuries outside of the healthcare setting is not known, however problems that can occur from unsafely discarded used sharps include physical injury and potentially fatal blood borne infections such as HIV and hepatitis B and C. Waste haulers, boards of health and public works departments are beginning to observe that many new Municipal Solid Waste (MSW) contracts prohibit the disposal of sharps at the curb. The CSND web page is www.safeneedledispoal.org .

Heretofore, health officials have recommended that the disposal of sharps in MSW be accomplished by placing them in rigid containers such as coffee cans or liquid laundry detergent bottles, labeled "Not for Recycling" and discarded with the rubbish. Unfortunately, injuries and hospital visits from injury by sharps in MSW have increased to the extent that it's necessary to ensure safer disposal methods. As a result of compaction and other transportation related activities, containers may rupture causing the needles to become loosely dispersed throughout the waste stream. Uncontained sharps can pose a health and safety problem to personnel employed in solid waste facilities, where personnel inspecting bags for banned wastes or removing recyclables from the waste stream can be inadvertently punctured. Public health and public safety personnel often find spent sharps that have been illegally discarded to the environment and collect these discards in an effort to protect the public from accidental exposure through puncture.

Accordingly, the State has enabled boards of health, pharmacies and medical facilities to collect spent sharps (hypodermic needles and lancets) generated from non-commercial sources, in-home medical use and discarded sharps collected by public health and public safety personnel during their normal work activities. The goal of this program is to reduce the presence of sharps in solid waste as well as their presence in the environment as a result of illegal disposal.

While some users in Cohasset already bring their sharps to the Board of Health, we encourage everyone to dispose of their sharps safely by bringing them to the Board of Health in Town Hall where they will receive proper disposal.

Mercury

One gram of mercury is sufficient to trigger a fish advisory in a 20-acre body of water

One gram of mercury can render a ton of fish unfit for consumption

Improper disposal of thermometers is a major source of mercury contamination in fish

The heavy metal mercury is liquid at room temperature, and evaporates readily

Proper cleanup of a broken thermometer is difficult and should be done by a professional

Seventeen tons (or about 15 million grams) of mercury from thermometers is released into the environment annually due to breakage and improper disposal

When incinerated, some mercury escapes from the stack, and rain washes it into lakes, streams and groundwater

Mercury is concentrated in the organisms that consume it as it moves up the food chain

The Mass. Dept. of Public Health currently has advisories against fish consumption for 80 bodies of water due to high levels of mercury, including the Aaron River Reservoir.

Mercury is absorbed through inhalation, skin contact and ingestion. It accumulates in the brain, blood, liver and kidneys, and can cause damage to the central nervous system, cardiovascular collapse, kidney failure, tremors and birth defects including mental retardation, delayed development and altered muscle tone.

The adverse health effects of mercury exposure have been known since Roman times, when criminals were sentenced to work in Spanish quicksilver mines. Their life expectancy was three years.

Cohasset has three major efforts concerned with mercury:

• Bring your mercury thermometer to the Board of Health and we'll give you a free digital replacement with no mercury in it.

• Contractors! Waste Haulers! Citizens! Bring your discarded thermostats to the RTF and they will take them to SEMASS for proper disposal. If you leave thermostats and mercury switches in your industrial waste you're poisoning people, fish, and the environment.

• If you've spilled mercury, come to the Board of Health, the Police or Fire Department and get a Mercury Spill Kit and, following the instructions, clean up the mercury and bring it to the RTF for disposal.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Mitt Romney must tackle basic change

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The Cellucci-Swift administration ended with the consensus at the Statehouse that it failed to achieve its overarching goal: to improve the standard of living for the average Massachusetts family. The Romney administration began pursuing its own goals amidst anxiety and hope.

The Cellucci-Swift administration was able to cut taxes. Auto insurance rates declined. Health care programs for the poor were expanded. MCAS scores rose. But for the most part, people and businesses in the state are much less optimistic about the future than they were four years ago.

The unemployment rate is higher, and closer to the national average. The tax cut was offset by a corresponding tax hike last year, and the budget is still out of balance by at least $2 billion; former Gov. Swift was unable to keep her pledge to see it was safely in balance as she departed. Local services will be one of the biggest victims this year.

Mitt Romney wanted the job anyway, and said more than once in his inaugural address that he'll do things he has to do before he can do things he wants to do. That means he has to lay people off, end programs, cut back services. Higher education, state parks, recreational events, community-building efforts such as the Community Development Block Grant – those are all the kinds of things the state does that it's going to have to do less in the first part of the Romney years.

As he put it: "I wish this were not the case, but it is."

At the same time, Romney said, "the economic downturn exposed our problems, it didn't create them." He said the government had become as unresponsive, isolated and slow as some of the other unpopular institutions of the year past: Big Business and the Catholic Church.

So the hallmark of whether Romney succeeds four years from now is whether state government is noticeably changed: more responsive to people, free of scandal, more efficient and rational. He has yet to explain how that can be measured, or how he'll deal with the fundamental problem facing him internally: he still doesn't have the votes in the Legislature to do anything significant, just like Swift.

A few other impressions: Thomas Finneran shared his New Year's resolutions. He laid out his list at the Democratic caucus in which his members overwhelmingly rejected a bid to replace him. For what it's worth: 1. Be a better husband. 2. Be a better father. 3. Be a better speaker. 4. Find more time to read. 5. Learn the piano.

Shannon O'Brien dressed wittily — in black. She cheered openly and graciously at an obviously difficult moment. She had to attend her opponent's swearing in because she's still a constitutional officer — treasurer.

It had been predicted that new Senate President Robert Travaglini might embarrass himself by displaying a lack of verbal ability or presence. He did fine. His mom, who raised him and his four brothers alone, wept from the gallery as she watched him preside over his first session. It was that kind of week.

• Romney began his tenure warning of dire fiscal times ahead, but the news in the short term was actually good. After the dust settled from the tense and unpleasant dispute between the two administrations over whether December revenues were way below projections, they came in $31 above the latest projections of the Swift administration. For now, the Romney team is still projecting spending to exceed revenues by up to $600 million this year.

• The House and Senate enacted dozens of local-interest bills as the session expired. Among noteworthy bills that made it to the governor's desk in the last few minutes were the measure allowing sexually dangerous persons to be kept in secure facilities after their criminal sentences expire. Another bill of some interest that made it through enactment: legislation making Dr. Suess the official children's book author, and the Boston cream donut the official donut of the Commonwealth. Such commemorative bills are filed annually by school classes as civics projects. Legislation extending the expiration date on gift certificates was also signed in to law.

• The Supreme Judicial Court rejected a lawsuit by opponents of gay marriage who were trying to force the House and Senate in Constitutional Convention to advance a proposal making same-sex marriages illegal in Massachusetts. The activists have been using all available legal means to get legislators to move on the proposed amendment.

• The pros and cons of Finneran's tenure were thoroughly debated and well covered — experience and popularity vs. more inclusiveness and broader power sharing. Finneran congenitally is unable to resist joking around a little, and did so again during the semi-tense caucus at which he was endorsed by Democrats to be their leader. Finneran ribbed Majority Leader Sal DiMasi for a speech in which he praised Finneran's ability to steer the state through troubled waters. The metaphor did go on a while, and Finneran said: "Sal, what was that? . . . waves and wind and troubled waters — I was hoping for shore leave." He said the Herald cartoonist who draws him as a bug-eyed madman was devastated by the possibility Byron Rushing's challenge might succeed. But the speaker said he told the cartoonist not to feel too bad — "If events go in another direction, Byron's image is going to provide at least as much opportunity. And he brought down the house, or the House, by recalling the woman who stopped him New Year's Eve to tell him how good-looking he was. "She thought it was George Peterson," the Speaker said. "I think she had actually started First Night at about 2 p.m."

CANDIDATES CORNER

McNabb to run for another term

John McNabb has announced he is running for a third, three-year term to the Water Commission. McNabb has been Chairman of the Commission since 1999. He was first elected in 1997 and was re-elected in 2000.

"We have made major improvements to the water system since I was first elected," said McNabb, "including the new Scituate Hill Water Storage Tank, the rehabilitation of over 7 miles of water mains, major improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, an annual fire hydrant replacement program, and completion of the Surface Water Supply Protection Plan."

"These projects have resulted in measurable improvements in fire protection for Cohasset residents," said McNabb, "and have improved drinking water quality, water pressure, and watershed protection."

"I am running for re-election because I want to continue this aggressive water system improvements program," said McNabb. "We need to reactivate the Ellms Meadow and Sohier Street wellfields to provide an emergency water supply, to retrofit stormwater structures in the watershed to protect water quality, and to continue our water distribution system rehabilitation program to improve drinking water quality."

McNabb also serves as an appointed member of the Recycling Committee (1996-present), and as one of the Town's representatives to the South Shore Recycling Cooperative (1997-present), which he co-founded.

Before being elected to the Water Commission, McNabb served on the Board of Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library (1984-1987) and on the Town Government Structure Committee (1983-1987),

Since 1991, as Vice-President of SAFE, McNabb helped lead the opposition to the proposed expansion of the private Cohasset Heights landfill, which was closed in 1998, and to reduce its impact on the Lily Pond watershed.

McNabb is employed as Director of Research and Policy for the New England office of Clean Water Action, a national environmental non-profit organization.

A minister in the house

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

My son came home the other day to inform me that he was now a full-fledged minister, able to marry people, pass the collection basket and turn his collar around, if he ever wore one.

This disclosure took me by surprise since I thought the ministry required a certain amount of schooling, usually in a seminary, and I knew for a fact that he hadn't been to school since UMass-Boston ordained him a historian and sent him on his way.

I was inclined to take this as just another gag he was trying to put over on the old man when he showed me his credentials — ordination certificate, honorary doctorate of divinity, red parking pass to be used when ministering to members of his flock, everything but a collection plate.

In fact, the only religious rite expressly forbidden by the church is circumcision, which is probable a good idea since I have watched my son slice onions.

His mother would be so proud. She always wanted her son to be a professional man. I'm kinda proud, too. I always wanted him to have a reputable profession to fall back on.

My son's church is non-denominational and may or may not be Christian. It's called the Universal Life Church and I discovered through diligent research (USA Today) that it has ordained 20 million men and women since 1959, more than 676,000 by way of the Internet.

Furthermore, ordination in the Universal Life Church, I am told, is recognized by every state in the union except New York and two counties in Virginia, which takes it out of the realm of comedian Flip Wilson's "Church of What's Happenin' Now."

Ordination in the Universal Life Church is free but so far it has cost my son about $100 for the accoutrements, like the textbook that explains the mission of the church and the how-to book of baptism, marriage ceremony, etc., by The Rev. Amy M. Long.

He also got a CD containing the wedding ceremony — for those ministers who can't read, I suppose.

Other churches charge a fee for ordination, like the International Free Hemp Church of Riviera Beach, Fla., which asks $12. I'm not sure but I would guess that the Free Hemp Church has something else besides salvation on its agenda.

The Mother Church of the Universal Life Church is located at 601 Third St., Modesto, Calif., which was the home of the late Chandra Levy and in the district of her paramour, former Cong. Gary Condit, neither of whom, I am assured, are or were ordained church members. Oh, yes, my son got to pick his own title, too. He had his choice of about 135, including Bishop, Rabbi, Swami, Apostle, even Universal Philosopher of Absolute Reality. He picked Druid.

It's good to have a clergyman around the house, isn't it?

Budget priorities

TO THE EDITOR:

It was distressing to read that the "recreation department is not a necessity" and therefore, is likely to be hit disproportionately hard in the fiscal year 2004 (FV04) budget. As a result, Jack Worley, Recreation Director, has been forced to propose the doubling of fees for most of his programs. Children from modest income families will be the big losers. Jack has always stretched available resources to the absolute limit; so, I do not doubt his conclusions.

Likewise, Elder Affairs has the same type of austere budget that threatens the continuation of core programs. Elder Affairs could suffer a "double whammy" if it has to endure both state and local cost cutting.

Other areas in severe distress include those on fixed incomes who are trying to continue to live in Cohasset and the Police and Fire Departments who continue to function in substandard facilities Let us hope that any new or renovated facilities for the police/fire departments are planned and executed adequately even in these tight fiscal times.

As a former School Committee member, I estimate that we are spending about 20 million dollars too much for K-12 renovations. Yes, the State will pick-up 60 percent of that figure, but we are going to be left with over-sized school buildings that will be very costly to maintain. During recent years, the teachers have benefited from an early retirement program that was supposed to also benefit the School District Budget because entry-level teachers would have lower salary levels than retirees. Instead, the Cohasset School District has consumed these savings while still enjoying 6 plus percent increases to its annual budget (twice the increase of the municipal side of the budget). Mark Haddad is justified in asking the School Committee to "share an austerity budget," but his suggested 4 percent increase is probably too generous when you consider what is happening on the municipal side of the budget. Just a little more "belt tightening" in the almost $10,000,000 School District budget (60 percent of Cohasset's total) would restore some viability to the municipal side.

Cohasset is a beautiful Town that offers modest services, but has the highest taxes on the South Shore. We cannot maintain the current pace of tax increases. The Selectmen need to adequately fund the municipal side of Town Government even if the School District has to do more with less. If we are going to be asked to support a $500,000 override, we need to see greater support for our most vulnerable citizens.

Repeatedly, this Town has demonstrated its philanthropic strength. The Arts and Community Centers, Lightkeepers House and Sailing Club, new homes for the library and Historical Society and the innovative children and teen centers are but a sampling. We need more, not less emphasis on recreation in this Town. Fifteen years ago, the Trustees of the Cohasset Swim Club unsuccessfully sought to establish a year round swimming pool. I believe their proposal failed because their plans were too costly and did not preserve the "outdoor" atmosphere of the existing pool. I failed when I tried to revive their proposal with a much less costly architectural scheme that preserved the "outdoor" atmosphere. At the time I approached the Trustees, I think they were still tired and discouraged. The same problem had existed at the Historical Society, but "'new blood" and some creativity have saved the Paul Pratt Library in the "11th hour." Let's not depend on luck and brinkmanship; a few committed people is all that is needed to get the concept of a year-round swimming pool back on track. It is urgent that we do this before any neighboring community so that we can realize rental fees during off-hours. Such a facility will benefit residents of all ages and; in particular, our youth who need more recreational opportunities rather than boredom that leads to mischief-sometimes tragic mischief.

School Committee members to seek second term

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

In recent years, running for a second term on the School Committee has been a decision many members have shied away from.

If Richard Flynn and Chartis Tebbetts are reelected in April, it will be the first time since the early '90s the committee has had a majority of members with at least one term's experience.

Flynn and Tebbetts both said they will run for reelection. Flynn said he has heard that others plan to join the race, but as of Tuesday morning no potential opponents to the two incumbents had visited Town Hall to collect nomination papers, which were made available on Monday.

Of the five-person School Committee, Mark DeGiacomo and Patricia Martin are currently the only members serving a second term. The last time the committee had two members in with at least one term experience was 1997.

"People would run and then be on (the School Committee) and then choose to not run again for whatever reason," said Flynn. "We're trying to maintain some sense of continuity. It takes a couple of years to get the lay of the land. You want to complete what you've started."

Tebbetts agreed that having DeGiacomo and Martin as second-term members was beneficial to the School Committee. "Continuity enables the committee to have institutional memory," she said. "For several years, the board did not have this benefit."

Nancy Sandell, who served three terms on the School Committee in the late 80s and early 90s, said during her tenure the majority of committee members were in their second or third terms.

"It was really great because it takes a couple of years to get up to speed," said Sandell. "There's a learning curve there and it really should be two term position."

Flynn and Tebbetts have until Feb. 18 to secure 50 signatures from registered voters to make them eligible for the April 5 election.

Flynn said the construction of Deer Hill School and the new middle school were the biggest accomplishments of the School Committee during his three-year term. He also said the committee's relationship with the town improved.

"The lines of communication between the Town and the School Committee have been opened up and utilized to a more positive extent than in the past," said Flynn.

Flynn said keeping class sizes low and MCAS scores high was a top priority. He also said managing a limited budget, given the state's financial crisis, would be a challenge for the committee.

Tebbetts said she recognized the importance of student safety and would support policies "that protect the physical and emotional well-being of all students." She also said maintaining the appearance of new and renovated school facilities was something taxpayers deserved.

Roger Hill ready to run again

Affordable housing and helping the elderly are two areas where Hill said the town could improve.

"I think the town has a terrible affording housing problem," he said. "The selectmen are welcoming Avalon into the town with open arms. It may solve the 40B problem but it doesn't solve the affordable housing problem."

Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, allows developers to seek a "comprehensive permit" in towns where less than 10 percent of housing is affordable. The comprehensive permit allows a developer to skirt local zoning laws in exchange for providing 20-25 percent of the units as affordable housing.

But in the case of rental units like Avalon Bay, a loophole allows towns to count every unit, not just those deemed "affordable," toward the town's affordable housing stock. Hill said reaching the 10 percent affordable housing mark in such a way won't do any justice to the cause.

"Were supposed to have 275 units of affordable housing but because of Avalon Bay we'll only have 90," Hill said. "There are people who have lived here a long time who are getting priced right out of here."

At 42, Hill is a self-employed carpenter, a local real estate owner and a lifelong resident of Cohasset. He also drives the senior shuttle and is a member of Cohasset Action, an anti-40B group.

Hill, who lives on Highland Avenue, said his reputation will play a key role in his campaign.

"I probably know 70 percent of the people in town," he said. "I go to the hardware store, the grocery store, and I see people I know. I'll get a lot of support just because I know people."

Candidates for the Board of Selectmen and other town positions have until Feb. 18 to secure 50 signatures from registered voters to make them eligible for the April 5 election.

Other seats up for election include:

- Board of Assessors. Michael Patrolia, who is undecided on running for re-election;
- Board of Trustees for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Agnes McCann, Patience Towle and Carol Riley, who will all run for re-election;
- Board of Health. Maureen Chapman is undecided;
- Planning Board. Robert H. Sturdy will seek re-election;
- Recreation Commission. Richard Barrow has indicated he will not run;
- Sewer Commission. Gary Vanderweil is not running;
- The Water Commission. John McNabb will seek another term.

VOTE 2003

Register to vote

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before town meeting or election day, may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the Special Town Election (which is on Saturday, Jan. 25) will be Friday, Jan. 3 from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's office.

Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, the Cohasset Post Office and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and must be postmarked on or before Jan. 3.

Run for office

Nomination papers for the Annual Town Election for 2003 will be available on Monday, Jan. 6 at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available for the 2003 Town Election:

- Selectmen — one for three years
- School Committee — two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library — three for three years
- Assessor — one for three years
- Board of Health — one for three years
- Cohasset Housing Authority — one for five years
- Planning Board — one for five years
- Recreation Commission — one for five years
- Sewer Commission — one for three years
- Water Commission — one for three years.

Friday, March 7 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 29, and for the Annual Town Election, Saturday, April 5.

Absentee ballots available for special town election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election on Jan. 25 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon on Friday, Jan. 24, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office; or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand-delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury, and mail or hand-deliver the application to the clerk's office.

Absentee ballots must be mailed by the voter him/herself. Returned ballots should be mailed, or can be hand-delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Jan. 25 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill-in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. Ballots can be inserted into the machine face-up, face-down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

For Voters with Physical Disabilities: If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your own vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with the Town Clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the poling place because of physical disability.

A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Master Plan evolves

Focus turns from 40B to town needs

By Brian J. Scully
STAFF WRITER

Many assume that the housing component of the town's new Master Plan will be a direct response to the state's affordable housing law, Chapter 40B.

Ever since AvalonBay's 200-unit Chapter 40B development was proposed last year, the town has been up in arms over the law, which allows developers to skirt local zoning laws if less than 10 percent of a town's housing stock is deemed affordable by the state.

A citizen's group, Cohasset Action, even formed, and two articles were included in November's special town meeting directed at curbing the law's effect in Cohasset.

But if the reaction of the Planning Board to the Growth and Development Committee's first draft of the housing component is any indication, that may not be true.

The two boards have met several times over the last few weeks and the plain message given by the Planning Board to the Master Plan authors was slow down.

"This is not meant to be critical," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore. "But there is an old adage of computer workers – 'Garbage in, garbage out.' If we don't get some of the underlying problems corrected, all the warm and fuzzies won't mean anything."

The Planning Board appeared in favor of completely disregarding Chapter 40B in the construction of the housing plan.

"I think it is time to thumb our noses at the state," said Planning Board member Bob Sturdy. "They may look at us and call us damn snobs, but we are desirous of having an affordable housing plan that fits into the make-up of a single family town of 7,000 people."

If that means ignoring Chapter 40B, so be it, according to Sturdy.

"We have real problems in regards to affordable housing," said Sturdy. "And Chapter 40B, as written, does not allow us to address them."

Case in point, according to the board, was the effort by Tom Gruber of the Historical Society, to find a way to create two affordable housing apartments in the basement of the Paul Pratt Building. After two days of calling various state agencies, Gruber was unable to find a process that would allow him to do so.

"If you have a big, 200-unit development, the state knows how to do that," said Sturdy. "But if you just want to make two units affordable to work towards your goal, you are left in the dark."

Growth and Development Committee Chairman Rick Swanborg agreed with the Planning Board's assessment.

"We want to put together an affordable housing plan that is more in the spirit of what we need in Cohasset," said Swanborg. "By the time this gets done, the state law may have already changed."

The Planning Board also concerned that the plan m need more gestation time.

The main contention is that while flowery language may sound good, it does not necessarily mean that it accomplishes its mission.

"The plan includes numerous lots into the calculation that are simply not developable," said Moore. "For instance, the golf course is included as buildable land, which is misleading. If it were just the golf course that presented that problem, fine, but there are several other sites included in their estimate of just under 1000 lots that are not buildable because of environmental concerns."

The Board wanted to make clear that they were not disparaging the work of the Growth and Development Committee.

"This is a very good first pass," said Moore. "We just need to look at everything a little bit more closely and do more than an anecdotal study of what the potential growth for this town really is."

Little League shed is a team effort

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Selectmen have unanimously approved the design of a building that will serve as a storage facility and concession stand at the new Little League Complex at the site of the old Gravel Pits.

The design calls for a two-story cape-style building that includes a basement with a garage to house landscaping equipment, a first-floor kitchen with a patio overlooking the new softball field, and two bathrooms, at least one of which will have handicapped access. The building's second floor will be used for storage.

"It was the best plan to meet the needs of the town, the Little League and the abutters," said Harald Gundersen, a neighbor of the complex and a member of the Gravel Pit Reuse Committee, which presented the plan to selectmen Dec. 17.

Gundersen said the committee considered about 10 different designs over the past two months before agreeing upon the current one, which he designed on his computer.

"It's the last big piece of the project to be completed so everybody on the committee wanted to make sure it kept up with the quality of the project to date," he said.

"It was the best plan to meet the needs of the town, the Little League and the abutters."
— Harald Gundersen, Gravel Pit Reuse Committee

Input from neighbors of the Little League Complex played an important role in deciding upon the final design of the building. Of the eight people on the Gravel Pit Reuse Committee, four are abutters to the complex.

"I've never worked on a project with more involvement from the neighbors," said Wayne Sawchuk, a construction advisor on the committee. "You've got four people that are going to be allowing something to be used by the whole town, but it's right in their backyard."

A computer rendering of the new Cape Cod style Little League shed.

Mark DeGiacomo, president of Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball, said he was pleased with the cooperation that went into the design.

"From the Little League's perspective, we needed a building that made sense for our snack bar and storage facility," he said. "Beyond that, we left it up to the neighbors to decide what they wanted to be looking at."

The new building will be located near the entrance of the Little League Complex, on an embankment just outside the right field corner of the new softball field.

Unlike the previous concession stand at Harold Barnes Field, a small shed that will now be used for storage, the building will have a telephone, a septic system, an electric heating system, and a modern kitchen facility with running water. The building's two bathrooms will mean port-a-potties will no longer be needed at the fields.

Controls for the new scoreboards and sprinkler system will also be located in the building. Despite the fact the design was only just agreed upon, the building's foundation was completed this fall.

Sawchuk said the remaining structure of the building is scheduled to be built over a weekend in early March, weather permitting, and he is looking for volunteers to help.

"It's going to be like a barn raising, but it's a field house raising," he said. By using volunteers and mostly donated materials, Sawchuk hopes to trim the cost of construction by two-thirds, from $75,000 to about $25,000.

He said the building should be completed by early April, in time for the start of the Little League baseball and softball seasons.

The Little League will pay for the building, but DeGiacomo said there were no plans to offer naming rights to donors.

A previous plan to allow donors to name the two new fields was turned down by selectmen, but a compromise was reached by allowing the donors to name the diamonds, with the Town reserving the right to name the fields.

DeGiacomo said a plan to allow a donor to name the entire Little League Complex is still being considered, but would need the approval of selectmen.

Film, lecture series on prospect of war

The growing prospect of war in Iraq will be the focus of a film and lecture series to be held Jan. 23, and February 4 and Feb. 18 in Hingham, sponsored by the South Shore Peace Forum.

The opening program, to be held at 7 p.m. Jan. 23, will offer excerpts from a lecture delivered in the summer of 2002 in Boston by Scott Ritter. He served as chief of the U.N. Arms Inspection Team from 1991 to 1998.

This program, to be held in the Whiton Room of the Hingham Public Library, 66 Leavitt St., (off Route 228), will also offer the film "Hidden Wars of Desert Storm." The Rev. Ken Read-Brown, minister of the First Parish (Old Ship) Church, Hingham, will serve as moderator for a concluding discussion period.

For the second program, co-sponsored by The Old Ship Church and to be held at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 4 in the Parish House of The Old Ship Church, 107 Main St., Hingham, the speaker will be The Rev. John Beuhrens, former president of the Unitarian Universalist Association. He was a member of an interfaith delegation's Christmas-time trip to Iraq, and will discuss his experiences there. A question and answer program will follow his talk.

The final program, at 7 p.m., Feb. 18, in the Whiton Room at the Hingham library, will present two films, "Domestic Blowback: The Domestic Impacts of the Bush Administration's War," and "Steps To Peace: The Journey of September Eleventh Families For Peaceful Tomorrows."

The topic of Scott Ritter's Boston lecture was "Does Iraq pose a threat to our national existence through weapons of mass destruction?" Ritter, a Republican who voted for George W. Bush and a 12-year veteran of the U.S. Marines, tells his audience that there is no such evidence.

The film, "The Hidden Wars of Desert Storm," is described by its distributor, the American Friends Service Committee which provided all the films, as "an in-depth analysis of the history of U.S.-Iraq-Iran relations that preceded the Gulf War." It includes archival footage of Iraq in 2000, is narrated by actor John Hurt, and includes interviews with Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, Ramsey Clark, Scott Ritter, and others.

The 15-minute video "Steps to Peace: The Journey of September Eleventh Families for Peaceful Tomorrows," depicts these families' 2001 march from the Pentagon to the World Trade Towers site and their 2002 trip to Afghanistan to console families of bombing victims, as well as their return to Washington, D.C. to lobby for peace.

The Rev. Buehrens, now serving the Needham Unitarian Universalist Church, was part of an interfaith group sponsored by the National Council of Churches. He has said that one purpose of the group's trip to Iraq was to express solidarity with religious and humanitarian leaders there. The delegation did not meet with Iraqi government officials.

The South Shore Peace Forum sponsors a Witness for Peace gathering on Tuesdays from 11:30 a.m. to noon, in front of the Hingham Post Office on North Street .

Boys can't fly with Falcons

Foul shooting woes haunt basketball team in loss to Mashpee

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

While the slumping Cohasset boys basketball team fell to 2-4 earlier this week, veteran coach Ron Ford expects the squad's luck to turn around quite soon.

"Right now, it's about confidence for us," affirmed the 12th year CHS head coach. "I think they're going to go on a run. They are definitely capable of rattling off three or four [wins] in a row."

As of now, Cohasset remains winless in the South Shore League, standing at 0-2 after losses to Norwell and Mashpee on Monday. The team does have a chance for their first SSL win this Friday, when they host an Abington team that finished fifth in the South Sectional tournament two years ago, but has since been hurt badly by graduations.

Still, Ford maintained if his players want to get themselves in the right direction, "We have to play a lot better than we did (against Mashpee)."

The Falcons beat the Skippers, 56-50, as they improved to 1-1 in the league. As is the case with so many close games, fouls and foul shots were what decided this contest.

Cohasset got into foul trouble early, sidelining junior starters Chris Bilodeau and Sean Connolly for much of the second half. Yet, Cohasset's bench, primarily senior big men Scott Faber and Ross Lieb-Lappen, were able to hold things together as Cohasset entered halftime trailing only 29-23.

With Bilodeau, who finished with 11 points, and Connolly back on the floor, the Skippers battled back. When Mashpee's star center Chris Kitchell (game-high 19 points) fouled out with eight minutes remaining, it looked as if Cohasset might complete a comeback victory.

With four minutes remaining, Cohasset took a 48-45 lead, but Connolly and Bilodeau both fouled out, opening the door for an 11-2 Falcons run to close out the game.

While fouling did contribute

And THIS is why rookie Cohasset High hockey coach John Blake lined up that savage slate to begin the season.

It was certainly no coincidence that before opening South Shore League play Saturday night with arch-rival Norwell, Blake's Skippers faced four of the top seven ranked Div. 3 teams in Eastern Mass: Westwood, Scituate, Bourne and Blue Hills.

It was also no coincidence that the Skippers topped Norwell, 4-1.

"Yeah, this was pretty much the type of performance I was hoping to see after the baptism by fire we went through to start the season," said Blake following the Saturday night win.

The Skippers lost three of those four previous games – the lone win coming over Bourne on Dec. 26 in thrilling fashion when top scorer John Durkin broke a 1-1 tie with 14.8 seconds left on the game clock. However, in the estimation of their first year coach, his troops gained much more than they lost during this 1-3 stretch.

"As far as I'm concerned those losses to Westwood, Scituate and Blue Hills were moral victories for us," asserted Blake — a former assistant coach at Thayer Academy and Blue Hills — pointing to the fact those three losses were by a total margin of just five goals. "We've got a lot of young

Lady hoopsters making news

CHS girls improve to .500 with win over Mashpee

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

A scheduled game that was postponed to a later date due to weather and distance, proved to be the perfect time to play catch-up news concerning the Cohasset High girls basketball team.

First of all, the Cohasset game that was scheduled for Friday evening against Mashpee at Mashpee was postponed until Monday evening, when it was decided distance and an upcoming storm was not a good idea.

The 72 hour delay made little difference, however, as the host Lady Skippers, behind senior captain Lindsay Grossman (16 points, six rebounds), whipped out to a 35-11 lead at half, and never looked back, finishing with a 56-31 win.

Then it was learned the Cohasset High girls basketball feeder system made a nice move when Joe Strazdes was named coach of the eighth grade team.

Joe, a Scituate High teacher for many, many years, had been the Scituate High girls varsity hoop coach for many, many years and is still the Scituate High girls soccer coach. Strazdes had coached the Scituate team up until two years ago. Strazdes' coaching experience should be a big plus moving the kids along for varsity coach Ellen Carr.

Then we learned that Cohasset had recently played in a game where the player scored her 1,000th career point.

That game was on Dec. 28, against Nantucket High. Cohasset won, 56-53, despite Nantucket senior Kari Harvey dropping in a game high 20 points, including number 1,000 for her career.

Leading the Cohasset kids to victory were junior center Ashley Faber, with 14 points and seven rebounds, captain Heather Peraino (11 points) and forward Maura O'Brien (10 points). O'Brien's points included six out of eight free throws near the closing minutes of the game.

According to coach Carr, Peraino suffered a sprained ankle in the game. She sat out the Wayland game and was scheduled to face Mashpee.

In the game against Wayland, played on Dec. 30, Wayland

Cohasset wrestlers move from bottom to top of pack at Marshfield Tourney

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Talk about your turnarounds.

Last year, the Cohasset wrestling team finished third from the bottom at the annual Marshfield Holiday Wrestling Tournament among 23 participants. This year, the Skippers finished third from the top.

In fact, the Skippers, with 147.5 points, finished just half a point behind perennial Div. 3 state power Duxbury (148) and also within shouting distance of tourney champion Bridgewater-Raynham (175), always one of the top Div. 1 programs in Massachusetts.

The 147.5 points placed Cohasset well ahead of the next Division 3 chaser, Pilgrim Conference rival Rockland, which finished in fifth place with 117 points.

"Going from third from the bottom to third from the top is pretty amazing when you think about it," said longtime Cohasset wrestling Torin Sweeney. "Last year, I was disappointed. This year we obviously had a lot of wrestlers really step it up. This is a big stepping stone for us."

All the more amazing is the fact that the Skippers were without senior standouts Dave Kupsc (103/112) and Cosimo Cambi (189).

Game of the Week: Bears top Blades, 15-13

This game earned the GOW distinction not so much because of the "greatness of the competition", but more so because it showcased the greatness of the competitive spirit with a team's "never say die" attitude that were in themselves, a reason to be honored.

In the "don't judge a book by it's cover" department, this game had all the makings of a "snoozer" as the BEARS put on a superb 1st half show that left the BLADES gasping for air and down 9 - 1 at the end of the first. The Bears juggernaut was led by Mike Griffin with 4 goals, Jimmy Baggott with 2 scores, and then individual tallies by Jay Dupras, Colton Dwyer, and Andrew Johnson, with the lone Blades score coming on a last second shot from the point by Matt Burgess. While lacrosse is often defined by it's fast paced scoring, an 8 point deficit against a team that is playing well, is a BIG hole to be put in and no one would have blamed the Blades for "losing a little steam" going into the second half. To make matters worse, the Bears opened up the 2nd half the same way they ended it, by scoring two more goals in the first 3 minutes to take increase the lead to11 - 1. But as this Blades team has proven time and time again, they are the new age "comeback kids" and boy, were they about to earn this title in spades.

The Blades came out of hibernation after a fan rousing check by PJ McCaw that stopped one of the Bears cold in his tracks, and which forced a loose ball that Mike Grimm scooped up and then quickly found Justin Connors alone on the crease to finish it off with a nice move around a pursuing Bears goalie. Connors was again in the right place at the right time a few minutes later as he lit it up on a nice inside roll dodge. Connors then returned the favor to teammate Alex Shipp, who got in the clear up top on a nice slide move and put in one of his own. Sam DeGiacomo put a bruising hit on a Bears defenseman who was trying to clear the ball and then scooped and fired in what seemed to be a single fluid motion and all of sudden, the game was on. The Bears managed another score on a perfect pass play from Jake Minevitz to Baggott to stop the bleeding, but the Blades train was already steaming full speed down the tracks as McCaw took possession on the next two face-offs and quickly lit the lights twice in the course of 30 seconds.

Chris Rose then added some additional fuel to the fire with a solo tally followed by another Burgess rifle shot and one more from Shipp - both aided by division assist leader Chris Mills who made sharp passes through traffic to set up the goals. As the fans looked up at the scoreboard, more than a few thought that it had malfunctioned, but the score now stood at Bears 12 - Blades 10 and there was still more to come.

By this time, the Bears were getting over their shock and decided that they had seen enough and took back a 4 goal advantage on a penalty goal from Johnson and another by Baggott to once again put them in a "comfortable" position with only a few minutes left on the clock. But this was the last game of the season and a chance for the playoffs were on the line; so the Blades did what they always do, cranked it up one more notch and let it fly.

The result was a fitting 3 goal effort, 2 more by McCaw and one by Grimm, that while not enough to pull out a victory (as the Bears Minevitz iced it in the last few seconds), it was certainly enough to prompt some spirited exchanges and high fives and certainly gave them something to "draw on" the next time they get down "a few".

to the Skippers' loss, Cohasset really lost the game at the free throw line. The team shot a combined 6-of-19 on foul shots, while the hosts sank 19-of-36.

"We've been working very hard on our free throws," said a frustrated Ron Ford. "We probably have spent more time on that than anything else."

As Ford noted, the team confidence will have to change before their record does. The team's tri-captains — Ian Kidder, Ben Lynner and Jared Krupczak — have been doing a tremendous job of keeping team morale up.

Kidder poured in a season-high 15 points on Monday, while Lynner added 12 in the losing effort. Krupczak's contributions went beyond scoring, as he led the team with his sharp passing skills and tremendous defense. Those two aspects of his game were the reasons for his being Cohasset's sole representative on the Holiday Classic Tournament All-Star team.

"The team captains have been working very hard, and they're doing a good job," lauded their coach. "Our team chemistry is very good. I like this team; they're a great bunch of guys."

Now two games under .500, and with a group of important league games coming up, this would be a very opportune time for a team turnaround.

Gymnasts can't vault past Hanover

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The quest by the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team for a two-peat championship in Pilgrim Conference 2 took a big hit on Monday with a loss to arch-rival Hanover, 130-124.3

The Host Lady Indians were led by the top two placements the All-Around competition by Kerrianne Hart (33.3)and Kerri Gerrish (32.9).

Hart also took first in the uneven bars (8.5), while Gerrish was tops on the balance beam (8.4).

Cohasset senior Meredith Bixby took first in the floor exercise (8.4) and tied for first in the vault (8.4). She finished third in the all-around, a couple of falls on beam (7.4) proving the killer.

Cohasset sophomore Nancy Durkin, the Coh-Nor's other all-around performer, took third on vault (8.3) and also scored an 8.3 on floor.

The killer for the squad proved to be three of four performers falling on beam. Only senior Amy Maree (7.4) stuck her performance on that apparatus.

"At least we know what we'll be working on in practice," quipped Coh-Nor coach Kara Connerty. "We have four girls capable of scoring over '8' on beam, but our highest score here was 7.4. We've got to eliminate the falls."

The team is also feeling the loss of talented Norwell junior Jen Guiney.

The Coh-Nor's are now 1-1 in Pilgrim Conference competition (2-2 overall) on the season.

The locals host Duxbury tonight (South Shore Community Center, 7:30) and travel to Carver on Tuesday for another big PC2 showdown.

players on this team we're asking to take on much bigger roles this year, and those guys played right with some good, proven veteran players. We were right in all three of those games.

"After everything we've been through, our kids feel really confident starting league play now. We feel like we can make some hay in our league, and make a run at the state tourney and maybe a league title."

Indeed, these young Skippers served notice Saturday night on Pilgrim Arena ice that they might just be the team to beat in the SSL, as they started off defense of their league title with a surprisingly one-sided showing against Norwell — a team most felt going into the season would compete for that league crown with Abington/East Bridgewater. The win improved Cohasset to 2-4 and dropped the Clippers to 4-2.

Durkin and sophomore Ted Straughn each netted goals during a first period that was dominated by the Skippers, and each later added second goals to put the game out of reach.

Straughn, just two games back from a shoulder injury, got things off to a great start, netting his first goal of the season just 1:04 in, following up on the rebound of a Mike Rasmussen shot with a slap shot from 15-feet out past downed and powerless Norwell goalkeeper Tom Sullivan.

Durkin, a senior captain and returning SSL all-star, made it 2-0 four minutes before the first break on the power play, swiping a pass near Norwell's blue line to walk-in alone on Sullivan, beating him high on the forehand after getting him to bite on a nifty backhand deke.

Durkin netted his South Shore League best ninth goal, again with the man advantage, with six minutes remaining in the second period on a tally even more scintillating than his first. Taking the puck right off his own faceoff win just outside Norwell's zone, Durkin accelerated quickly to split a pair of Norwell defenders at the blue line and then tucked the puck around a third defender, collecting it again five feet from the crease and then quickly firing a wrister that caromed by Sullivan off the stickside post.

"John sure is a fun player to watch," noted Blake, following the game. "He pulls out a couple of new moves like that every game."

Norwell finally got on the board on the power play with 2:36 remaining in the second. Undeterred after getting knocked off an attempted break-in, Clippers senior captain Mike McAteer chased the puck into the left corner and delivered a perfect centering pass to linemate Terry Smallcomb for the quick one-timer that beat Cohasset freshman goalie Stephan Parnell five-hole.

Norwell played much better over the second half of the game, and played particularly well in the final period, but could not slip another by the quick-reflexed and fast improving Parnell. The only other score in the game came when Straughn fired home an empty netter with 9.6 seconds remaining.

"We put ourselves in a position to lose," noted Norwell coach Paul Hurley sourly. "This is what happens when you don't come out to play right from the start. We had no fire to come out, and it seemed to take us 25 minutes or so to wake up after that. Cohasset did what good teams are supposed to do. They took advantage of our lackadaisical play."

Hockey Notes

Skippers getting healthy

The return the lineup of Straughn, a big and skilled winger coming off a 23-point (10 goals, 13 assists) freshman campaign, instantly makes the Skippers a much better team.

Coach Blake is hoping he'll be able to say the same thing about sophomore defenseman Joe Durkin, who saw his first action Saturday night, coming back from a football injury suffered in November.

The coach has been forced to use natural forwards Matt Davis and Tom Anderson, both senior captains, extensively on the blue line in the early going, but the return of the younger Durkin should mean more minutes up front for both of these skilled veterans.

Junior Mike Devine has again been providing all-star caliber play on defense, and slick-skating sophomore Tim Pilczak has quickly emerged as a solid all-around blueliner.

Durkin has been forced to carry much of the load up front, but the return of Straughn (second best team total of five points), plus more minutes from Davis and Anderson, should help the forward core that also includes junior Mike Rasmussen and the promising freshman quartet of Matt O'Connell, Mark Bouchard, Brandon Smith and Ben Libby.

O'Connell scored his first varsity goal in the 4-2 loss to Westwood, the number one ranked Div. 3 team in Eastern Mass., over Christmas vacation. Durkin had the other.

Big showdown on tap

The Skippers were hoping to cement their status as the team to beat in the South Shore League when they hosted Abington/East Bridgewater last night at Pilgrim.

Cohasset is certainly hoping to pad its league record over the next week, with alleged SSL weak sisters Hull (Saturday, Pilgrim, 5 p.m.) and Mashpee (Wednesday, Pilgrim, 5:20 p.m.) next on the slate.

defeated Cohasset, 55-44, leaving Cohasset with a 2-3 record.

Grossman, a South Shore League all-star player last year, came through with her best individual scoring effort this season, hitting for 15 points. Also playing well in defeat was La'Raine Langford, with 12 points and six steals.

It was also learned from coach Carr that three members of the all freshman junior varsity team have been looking very good — good enough, in fact, to play with the varsity during the Christmas Tournament played at South Shore Voke in Hanover.

The three youngsters include Chelsea Grossman, sister of Lindsay, Mia Lieb-Lappen and Aly Belz.

Holbrook won the tournament and Cohasset was the consolation game winner.

Cohasset sophomore Joey Kehoe (right) took fifth place at the Marshfield Wrestling Tourney and third at the Whitman-Hanson Tourney.

"If those two guys had been there I think we might have been able to make a run at B-R, to be honest," asserted Sweeney.

The sub-par Marshfield showing a year ago provided an excuse for veteran coach Torin Sweeney to light into the charges a bit, and he used it as a motivational tool the rest of the way. The results speak for themselves: the Skippers went on to go a perfect 6-0 in Pilgrim Conference competition, capping it with what was considered nothing less than a shocking win over heavily favored Rockland in the season finale.

Fortunately, Sweeney has been around long enough to know how to turn this year's Marshfield showing into a powerful motivational tool as well.

"There are no excuses now," said Sweeney. "We showed what a good team we have when we wrestle to our abilities. This is a measurement of where we want to be at Sectionals and States. I think we can be top five in the state (among Div. 3 teams)."

The Skippers netted points in nine out of the 14 weight divisions, led by class titles from seniors Terry Baroudi and Chris McKenna, at 135 and 145 pounds, respectively.

Sophomore Jonathan Littauer (103 pounds) and junior Mike Casey (171) also advanced to the finals, but lost there, forcing them to settle for second place points.

Senior Phil Strazzulla was knocked out in the semifinals, but won his consolation match against Scituate's Stephen Barry (who'd beaten him twice previously) to take third at 130 pounds.

Wrestling Notes

The Skippers followed this performance up with a solid fifth place showing among 10 teams at this past weekend's annual Whitman-Hanson Tourney. Perennial Div. 1 powerhouse Weymouth took the top spot with 203 points, followed by Duxbury (177), BC High (175) and Rockland (157), who just barely fended off Cohasset (153).

Littauer (103) and McKenna (145) paced the Skippers effort with first place finishes. McKenna dominated Duxbury's Doug Imbrogna for the second weekend in a row, 11-2, clearly establishing himself, according to Sweeney, as "The class of the 145 weight class in this area."

Strazzulla lost to Rockland's Dave Laramee in the 130 finals, but came up with a big effort to beat Weymouth standout Eli Cheeks, 7-3, in the semifinals.

Matt Baroudi likewise advanced to the finals, where he nearly delivered a shocker to Weymouth's Jay Anzalone (third ranked in the state) before falling, 11-7.

Terry Baroudi was stunned at 135 in the semifinals, getting caught in a pin in the third period to suffer his first loss of the season after 14 wins. He bounced back, though, with a masterfully wrestled 1-0 win over Duxbury star Scott Klebanoff (who he lost three of four to last year) to clinch third place.

Joe Kehoe likewise took third in a very competitive 125-pound division, topping Cohasset and B.C. High's Jim French in the consolation finals.

Senior Mike Casey took fourth in a very tough 171 division, and sophomore brother Mike won two matches at 152, but just missed out on placing.

Next on tap

The Skippers have another big test this Saturday as they travel to Duxbury for a quad-meet with the second (Winchester) and third (the host Dragons) ranked Div. 3 teams in Massachusetts. Holliston, another quality Div. 3 opponent, will also be on hand.

"That will tell us a lot about where we stand," said Sweeney. "We want to be considered up there among the elite with those teams, and this is our chance to show that we belong."

Swimmers dive right in to Nauset

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The annual swim meet against Nauset is almost always the toughest match of the season. But staying competitive with the Norsemen is even tougher than usual when the team gets off a three-hour bus ride and directly into the water for their first meet of the year.

"It is so tough driving all the way to Nauset (which is near the tip of Cape Cod)," observed third year coach Jamie Kearney. "But to the team's credit, they did a phenomenal job against one of the best, if not the best, team we'll see all year. We really put a scare into them."

Indeed after last year's 60-point shellacking of Sci-Coh, hardly anyone could fault the Nauset squad for simply looking past their visitors. Yet the girls held strong for a 55-37 loss, and a 56-25 loss came for the boys team.

Scituate captain Kathryn Noonan was a top performer for the girls team, winning the 100 backstroke in a time of 1:08.71, nearly a second faster than the time she registered at last year's All-Conference meet, where she took sixth place overall.

For the boys, freshman James Smith, a terrific new addition to the squad, was barely outtouched in both of his individual events, taking second place in both the 200 Individual Medley and the 100 butterfly. With a time of 1:10 in the butterfly, Smith is very close to becoming the first Cohasset or Scituate male to qualify for Sectional Individuals in three years.

Maren Monaco took home two freestyle first places, although his win in the 500 was by default through an opponent's disqualification and the race never actually ran. Still, his time of 28.14 in the 50 free earned top points for the team.

The Sci-Coh boys team made quite an impressive showing considering the strength of their opponents (Nauset boys team has been the only team to defeat the juggernaut Duxbury boys in a dual meet in two years) and that they were missing three of their eight members. Scituate junior Darin Webster, usually reserved for diving, acted a true team player, filling in for three events.

"One of the things I love about this team is how flexible everyone is," mentioned Kearney. "Nobody thinks about themselves first. It's always 'what would be the best for the team?'"

On the girls side, Scituate junior Coral Yang had an expectedly impressive day, notching twin second places in the 200 IM and the 100 butterfly. Her time in the fly is remarkably close to Sectional qualifying, even though that is not considered her top event.

Junior Becky Keyes (500 freestyle), freshman Jenny Driscoll (100 breaststroke) and senior Dave Ingber (100 breaststroke) rounded out the team scorers, each taking a second place finish in their respective events.

Although Nauset was a brick wall of a first opponent, the variety of squad members who performed well showed great promise for future Old Colony League match-ups.

Noted Kearney: "I really don't think anyone is discouraged by our loss today. We know that our team is trim, tough and talented, and we are totally ready for the opponents up ahead."

Burning off the turkey

Better late than never.

The second annual Turkey Trot in Cohasset, held on Nov. 28, was a hit despite frigid temperatures and high winds.

Over $3,800 was raised, with proceeds from the day after Thanksgiving 5K run, which began and ended in Cohasset Common, going to "Recording For the Blind and Dyslexic (RFBD).

Donations are still welcomed by the RFBD c/o Dan McCarron, 22 Mohawk Way, Cohasset, MA 02025.

The race winners were Tim Plante (18:01) and Lynne Schwandt (23:00) on the women's side. The "Ultimate Turkey Recipient" was Michael Hotchkiss.

OBITUARIES

Margaret C. McNamara

A private funeral service was held at St. Clement of Rome Church in Arizona for Margaret (Campbell) McNamara, 90, of Cohasset, who died Nov. 19, 2002, at Queen Anne Nursing Home, Hingham.

Born in Brooklyn, N.Y., Margaret "Terry" McNamara lived in Rockville Centre, Long Island, N.Y., for 37 years. She moved to Sun City, Ariz., in 1978 and to Sunrise Assisted Living in Cohasset in 1999 to be closer to her family here.

Mrs. McNamara graduated from Brooklyn Teachers' College, taught briefly in the New York schools, and worked in Manhattan as a personal secretary to Doris Duke. Following her marriage, she worked as a homemaker and volunteered with the Association for the Help of Retarded Children. In Arizona, she was active in the Women's Guild and the Catholic Daughters at St. Clement's Church.

Wife of the late Ronan Michael McNamara, she was the mother of the late Robert A. McNamara of California. Mrs. McNamara leaves four sons, R. Michael McNamara of Connecticut, John F. McNamara of Cohasset, Brian W. McNamara of Washington, and Joseph P. McNamara of California, 15 grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and many nieces and nephews.

Burial was private. Arrangements were made by the Deware Funeral Home, Quincy.

Memorial contributions may be sent to the Association for the Help of Retarded Children, 189 Wheatley Road, Brookville, NY 11545.

Irene M. Sheerin-Kelleher

Irene M. "Polly" (Woodaman) Sheerin-Kelleher, 79, of Cohasset, formerly of Scituate, a retired registered nurse, died Dec. 8, 2002, at Life Care Center of the South Shore in Scituate after a brief illness.

Born in Quincy and raised and educated in Mattapoisett, she lived 50 years in Scituate before moving to Cohasset several years ago.

She was a 1944 graduate of Mount Auburn Hospital School of Nursing in Cambridge.

Mrs. Sheerin Kelleher worked at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth. She also worked at Queen Ann Nursing Home in Hingham as a nursing supervisor and manager, and did private nursing in Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset.

She loved music of all kinds and laughing with her children, grandchildren and all of their friends.

Mrs. Sheerin-Kelleher leaves four sons, Paul M. Sheerin Jr. and James R. Sheerin of Scituate, Douglas E. Sheerin of Cohasset and Mark J. Sheerin of Milton; a daughter, Kathleen A. Johnson of Scituate; a stepson, Thomas J. Kelleher of Hingham; a stepdaughter, Cynthia Kelleher of Hingham; two brothers, Lewis E. Woodaman and Richard Woodaman of Meredith, N.H., and Center Harbor, N.H.; 11 grandchildren and two stepgrandchildren; and many nieces and nephews. She was the wife of the late Thomas J. Kelleher Jr. and the former wife of Paul M. Sheerin Sr.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Dec. 21, at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was private.

Arrangements are being handled by McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset.

Donations may be made to the Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Baystate Drive, Braintree 02185-9060.

Violet Fane red hot with cyber critics

South Shore band winning broad fan base via Internet

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The debut CD by Hull singer/guitarist Steve Baker and his band Violet Fane is winning a gallery of hearts, not just by local word-of-mouth but also on the distant reaches of the Internet.

The CD, a six-song EP set titled Gallery of Hearts, was released independently by Baker and his crew this past fall. In just a few months since then, the disc has scored strong sales in the immediate area at the band's various shows at venues such as Hull's Sea Note and Emilio's and Norwell's Mount Blue. It's also moved additional copies online at CDBaby.com, a popular national disc-market outlet for independent, unsigned musicians and bands.

Most recently, Violet Fane has won new, previously unreachable fans via a unique feature on another much-touted Web site, MP3.com. Baker's original tune, "21st Century P.O. Blues," arguably the best of the six tracks on Gallery of Hearts, last week landed in the top three of MP3's Compo10 list at www.compo-10.com, a bi-weekly promo feature from the audio file-sharing site for new music by unsigned bands, rating their Top Ten submitted tracks.

"It's basically a Top Ten list for new songs by unsigned bands," said Baker over lunch at one of his favorite local hangouts, Jamie's Pub in Scituate. "The other artists on the list rate the songs on an internal basis, not including their own submissions, of course.

Hull singer/guitarist Steve Baker

And as you might guess, we were just thrilled that our song finished so high on the list last week."

"Meanwhile, anyone else who goes on the site can listen to the songs on Compo10, and the responses for us have been really good. We've gotten fan e-mail through this and CDBaby.com from people in California and even from one guy in Finland. They're saying 'Great stuff' and 'I love that sort of rootsy blues sound,'" Baker added.

That "rootsy" blues sound characterizes much of the music on Gallery of Hearts, which delivers a unique blend of blues, folk and rock styles. The band Violet Fane on disc and in recent live gigs has consisted of a revolving cast of local musicians with whom Baker has worked in the past, including guitarist Domenic Laudani, bassist Phen Mark and even Baker's own father, S.J. Baker, also a guitarist and bass player. But mainly, the band is a duo project of Baker and his vocalist fiancee, Nadine Henry, a folksy, husky-voiced singer.

It's Henry who serves up the arch, cunning vocal on "21st Century P.O. Blues," a lilting ballad describing the singer's experience in her longtime career at the Hingham Post Office. On a similar note is "Workboot Valley," another Baker original which offers his perspective on working hard and seemingly standing still, and drives the point home with some hot, pumped-up guitar licks. All of the disc's six, Baker-penned tunes draw from emotions based on past experience, which the singer/songwriter believes listeners can connect with.

Baker met Henry when the latter was singing karaoke one evening at Cohasset's KoKo Island. The guitarist soon asked her to join the 1930s-style swing-jazz band he was playing with his father in at the time. Finally, the couple has taken a folk-blues turn with Violet Fane, which is named after a character from an obscure poem published in a verse collection called "The Token" in 1838.

"Eventually, we (Baker and Henry) would like to get a permanent band together. Meanwhile, I have a large repertoire of unrecorded songs. We're hoping for a new, 12-song CD to release sometime this year."

"This time in history has profoundly affected so many people, I felt I had to really be truthful," says Adrien Brody.

Virtuoso performance

Actor Adrien Brody hits all the right notes in 'Pianist'

By Ed Symkus
SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Adrien Brody is an actor on the rise. And 2002 may go down as his break-out year.

His new film, "The Pianist," landed on more than a few "Best Of" lists. He was recently named Best Actor by the Boston Society of Film Critics, and the film was named Best Picture. Brody also picked up a Golden Globes nomination.

In the based-on-fact film, directed by Roman Polanski, Brody plays Wladyslaw Szpilman, the Polish musician who spent years dodging the Nazis in the Warsaw Ghetto. It's the kind of physically and emotionally challenging role for which actors long to audition. But Brody never read a scene. Instead, he got the part by chatting with Polanski, by letting him see his co-starring part in "Harrison's Flowers," and by playing some piano for him.

The real challenges and rewards began when he started making the movie.

"It wasn't much fun to make this film, but it was one of the most enriching experiences of my life," says Brody, 29, bright-eyed as he sips green tea. "It's made me grow tremendously. Not only from the difficulties, but also from a greater understanding of the sadness that exists in this world — something that I was able to tap into. It made me more grateful for what I have than any other single experience in my life."

The story starts with the close-knit, well-to-do Szpilman family in their last days of freedom in Warsaw and follows them through the dark times when they were torn apart after the Nazi invasion. The film chronicles his character's solitary life; Brody spends lots of time alone onscreen.

"I was alone in the experience of making the film, too," he says, and now his eyes lose some of their brightness. "Partially to get the right mood on camera, but partially because there was no time for social life or visitors. It was six days a week, and I was on every day for six months. In the beginning, I completely isolated myself on purpose to identify with it. I felt I needed to understand a level of isolation, and cultivate a sadness that I didn't necessarily experience."

But there was a lot more to the part than just being alone. The story demanded a range of emotions from Brody. The film was shot in reverse order, starting with the days in which he was living an animalistic existence. So he had to first grow a beard and drop in weight from 160 to 130 pounds.

"I had a couple boiled eggs in the morning, a small piece of chicken and a small piece of fish — very small pieces — and a couple steamed vegetables," he says of his diet. "That was it. No carbohydrates whatsoever. And not even an excessive amount of water. It was as extreme as I could've gotten.

"Before I left to do it, I gave up my apartment, I sold my car, I disconnected," he adds. "I went off to Europe, locked myself in, and learned to play piano, and worked on the dialect. I only went out for rehearsal. I couldn't go out to dinner with anyone because I wasn't eating. I couldn't go out for a drink with anyone because I wasn't drinking. So I couldn't do anything, I had no energy for anything else."

Brody is not Jewish. His father is Jewish, his mother is Catholic, and he says he was "brought up open-minded." But his choice to plunge — Method-like — into the role was something he knew he had to do.

"I had a real responsibility to connect here," he says. "Part of it was because I was playing a real person. But it's also a very personal film for Roman because of his experiences in Krakow [where he escaped from a ghetto as a young boy and survived in the countryside]. And this time in history has profoundly affected so many people, I felt I had to really be truthful."

The role created challenges, but it also had its rewards. Since the character he was portraying was an expert at playing Chopin, he was able, through the help of four piano coaches, to sharpen his musical skills.

"I make music, but I'm not a classical pianist, nor do I read music well," says Brody of his own keyboard playing before making the film. "I knew Chopin's work, but not how to play it. I spent a lot of effort learning to learn the portions of the pieces I needed to learn, and that's what I can play.

"It's definitely made me a better musician," he adds. "It's given a level of emotion and melancholiness to my own music which I kind of had a sense of, but it encouraged it."

Working with Polanski was another reward.

"Roman is very clear and very up front about his vision, and almost has the movie playing in his head in the process," he says. "As an actor, you know there's a consistency there that you know is going to remain on film, as opposed to experimenting and trying a scene this way and that way. With Roman, everything has a purpose, and there's this focus of bringing things in an ultra, succinct, subtle, honest way. No sentimentality, everything underplayed, everything very real, everything connected."

Brody gets to go in another direction in the upcoming big screen remake of the Dennis Potter TV film "The Singing Detective," set for a premiere at Sundance in January.

"Robert Downey Jr. is the lead and I play this hood that's one of the characters in his detective novels that comes in and torments him in real life," says Brody excitedly. "It was an opportunity to express myself in a different way and be extremely broad, with no boundaries as an actor. I wanted to play and be silly. It's singing and dancing and beating up Robert Downey, so it's fun."

"The Pianist" opens at area theaters on Jan. 3.

Viewers find safe haven on TV

Unlike real life, Willows, Sipowicz and Jordan always get the bad guys

By Josh B. Wardrop
STAFF WRITER

Glance at the television landscape in 2002, and one message is clear: Crime pays.

While cop shows have been a staple of the medium since the days of Jack Webb as Joe Friday on "Dragnet," the concentration of police dramas on TV today may be greater than ever.

The number one drama on TV, for the second year running, is CBS' "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation," which explores the professional lives of forensic examiners in Las Vegas. The show, now in its third year, is such a sensation that it spawned a spin-off, "CSI: Miami," which has also consistently ranked in the Top 30 in its first season.

NBC trumps CBS's serial success with its "Law & Order" dramas. Currently, the network airs three of the shows: "Law & Order," "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit," and "Law & Order: Criminal Intent." All have been successful with viewers and critics, with the original usually finishing in the Nielsen Top 10.

It's no mystery why there are so many cops shows — the old TV adage is, "If it works, copy it." The question is, why does it work so well now?

In the wake of the events of 9/11, Americans have woken up to a reality that the police shows of their youth could not have prepared them for: Sometimes, our protectors can't stop the bad guys.

In a world rife with this kind of fear and uncertainty, it's easy to understand the popularity of a television genre in which crimes are solved and justice is served. We want to feel as though we can triumph over the bad guys, and police shows, with few exceptions, deliver that small dose of satisfaction. Don't expect to see a spate of "NYPD Blue" or "CSI" episodes that end like this: We don't know who did it.

"Particularly in today's world, people want justice. And, in reality, when someone wrongs you, 'justice' is just a euphemism for punishment. That's why police shows generally feature that sense of closure in the end."

Dr. John Budz, practicing clinical psychologist and a psychology professor at Framingham State College

"Particularly in today's world, people want justice," says Dr. John Budz, a practicing clinical psychologist and a psychology professor at Framingham State College. "And, in reality, when someone wrongs you, 'justice' is just a euphemism for punishment. That's why police shows generally feature that sense of closure in the end.

"Police shows that deal in moral ambiguity aren't generally as popular," says Budz. "When a bad guy gets away, it reflects the vulnerability of the police. And we all want to believe that cops are invulnerable. We look to them for our protection and our safety, and we look up to their authority — so, on TV, we want to see that they'll succeed, and that justice will be done."

That subconscious yearning to be protected could even be a factor in the surprise hit status of the new Friday night CBS drama, "Hack" — a program that stars David Morse as a disgraced former cop who now drives a cab, and each week provides rescue and assistance to one of his fares.

"What 'Hack' is doing is giving us the idea of the guardian angel," says Budz, "but because he's an ex-cop, it lends him a sort of legitimacy. The character seems to have more power because he's been trained in what to do. People are very uncertain, fearful and cautious today, so the idea of a protector is very appealing."

On today's television landscape, the manner in which police protect and serve us has noticeably evolved. The days of the macho supercops hitting the streets and busting heads for information are rapidly disappearing. With the exception of Andy Sipowicz and his "NYPD Blue" crew, and the ever-volatile Vic Mackey on "The Shield," today's breed of TV cop doesn't spend a lot of time squeezing information out of pimps, junkies and lowlife informants. Instead, the TV cop of 2002 is all about modern technology, offering viewers a never-before-seen range of police work.

From the forensic work of "CSI," to the individual departments depicted in "Without A Trace" and "Robbery Homicide Division," to the dark, sexually-charged cases of "Law and Order:

A better bread pudding

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Bread pudding is easy to come by but a really good one is hard to find. Many are nothing more than basic egg custards with some bread thrown in. Others are gourmet-style confections that require a lot of extra work. I wanted something very specific. I was looking for a firm, not mushy texture and I wanted the bread and the custard mixture integrated so I didn't end up with bread floating on a pool of custard. I also wanted a caramel flavor to jazz it up a bit and I was looking for a homestyle dessert, not something you'd find at Le Cirque.

The basic bread pudding recipe, one found in many cookbooks, calls for 4 eggs, 4 to 5 cups of a milk/cream mixture, 3/4 cup of sugar, 5 to 8 cups of bread cubes, and a moderate oven temperature. So I started my testing with a similar list of ingredients, throwing in some vanilla, bourbon, salt, and nutmeg for good measure.

My first task was to figure out how to get the caramel sauce into the recipe. Many attempts failed including adding it to the bottom of the baking dish, and drizzling over the top of the custard. Finally, I decided to add cream to the hot caramel and then add this mixture to the rest of the custard ingredients. This approach worked like a charm. My recipe called for 3/4 cup of sugar and I ended up caramelizing all of the sugar for maximum caramel flavor. (In a story last summer in this column, I discovered that by adding water and a bit of lemon juice to the sugar it doesn't crystallize and produces smooth caramel every time.)

As for the eggs, it turned out that 4 whole eggs wasn't the answer. I played with different combinations of whole eggs and yolks and finally ended up with 3 whole eggs and 3 yolks. This added a richer, more luxurious texture to the pudding without becoming too eggy. I had been using a total of 5 cups of liquid (2 1/2 cups each of milk and cream) but wanted to eliminate the layer of custard at the bottom of the baking dish. By reducing the milk and cream to 2 1/4 cups each and by soaking all of the bread for a full hour in the custard mixture (instead of soaking only 6 cups of the bread for the 20 minutes I was used to), I had completely eliminated the excess custard. This was become a real bread pudding, not just a dish of custard with floating islands of bread.

Speaking of bread, firm white bakery style bread works well in this recipe as does challah or brioche. Forget about the usual supermarket bread – it just doesn't have enough texture. Eight cups was the right amount and I preferred the bread in 3/4-inch cubes. (Half-inch was too small and one-inch was too big).

To bake the pudding, I used a 9 by 13-inch pan, brushed melted butter over the top of the bread cubes, sprinkled sugar on them, and then put the pan in a 325 degree oven. (Higher temperatures tend to break (overcook) the custard, making it watery.) A water bath was not necessary but I did find that this pudding (! like all others) should be taken out of the oven when the center is still slightly wobbly.

As for a topping or sauce, vanilla ice cream was perfect and you can simply purchase it at the store. I did, however, like the addition of a caramel sauce with the vanilla ice cream but I would save that for Le Cirque. Homemade desserts don't need three different components.

CARAMEL BREAD PUDDING

This is a real bread pudding rather than a custard with some bread in it. Remember to take this dessert out of the oven when it is puffy and the center is still a bit wobbly. Otherwise, it will overcook which produces an unpleasant texture and a watery (broken) custard.

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8

It may be difficult to get motivated and organized this morning. Don't take on more than you can handle. Avoid jobs that may be tedious and require mental or physical exertion. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 6:55 a.m., traveling at the tail end of the zodiac. Influences turn around completely, however, at 4:15 p.m., when the moon enters energetic Aries. In addition, a harmonious alignment of Mercury and Mars helps you to catch up on unfinished work projects and get them out of the way in short time.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 9

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. The moon continues its travel in fiery Aries, active throughout the day. Get back on track with exercise regimens. Tackle projects that require physical exertion. On the other hand, don't act on impulse or jump to conclusions.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 10

Gear up for a hectic day. The Aries moon forms 6 major contacts to planets. In addition, Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, prepares to align with Uranus. Slow your pace. Drive defensively. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:15 a.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate January 18. You can be most productive today, if you have a clear plan of action and follow it. At 10:10 p.m. the moon interacts with Uranus and becomes inactive.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11

Conflicting planetary influences can make for a wild and woolly weekend. A 90-degree alignment of Mars and Uranus takes center stage, cautioning against risk-taking, impulsiveness. Give others plenty of freedom and space. A stable Taurus moon at 4:48 a.m. is a major plus, prompting you to listen to the voice of reason. Take it slow and easy. Concentrate on relaxing and maintaining perspective.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 12

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. A 90-degree alignment of the Taurus moon and Jupiter midday warns against going to extremes. Don't make extravagant plans, purchases or promises. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Direct your passions into constructive channels.

Volatile planetary influences continue to affect this morning. Wake up in a good mood. Sidestep power struggles; maintain a peaceful demeanor. The Taurus moon forms stressful contacts to Uranus at 10:54 a.m. and Mars at 12:44 p.m., when it becomes inactive. You can be productive this afternoon, if you focus on projects that need to be finished, redone or repaired. A loquacious Gemini moon arrives at 5:08 p.m., making for a social evening.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 14

A Gemini moon sets a quick pace today and tomorrow. This can be a fun day, if you are vacationing or don't have a lot to do. If you are working, it can be difficult. Because Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, travels in retrograde motion, there are likely to be unanticipated delays, reversals, breakdowns. Projects may take unexpected turns. Avoid rigid schedules; allow extra time. Today the moon forms easy contacts to Venus, Neptune and Jupiter. Social activities get the green light.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 15

Yesterday's planetary patterns continue today. In addition, the Gemini moon forms stressful contacts to Pluto in the morning and Saturn this afternoon. Stay calm no matter what is happening around you. If you are working, handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands intense concentration. Don't launch bold new ventures or large-scale enterprises. The moon aligns with Uranus at 9:16 p.m. and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 16

Stormy astrological weather continues. At 2:56 a.m. the moon enters emotional Cancer, beginning the final windup to this month's full moon. Energy runs high today and tomorrow. Stay alert and don't take risks. On the other hand, this is a time when you can cut through obstacles on emotional levels and free yourself from old fears, negative habits or limited thinking. An applying alignment of Venus and Neptune highlights creative endeavors. This period is prime for tackling renovation, repair, restoration projects in your home or office.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 17

Read yesterday's advice. The Cancer full moon has just about reached its peak today. People may be moody, argumentative. Be more tolerant and sensitive to the needs of others. Open the doors to a higher level of communication. Reduce stress levels by meditating or exercising. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Tackle a big work project; you can be most productive.

Prolong the beauty of holiday plants

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Tiny paw prints dot the new fallen snow as the sun breaks through the steely gray cloud cover following our most recent winter storm. While the tracks of our resident felines are unmistakable, many others suggest a wide variety of little creatures have been roaming about the garden since dawn. A trail of bunny paw imprints leads from the multiflora rose thicket along the perimeter of the compost heap to the edge of the water garden. Smaller indentations hint of bounding squirrels making their way to and from our various bird-feeding stations. Beneath these feeders, bird footprints are scattered in every direction among the discarded black husks of sunflower seeds. The tiniest marks appear to be those of field mice and their brethren who have apparently been foraging through the night.

The cold, wintry weather has posed many challenges for our trees, plants and animals as Mother Nature continues to deliver storm after storm during this memorable winter season. Despite the harsh winter weather outside, the colorful blossoms of poinsettias and holiday plants accompanied by the sweet perfume of a new cluster of paper white narcissus bulbs help to bring a touch of springtime indoors. Add a mountain of colorful catalogs filled with enticing photographs, a hot cup of tea and a warm, crackling fire on the hearth and even the most passionate gardener can find contentment during the frigid winter months. In merely a few short weeks, it will be time to begin sowing seeds, to prune trees and shrubs and to renew the spirit in the great outdoors once again.

In addition to the multicolored poinsettias that serve to brighten nearly every room during the holidays, a variety of equally delightful, colorful plants are popular during this festive season. I find the members of the shooting star or cyclamen family particularly irresistible. These plants prefer cooler environments tolerating temperatures as low as the mid-40s. The unusual and charming, butterfly-like blossoms range in color from white through rose, pink, and salmon, scarlet and lavender, and may be single, double or even fringed. Flowers will continue to open for up to four months on a happy plant. Their heart-shaped leaves are equally attractive, having silver and white mottling on a dark green background. Cyclamen plants must be kept cool, moist and shaded from the sun. Mist the tops frequently and feed every other week. When the flowers fade, the plant, which grows from a rounded tuber, should be allowed to rest by gradually withholding water until the foliage dies back. Store in a cool garage or move the plants outdoors in summer to a shady locale keeping the soil nearly dry and the pot resting on its side. Repot in September placing the top of the tuber level with the surface of the soil.

The brightly colored flowers of Kalanchoe offer another source of long-lasting blooms with minimal care.

Perhaps one of the easiest of all holiday plants is the so-called "Christmas Cactus" (Schlumbergera bridgesii) which is a leafless plant that has flat jointed stems with scalloped-margined branches. In recent years, its cousin, sometimes referred to as the "crab cactus" or "Thanksgiving cactus" (Zygocactus truncatus) has become more popular and more widely available. It features similar leafless segments but these tend to be wider, more rigid and upright with long, pointed tooth-like projections. Many colors of the elongated, layered flowers are now available including shades of pink, rose, golden yellow, fuchsia, red, salmon, and white tinted with lavender highlights. Flowers tend to appear earlier, hence its common name.

Like orchids, these plants are epiphytes meaning that in their native jungle environments they grow in trees suspended off the ground with their roots exposed to the air. Consequently, they prefer a quick-draining, soil-less mixture and like to be potbound. Keep their growing medium evenly moist during flowering, but allow it to dry out slightly between waterings during the remainder of the year; grow in very bright light or sun during the fall and winter months. They enjoy spending the summer outdoors in a bright but shady garden. In autumn, they should be brought back into a cool frost-free porch, garage, or cool room with evening temperatures in the 50 degree range and require short day length in order to set flower buds. These are excellent plants for those who want a low maintenance, reliable houseplant that will bloom year after year and thrive with little attention.

The brightly colored flowers of Kalanchoe offer another source of long-lasting blooms with minimal care. Kalanchoe are succulents belonging to the Stonecrop family and closely resemble their cousins, the Sedums. Similar to Sedum Autumn Joy, they exhibit fleshy leaves topped by brilliant clusters of red, orange or saffron-tinted blossoms. Warm, sunny environments suit them perfectly and they are ideal candidates for a southern exposure. Like the majority of their relatives, they require coarse, quick-draining soil mixes that should be allowed to dry out just slightly between waterings. Short day length is necessary to initiate blooms. An occasional application of a dilute liquid soluble fertilizer will promote the rich, lustrous deep green foliage that provides an attractive accent even when the plants are not in bloom.

With colder weather upon us, our heating systems are working overtime producing dry, indoor environments. Plants that may have required infrequent watering during the warmer, humid months may need to be closely monitored and watered more often to ensure healthy plants during this time of limited light and low humidity.

Special Victims Unit," to the multiple perspectives of shows like "Boomtown" and "Third Watch," television seems to be embracing a newer, fuller portrayal of police work. Could this be television's way of feeding the public's hunger for understanding and reassurance in post-9/11 America?

"We live in an information age," says Budz. "In the age of the Internet, we're a more informed society who can look up anything at the touch of a button. The public wants information, and we're fascinated by how people access information — and when you think about it, that's what police spend most of their time doing.

"Police access the motive behind a crime, the method the crime was committed and the truth behind a crime," Budz says. "We're becoming more and more interested in how they do that."

That interest seems unlikely to go away anytime soon. Most of the new police dramas on TV have been success stories — "Boomtown" is lauded as one of TV's finest new offerings. Except for "Robbery Homicide Division," none are in imminent danger of cancellation. And there's even talk about a fourth "Law & Order" series. So, actors may want to start memorizing the Miranda rights — they're bound to come in handy at auditions.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

MISSING THE PITCH?

Age-related hearing loss (presbycusis) commonly begins with deficits in discrimination, the ability to perceive how loud or low a sound is (its pitch). As the aging ear loses its ability to register higher frequency sounds, the ability to understand everyday conversation suffers. Sounds formed by some consonants and blended consonants, such as "s," "f," and "sh," tend to be uttered at a higher pitch than vowel sounds and consonants such as "m," "n," and "j." This lack of high-frequency hearing makes words such as "math," "mass," and "map" all sound alike. As a consequence, those who suffer from age-related hearing loss will often accuse others of mumbling. In truth, the problem rests with the listener's hearing.

We believe an unaddressed hearing loss is more noticeable than a hearing instrument, and we urge you to get help if your hearing isn't what it once was. Our methods at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER include the most sophisticated technology available today in the hearing industry. This, coupled with the astonishing hearing aids now manufactured, our experience and professionalism, and our personal attention to your needs, ensures your complete satisfaction. See us soon at 80 North Avenue, Rte. 139, North Medical Building, Abington, or call us at 781-878-9723.

P.S. Presbycusis can largely be traced to a loss of hair cells due to prolonged exposure to noise.

Stop-work order for Jerusalem Lane mansion

Owner to pursue legal avenues

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Move over selectmen. You've been bumped off the hot seat.

If you look up the word "controversy" in the theoretical Cohasset thesaurus today, it would say "Zoning Board of Appeals."

To be fair, the zoning board had nothing to do with the genesis of another prime example of "mansionization" along the town's so-called Gold Coast that boasts some of the most spectacular ocean vistas anywhere in the North Atlantic.

Zoning board members didn't drive a single nail, or for that matter give any zoning relief to the house that dwarfs its neighbors at 3 Jerusalem Lane, a small street off Jerusalem Road. But Monday, the zoning board issued a ruling that could have reverberations even the oft-litigious Cohasset isn't accustomed to.

"We hope to have a full hearing on the merits in context of an application for a special permit. In the interim, the building inspector must take remedies."
— Woody Chittick, Zoning Board of Appeals

No one ever said the zoning board was faint of heart. But even as member Ben Lacy read over the decision he drafted that essentially halts construction of a million dollar-plus mansion and puts its owner in legal limbo, the tension in the small downstairs meeting room at Town Hall was palpable.

Homeowner Phil Ayer's attorney Roberta Sawyer of Duxbury could hardly contain herself. She repeatedly tried to offer comment only to be told that the hearing on the issue was closed, save for submission of some more documentation that she had already provided.

The zoning board ruled that Building Inspector Bob Egan erred in issuing a building permit to Ayer, even though the house apparently meets all town setback and height requirements.

From the get go, Ayer's future neighbors were upset about the scope of the home that replaces a small 1,800 square-foot ranch with a 4,400 square-foot mansion, and wondered why there was no official notification or public hearing process during which they could air their concerns.

The neighbors were so upset they even started a "Cohasset Defense Fund" to help pay for the legal costs to fight this type of construction. They also filed an appeal of the Building Inspector's decision to issue the

Bad fiscal news gets even worse

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The numbers for local aid reductions are finally coming into focus, and layoffs of town personnel may soon be a reality in Cohasset.

The town originally braced for a 10 percent reduction in local aid and revenue from the lottery for fiscal year 2004, but the news has only worsened. A 10 percent cut of those same funds for the remaining half of fiscal year 2003 is likely to receive approval in the state legislature soon, a loss for the town of almost $103,000 for this year. And the 15 percent cut for next fiscal year will be taken from those new, reduced 2003 figures, not from the original amounts appropriated.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the re-figuring means the town is facing a total loss of about $433,000 in local aid and lottery revenue for fiscal year 2004.

"We're going to have to go back and revisit everything," Haddad said. "This is just unconscionable that the Legislature is doing this to the cities and towns."

Haddad said the only solution may be to layoff town personnel. He said Town Hall, DPW and the library were the depart-

Sewer hookup down the drain

Developer plans to go to court

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Jerusalem Road Estates, the proposed 25-home subdivision across from Straits Pond, tripped a hurdle last month in its attempts to bypass the North Cohasset Sewer District and connect directly to the public sewer of Hull.

Although the developer had already negotiated with Hull to purchase sewer capacity at a hefty price, the Cohasset Sewer Commission denied the application, saying the move could create "a defacto bidding war between Cohasset and property owners such as the applicant." The decision was released to Board of Selectmen this week.

"Basically, the Sewer Commission felt it was not in the town's best interest to have private industries compete against the town for the town of Hull's sewer capacity," Sewer Commissioner Gary Vanderweil said. "We felt that would set a precedent."

Vanderweil explained that while the town had previously purchased sewer capacity from Brownies, juniors, cadets, seniors.

For the past 12 years, Rachel McElroy has risen through the ranks of the Girl Scouts while many of her fellow troop members have left the scouts behind to pursue other interests.

But last week, Rachel was recognized for her dedication. She received the Gold Award, the most prestigious award given in Girl Scouts and an achievement reached by only 6 percent of scouts nationwide.

Rachel, who is the daughter of Joseph and Mary McElroy of Windy Hill Road, became the 12th Girl Scout in the Hingham, Hull and Cohasset area to receive the award since 1980, according to statistics from the Massachusetts Girl Scouts Council.

"It's the Girl Scout equivalent of becoming an Eagle Scout," Rachel said.

Rachel was presented the award on Jan. 5 at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island. The ceremony was attended by friends, family and even state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-

School board looks at bleak budget

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Their styles are decidedly different.

Supt. Edward Malvey, who oversees the school department's share of Cohasset's budget, and Town Manager Mark Haddad, who is the "number-cruncher" on the town side, have a different modus operandi.

Haddad presents the selectmen with a three-inch think binder complete with every line item in excruciating detail, while Malvey provides the School Committee with just a few pages containing a brief overview of the school budget.

But despite their diverse approaches, both men are sending the same message: expect a lot of belt tightening this year.

Before the most recent news from the state about bigger reductions in local aid, the schools were being asked to live with a 4 percent increase that would amount to a total budget of $11.2 million or about $434,000 over last year — of which contracted salary increases alone would eat up $420,000 of that. [With even more dire fiscal news from the state evolving everyday, it's unclear how the town will handle what could ultimately be a 15-20 percent cut in local aid in fiscal year 2004 that begins July 1].

"We're a labor intensive organization and by far the bulk of the budget is covered by salaries."
— Supt. Edward Malvey

"We're a labor-intensive organization and by far the bulk of the budget is covered by salaries," Malvey said.

The school budget problem is exacerbated by some other increases coming to the schools that include $31,000 for the sewer, unemployment insurance of $10,500, an increase in utilities of some $26,000 and $18,000 to develop a state-mandated pest management plan; $32,000 to pay for two existing health positions [that had been

Renaming the Deer Hill School

School Committee seeks citizen input

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

What's in a name? A lot, says Ed Goff of Ledgewood Drive, who would like to change the name of the Deer Hill School to the William Ripley School after the long-time superintendent, teacher and coach.

Goff pointed out renaming a school is not unprecedented in town. He noted the former Ripley Road School at the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road was renamed the Joseph Osgood School after Joseph Osgood, a superintendent in the late 1800s. That name was carried over to the new Osgood School that opened in September 1998.

Goff urged the School Committee to consider renam-

Lily Pond study is subject of meeting

The Water Commission will hold a public meeting at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Jan. 22 at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, 339 King St., to review the draft Lily Pond Limnology and Water's Edge Study.

"We invite all Cohasset residents to attend this meeting to review this report," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "This study shows the effect that nutrient loading has on Lily Pond and makes recommendations on how to improve the situation."

Runway meeting

The South Shore Jet Pollution Council will meet Wednesday, Jan. 22 from 7-9 p.m. at the Hingham Library in the Whiton Room. Contact Marita King Hunter at 781-925-9010 for details, or visit: www.southshore-jetpollution.org

The Hingham Library is located off Route 228 at 66 Leavitt.

Vacancy on CPC

Citing "the press of other commitments," David McMorris has resigned from the Community Preservation Committee. Selectmen have asked that citizens interested in serving on the committee come forward. Richard Sylvia, the former governor-appointed member of the Housing Authority, has applied for the position.

Planning Board gets OK for legal counsel

Selectmen unanimously approved the designation of $3,040 for Town Counsel to represent the Planning Board in hearings with Avalon Bay. "I think they want someone to advocate for them because their position is that the land is zoned commercial," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris. "I think they'd like to make a presentation at the hearings and they'd like to have Counsel help them make that presentation. They want that expertise." The money will come from funds appropriated for legal expenses at the last Town Meeting.

Inventory for brooks, streams set for spring

At the request of selectmen, Town Manager Mark Haddad has arranged for an inventory of the town's brooks and streams to determine which of them need maintenance. Carl Sestito, the DPW superintendent, will perform the inventory in the spring. The desire to keep the town's brooks and streams clean was a goal set by the Board of Selectmen last year.

Update on new runway at Logan

Ralph Dormitzer, a Logan runway opponent, will update the Board of Selectmen on the status of the proposed, ne runway at Logan International Airport at the Board's regularly scheduled meeting on Jan. 28 at 7:30 p.m.

Selectmen looking into moving dock

Selectmen are looking into moving the dock originally intended as a temporary tie-up at Mariner's Park. The inside of the dock has been used as a permanent tie-up for dinghies, but at low tide those dinghies have been grounded, forcing boat owners to pull them up and over the dock to get out to their boats. At the request of selectmen, John Modzelewski, the town's consulting engineer, is looking into the moving the dock 10 feet farther from shore.

Elm St. housing

There are only two people on the waiting list for housing for the elderly at the Harborview Apartments behind the police-fire station on Elm Street, Cohasset Housing Authority Director Marilyn LeBlanc said.

Applicants must be at least 60 years old with an annual income not in excess of $40,600. Cohasset residents do get preference, she said.

Call LeBlanc at 718-383-1948 for more information.

Basketball courts to be upgraded

The basketball court behind the old Osgood School will be upgraded using funds from the Basketball Boosters. New lights will be added as part of the upgrade. Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to look into putting a motion detector and a timer on the lights to conserve energy and assure the lights will shut down at a reasonable hour.

Government Structure Committee reactivated

The Board of Selectmen has asked the Troika to fill the vacancies on the Government Structure Committee. Because the Town Manager's Act has been in existence for more than five years, selectmen feel a review of the town's government is warranted.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Tuesday Jan.. 14:

Advisory Committee, Jan. 16 at 7 p.m.

Conservation Commission, Jan. 23 at 7:30 p.m.

Planning Board, Jan. 22 at 7:30 p.m.

Police/ Fire Station Study Commission, Jan. 28 at 9 a.m.

Recreation Commission, Jan. 23 at 6:30 p.m.

Selectmen, Jan. 28 at 7:30 p.m.

School Building Committee, Jan. 20 at 6 p.m.

Senior Housing Committee, Jan. 22 at 9 a.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals (Avalon), Jan. 27 at 7:30 p.m. All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Names of local soldiers sought

The Sons of the American Legion chapter in Cohasset would like to know the names of any Cohasset soldiers who have been deployed to the Persian Gulf.

The Sons are also ordering Blue Star Banners for the families of local soldiers. Please leave a message for Sons Commander Tom Wigmore at the American Legion Post, 781-383-9657, and he will contact you.

Business owners to share burden of burying wires

Project to go before voters

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

With the Jan. 25 vote on whether to bury utility wires in Cohasset Village fast approaching, several local business owners have vowed to contribute money toward the project to lessen its potential burden on taxpayers.

Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, has pledged $100,000 towards the project. Hubert van der Lugt, owner of Hub Shipping, has said that between his and several other downtown businesses, an additional $50,000 will be raised.

The contributions would lower the cost of the debt exclusion override that would fund the project from $800,000 to $650,000.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, that would mean the average Cohasset taxpayer (considered the owner of a $575,500 home) would pay $49.51 per year for five years, were the override to pass.

With $2.7 million in grants from the state and the MBTA already apportioned for improvements to sidewalks and other parts of the downtown area, proponents of burying the wires say it's a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

"You're not going to dig that up five years from now when you decide maybe it would have been better to go underground. This is the one time to do it," said van der Lugt, who will personally contribute $6,000 to the project. "People are always talking about improving their front yards. This is the front yard of our town."

Craig Miller, president of the Waterfield Design Group, the group hired to redesign the village, said burying the wires in conjunction with the other projects planned for downtown would make it cheaper and less invasive than doing it in the future.

"From our perspective it would be really unfortunate to go so far and make so many wonderful improvements and not take the final step," said Miller. "Out of all the visual improvements, the removal of the overhead wiring is probably the most striking."

Van der Lugt agreed, but said appearance isn't the only reason he supports the project. "It ought to brought up that it's not just esthetics," he said. "You'll have a much safer and wider, better sidewalk. You'll also gain a number of parking spots. In general terms, the sidewalks themselves will be more comfortable and the cost of service for power breakdowns will go down next to nothing because it's pretty much maintenance-free." He also said the project would allow for more trees in the area.

The project encompasses burying the wires in the village and does not include the Town Common.

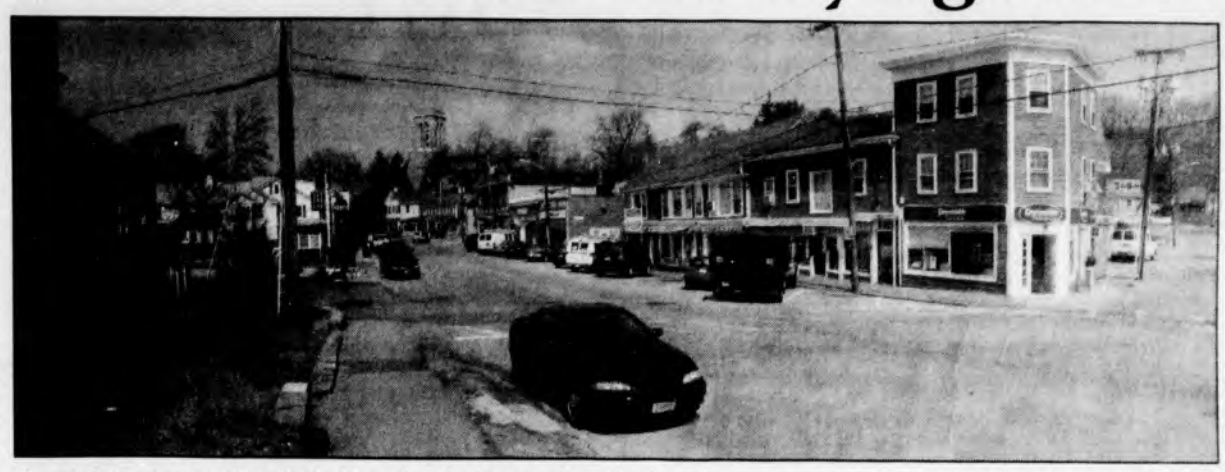
Van der Lugt, who owns three properties in the village, admitted he had special interest in the project, but said that was why he was willing to contribute more.

"Those who own property downtown obviously have more than one interest in the whole thing because it will indeed enhance the value of whatever is downtown," he said. "It came to my mind that as property owners we should pay more than the average citizen."

Burying the wires was included in the original plan for improvements to the village but was dropped due to lack of funding. Selectmen chose to let the matter go before voters, who at Special Town Meeting on Nov. 16 decided by a slim two-thirds majority vote to put the estimated $800,000 debt exclusion override on the ballot at a Jan. 25 special election. The override will need only a majority vote to pass.

An override is necessary because the debt service for the project cannot be absorbed within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, the state law that caps the amount a town can raise its property taxes. A debt exclusion provides a temporary override of that limit until the project is paid off. This debt exclusion will run for five years, which is the maximum allowed for a roadway project.

Delaying the downtown revitalization project until more funding for burying the wires becomes available is not an option, according to Haddad. The town has only through 2004 to spend the $1.5 million Public Economic Development grant that will fund the streetscape revitalization, Haddad said.



Top photo is what the village looks like today; the bottom photo, thanks to computer technology, is what the village would look like after improvements that include burying utility wires.

Cohasset Village sidewalks, lighting come into focus

Project could start in April

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Waterfield Design Group revealed the preliminary plan for revamping Cohasset Village's streets and sidewalks at Town Hall Monday night, but a complete picture of what the downtown area will eventually look like is still anyone's guess.

A major part of the revitalization plan could be burying utility wires in the village but that is dependent on a Jan. 25 debt exclusion override vote to pay for the $800,000 project (see related story).

But regardless of the outcome of that vote, selectmen will likely approve a final design for the village sometime in late February or Early March, and construction could begin as early as mid-April.

According to the initial plan, sidewalks will be made of concrete with a bluestone border extending two feet in from a six-inch high granite curb. Granite and bronze tiles with designs such as lobsters, shells, starfish, doves and crabs will be spread throughout the concrete. New trees will be surrounded by granite cobbles.

Despite a survey by the Community Revitalization Corporation that indicated a majority of residents preferred brick sidewalks, a limited budget forced selectmen and designers to chose concrete.

Craig Miller, president of the Waterfield Design Group, said brick would cost an additional $200,000 to $400,000. "We don't feel at all that we're making a sacrifice esthetically," Miller said.

Old fashioned, Victorian-style light fixtures on tall black posts will replace current lighting in the village. For seating, two options are on the table: an all-teak bench or a wooden one with a black, metal frame. Trash receptacles have also yet to be chosen.

Concerns from residents at the meeting ranged from traffic and parking issues to worries that blasting the rock at the foot of St. Stephen's Church to make room for a sidewalk will leave a jagged, unnatural look.

Designers had planned to do away with three parking spots in front of Shipcove Park to allow for a view, but Roger Hill of Highland Avenue disagreed with the move. "If you talk to the merchants down there, I think they'd want the additional parking," said Hill.

Selectman Tom Callahan defended the design. "This was designed for the pedestrian, not the use of the automobile," he said. "Were not losing spaces. We're gaining spaces in the town parking lot."

The amount of parking spaces on South Main Street will stay at 18 while spaces in the town parking lot will increase from 187 to 217.

"This is a balancing act," said Miller. "We have a finite amount of space and a finite amount of resources."

Miller said the Waterfield Design Group will meet with village merchants to review the design within the next month. He said keeping businesses accessible during construction was a concern, but how that would be done was not yet determined.

Keeping construction to one side of the street was one option Miller mentioned. He also said limited nighttime construction until 11 p.m. or 12 a.m. had not been ruled out.

"If we could get nighttime construction—I don't think we could because of the sensitive nature of the of the downtown — but if we could, then we could get this done a lot quicker," Miller said.

To ease parking concerns, the first phase of the project to be completed will be the town parking lot. At an estimated cost of $350,000 to $500,000, the parking lot will be paid for the MBTA as part of the Greenbush mitigation agreement.

The rest of the project will be funded by a variety of sources. The town received a $1.5 million state Public Works Economic Development grant for the for the streetscape revitalization, $1 million for the James Brook culvert as part of the MBTA mitigation package, and a $169,000 Transportation Enhancement grant for the St. Stephen's sidewalk, while the installation of a new water main, at a cost of $38,000, will be paid for by the Water Department.

Local business owners have offered to subsidize burying the utility wires to the tune of $150,000 to lessen the impact of the project on local taxpayers.

Stop-work order to be issued for Jerusalem Lane mansion building permit, which prompted the public hearing before the zoning board on the appeal.

But Lacy said because the lot is undersized and the existing house razed and replaced with a much larger structure, the owner needed a special permit before obtaining a building permit. His counterparts on the zoning board agreed.

The lot at 3 Jerusalem Lane is about 14,000 square feet when a conforming lot in that residential district would have a minimum of 35,000 square feet.

The ruling will undoubtedly open the proverbial "Pandora's Box" as there are at least two other homes in town, at 319 and 396 Jerusalem Road that are being constructed on undersized lots, according to the Building Inspector's office. And there may be half a dozen others that are already up and running, so to speak. Those homes may not have come to the zoning board's attention because nobody questioned them.

An incredulous Sawyer told the zoning board her client's civil rights had been "severely jeopardized." What is fair for one, is fair for all, she said.

The zoning board stressed Ayer could apply to the board for a special permit that would trigger abutter notification. Ayer may do that, but in the interim, his legal team was busy at Town Hall on Tuesday going through the files to find more undersized lots where homes have been built without so much as a whimper.

Planning Board member Robert Sturdy, who is often unabashed in the face of storm of controversy, has weighed in on the issue in a long letter to the zoning board.

Sturdy argues that under the bylaw because the lot is non-complaint, issuance of a building permit even for a home that meets all the current setback and height requirements is prohibited. He also notes the building permit was not for the extension, alteration or enlargement of an existing building because the existing house was razed.

If Ayer applies for a special permit, the zoning board must find that the house is not substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood than the existing non-conforming use and is not hazardous to the public health because of traffic congestion or other reason, Sturdy stated.

Citing a legal case that was referred to several times at Monday's meeting, "an otherwise conforming structure on a nonconforming lot is treated as a nonconforming structure."

"It appears the building permit issued for 3 Jerusalem Lane was not in compliance with the Cohasset Zoning Bylaws and that the appeal prevails on the merits," Sturdy wrote. "A cease and desist order must be issued."

Chairman Woody Chittick stressed the zoning board did not have enough information to determine if the Ayer house would qualify for a special permit.

Lacy said the immediate remedy was for the Building Inspector to issue a "cease and desist" order until the board "grants a special permit, if we do."

Lacy explained it seemed the intent of the bylaw was to prevent reconstruction on non-conforming lots from increasing the non-conformity and "crowding things even more." If the homeowner had essentially built the same house, there wouldn't be a problem.

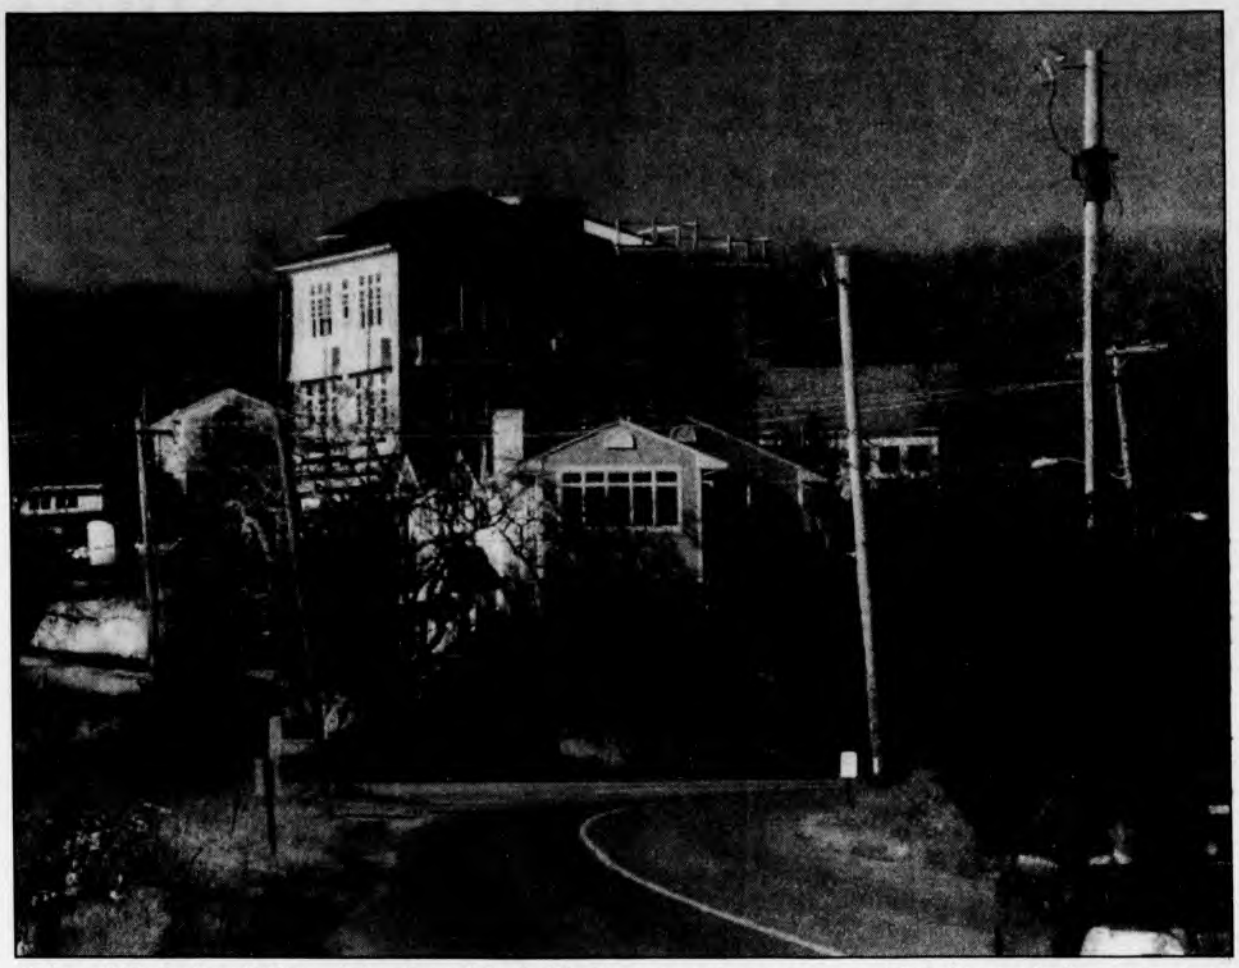
"We hope to have a full hearing on the merits in context of an application for a special permit," Chittick added. "In the interim, the building inspector must take remedies."

In the meantime, Egan's office provided the scene for intensive research by Ayer's legal team that intended to search back six years for other undersized lots that had been built on in town. Sawyer, Ayer's attorney, said she planned to seek a hearing before a judge.

"Where we go from here is an interesting question," Egan said Tuesday.

Ayer, whose home is 80 percent complete, said in a telephone interview that Monday happened to be his birthday and the zoning board presented him with one heck of a present. He said he'd be closing up the house to prevent any leaks but was far from giving up the fight to what he sees as an abridgement of his civil rights. Ayer said he was alerting "legal people and the media."

"I'm going to shed the light of the day on it," he said.



Cohasset's Zoning Board of Appeals has directed the Building Inspector to issue a "cease and desist" to stop further construction on this home at 3 Jerusalem Lane.

Hull for $2,000 to $3,000 per household for a 30-year period, Jerusalem Road Estates was willing to pay about $30,000 per household for the same capacity.

If that were the going rate, Vanderweil said, expanding the North Cohasset Sewer District to existing homes with potentially hazardous septic systems could become a mere pipe dream.

In the eyes of the Sewer Commission, connecting those homes is more important than putting any new projects online, especially given the agreement Cohasset has with the state requiring the clean-up of any existing wastewater problems.

"There's more areas in Cohasset that could use the sewering," said Vanderweil, pointing to homes on and around Jerusalem Road and Forest Avenue, where ledge and soil conditions are less than ideal for the on-site systems already in place.

This fall, Sewer Commissioners said they were "stonewalled" by Hull in their efforts to seek more sewer capacity.

But Jerusalem Road Estates offered the Town of Hull $650,000 for 13,750 gallons of wastewater per day for 30 years, and they accepted.

Charles Humphreys, a lawyer for the developers, says his client has as much a right as anyone to buy Hull's sewer capacity.

"(The Sewer Commission is) basically saying, 'We're not going to help you, but you can't help yourself,'" said Humphreys. "It's an arbitrary and capricious act. They would have to have a reason for saying no."

Humphreys said the Sewer Commission is over-stepping its bounds. "There's no question about it," he said. "What you find is a lot of boards working as zoning agencies instead of providing their services."

The Sewer Commission maintains that it acted within its jurisdiction, citing in its decision a state law that says only municipalities have the right to contract with other municipalities regarding the operation of a common sewer system. That would make the contract between Hull and Jerusalem Road Estates illegal, unless the town of Cohasset approved.

The matter will now end up in court, where Jerusalem Road Estates will appeal the Sewer Commission's decision.

School custodians say they need more help

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Custodian Ted Holland told the School Committee last week there is a critical need for another full-time custodian at the Deer Hill School.

He explained there are two custodians at the school, Tom Jones who works from 6 a.m.-2:30 p.m. and opens the school, cleans the rooms and lavatories, and Holland who works from 10 a.m.-6:30 p.m.

Holland starts his day transporting school lunches from the high school to both Deer Hill and Osgood, then after lunch, he transports lunch money, pots & pans, and interoffice mail back to the high school.

"I'm not able to start my cleaning duties until 2 p.m., which leaves only 4-1/2 hours a day to clean," he said.

Holland pointed out that with the new addition, Deer Hill is doubling in size from 40,000 to 80,000 square feet and noted that a study conducted two years ago, said Deer Hill was understaffed by a one-half time custodial position.

"I feel the addition of this position is necessary to protect Cohasset's beautiful new investment for generations to come."

— Ted Holland, Deer Hill custodian

Holland said a custodian is needed to work the 3-11 p.m. shift.

"Community members and organizations frequently use the building at night," he said. "A custodian on duty will enable the building to be properly opened, supervised locked and alarmed.

"I feel the addition of this position is necessary to protect Cohasset's beautiful new investment for generations to come," he said.

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said the board is taking the issue of school cleanliness seriously.

"We don't want people to walk into our new facility and say, 'gee it looks nice but it's filthy,'" he said.

Supt. Edward Malvey said despite budget woes, the school buildings have to be maintained. The town's DPW oversees maintaining the buildings, but the school department is responsible for the custodial staff.

Malvey said the cost effectiveness of outsourcing some cleaning would be looked at.

"Decisions have to be made with upkeep of the facilities," he said.

The School Committee took the issue under advisement.

"We need a custodian at Deer Hill," School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said. "The question as always is money, but we'll work on it."

Later in the budget discussion that night, DeGiacomo mentioned the custodial request. He said he wasn't sure the School Committee was ready to say the buildings need to be spotless and cut a teacher.

ments that would most likely be hit. He said the police and fire departments are already so low-staffed that reducing them further wouldn't save money because overtime costs would increase so dramatically.

The dire budget news came to Haddad from Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, over the telephone on Wednesday afternoon.

At Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting, faced with the 10 percent cut for the remainder of fiscal year 2003, Haddad discouraged layoffs, recommending the town use its "free cash" to make up the difference.

"We're going to have to go back and revisit everything."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

That plan may still be possible for 2003, but isn't likely to work for balancing 2004's budget, Haddad said.

The town currently has about $300,000 in "free cash" and $3,000,000 in its stabilization fund, money reserved for paying the debt service on the town's multi-million dollar school projects, which the state has delayed payments on indefinitely.

"This is the second time the state has reneged on us in less than a year," Haddad said, referring to the those payments. "This is a case of the state balancing their books on the back of the towns of Massachusetts."

Haddad said he would not recommend an increase to the $485,000 general override for the operating budget that will go before voters this spring.

Selectmen will likely take up the budget issue at their next meeting, scheduled for Jan. 28 at 7:30 p.m.

School board looks at bleak budget

covered by grants] and upwards of $56,000 to cover the state's share of out-of-district tuition for students with disabilities. The Commissioner of Education recently announced the state might no longer be able to pay 50 percent of that cost as it has in the past.

Those budget increases do not include maintenance, any new teachers, textbooks or supplies.

Last Thursday's meeting was the School Committee's first pass at the overall school department budget. The School Committee was not prepared to say the schools could live within the 4 percent or if it would seek to increase the override.

Haddad said last week this spring's override would be $486,000 — but that's based on a 10 percent cut in local aid.

Two alternate designs added to Police/Fire Station plans

When the town eventually decides to replace the fire department's 25-year-old ladder truck, the new truck, if it's the model Fire Chief Roger Lincoln is hoping for, won't fit in the current station.

To solve that problem, the Police/Fire Building Study Committee is considering two alternate designs to additions already planned for the building. One alternate plan would lengthen the current garage by eight feet. Another would raise the roof of the garage by two feet.

At an expected cost of around $80,000, the plan to lengthen the garage would be least expensive and the most necessary of the two. The plan to raise the roof, which committee members said would cost "six-figures," would allow firefighters to perform maintenance on the ladder truck indoors. Even with the truck the department now owns, firefighters must take it outside three times a week to pop the vehicle's hood and do the necessary maintenance.

The two alternate plans will be put out to bidders in February, along with the estimated $600,000, 1450-square-foot addition that would provide the station with much-needed facilities for both police and female firefighters and paramedics. The improvements will go before voters at Town Meeting this spring.

Town land OK'd as launching area for kayaks and canoes

The Weir River Estuary Committee met with selectmen Tuesday night and walked away with permission for town land on Straits Pond to be used for the launching of kayaks and canoes. The land is located on Hull Street near the former site of the old fire station.

The request to use the land was part of the Weir River Estuary Committee's effort to use "water as the path" for those who wish to explore the estuary. Committee member Judith Van Hamm outlined the goals of the committee, which include improving water quality, preserving habitat, promoting recreation, and educating people on the estuary.

Because of its extensive salt marsh and tidal flats, the estuary is an area of significant environmental concern. Using part of a $50,000 grant from the state's watershed initiative program, the Weir River Estuary Committee is hiring a consultant to help develop the watershed as a protected area. Van Hamm encourage selectmen to attend visioning workshop that will be scheduled in the near future.

Rachel McElroy receives Girl Scouts' highest honor

Hingham, who presented Rachel with a special certificate.

To qualify for the Gold Award, Rachel spent countless hours working towards four patches, two pins, and several community service requirements.

"Girl Scouts just opened up so many opportunities to me."

— Rachel McElroy, Windy Hill Road

Much of her effort focused on a water-safety program. She received her lifeguard certification, put together a packet for children and parents explaining how to deal in water-related emergencies, and taught courses to children ages 5 to 12 in conjunction with the Salem YMCA, the Cohasset Recreation Department and the Cohasset Community Center summer program.

"It was very challenging but it didn't feel like it was work because I was having such a blast," Rachel said. "It wasn't like I was doing it for a quota. I was doing it because I wanted to."

At 18, Rachel is a senior at Notre Dame Academy in Hingham. She said other highlights of working towards the Gold Award included teaching campfire songs to younger Girl Scouts, lighting candles around Cohasset Common during this year's "Jingle Bell Walk," and attending a sleepover fieldtrip at the Museum of Science in Boston, where Rachel and fellow scouts were treated to private shows in the museum's Planetarium and Omni Theater.

Rachel McElroy with several of her awards and citations.

Rachel's interest in Girl Scouts was something she inherited from her family. Her mother and older sister were former Girl Scouts, and her older brother was an Eagle Scout.

Rachel joined the Girl Scouts while in the first grade. She said the size of her troop decreased significantly over the years, but it didn't stop her from enjoying it. "Girl Scouts just opened up so many opportunities to me," she said, adding that she learned to ride horses, met a group of English exchange students, and even saw the Rockettes perform in New York City, all through being involved with the scouts.

Rachel said she values the friendships she has made as a Girl Scout above all. "The best thing about it is I still have my friends from my Girl Scout troop when I was in first grade and we're still really close," she said. "I go to a different school but I still see them and hang out with them all the time."

Rachel's eligibility as a Girl Scout runs out when she graduates from high school this spring, but her Red Cross certification in first aid and CPR makes her an ideal candidate to chaperone Girl Scout trips around the country, something she is interested in pursuing.

Accepted early at Boston College, Rachel is also applying to Georgetown and Duke and hopes to study communications.

Rachel McElroy wears one of her three patch vests that show her many Girl Scout badges.

ing the Deer Hill School, and said, "It wouldn't cost anything."

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said, according to the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Vol. III" Ripley served in the Cohasset School System for 42 years, 24 of those as superintendent, retiring in 1969.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said Ripley was synonymous with the school system.

"It wouldn't cost anything."

— Ed Goff, Ledgewood Drive

"He was the man and for a very long time," DeGiacomo said.

The School Committee took the matter under advisement, and hopes for some feedback on the proposal from the community.

Got a suggestion for better government?

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has announced a unique opportunity for residents in his district to improve the way government works in Massachusetts.

The Pioneer Institute, a non-profit research group, is sponsoring the 12th Better Government Competition, which seeks ideas from individuals about ways to improve the quality of government services and deliver them more efficiently.

"Making government more efficient should always be our goal and I urge my constituents to participate by sending in an entry."

— State Sen. Robert Hedlund

This year's competition poses four problem statements in the areas of special education, the Commonwealth's budget crisis, Medicaid funding, and small business development. One winning entry in each category will receive $3,000. Implementation of winning ideas from previous competitions has saved Massachusetts taxpayers more than $300 million.

"Making government more efficient should always be our goal and I urge my constituents to participate by sending in an entry," Hedlund said

For more specific information about the competition go to:

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

IT'S A GIRL!

Congratulations to all on the birth of a beautiful little girl. Ann Louise Ward of Cohasset is great-grandmother to Isabelle Mary Ward of Plymouth! Isabelle arrived Dec. 10 at Jordan Hospital. Her parents are Mary Beth and Edmund Ward, and she has a big sister, Stephanie. Isabelle's grandparents are Edmund & Isabel Ward of Kingston; John MacNeil of Quincy; and Elizabeth MacNeil of Dorchester.

COLLEGE ACCEPTANCES

David F. Crowley-Buck and Matthew R. Meikleham of Cohasset were among 46 Boston College High School seniors who recently received word that they had been accepted at the colleges and universities of their choice. The colleges and universities eagerly accepted these students because of their excellence and promise in academics, extracurriculars, sports and community service.

David was accepted at Boston College (Honors Program), Georgetown University and the University of Notre Dame; Matthew at the University of Vermont. Congratulations to both of you on this wonderful news!

POST-PROM PARTY

Calling all Senior Parents! The next meeting for Post Prom Party will be on Jan. 23 at 7 p.m. at the CHS Cafe. The 2003 Post Prom Party Committee has been very busy over the past few months. Come and hear about the theme we have planned and learn how you can be involved. There is a job for everyone and we need your help!

HONORS GRADUATE

Kaitlin Jackson, graduate of the CHS Class of 1999 graduated with dean's list honors in December 2002 from the University of Maine at Orono.

WINTER WALKERS

Kaitlin received a bachelor's degree in International Affairs and Spanish. Her proud parents are Robert and Diane Jackson.

LEARNING PROBLEMS

On Tuesday, Jan. 21 at 7 p.m., Tara Gallagher, regional manager of Clinics for Lindamood-Bell Learning Processes, will be presenting an overview on "The Sensory-System Connection: Dyslexia to Autism" at the South Shore Country Club on 274 South St. in Hingham. Parents and professionals are invited to attend this very special overview. The causes and solutions for learning problems, including the symptoms of dyslexia, hyperlexia, autism, and attention deficit disorder, will be presented.

Lindamood-Bell is planning on opening a new center in Hingham in the spring of 2003. Call now to RSVP: (800) 233-1819 ext. 750

BIRTHDAY WISHES

I would like to wish my goddaughter, Tricia Litchfield, a very happy birthday and hope that she enjoyed her special day last Sunday, Jan. 12. Happy seventh birthday big girl, everyone loves you a great big bunch!

MARK YOUR CALENDAR

"Love Around the World," a benefit dinner dance, will be held at the Red Lion Barn, 71 S. Main St., Cohasset, Feb. 8 from 7 p.m. 'til midnight.

Proceeds will benefit the playground at Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum, which will open later this year. The museum will occupy a two-story wing at the back of the new Paul Pratt Library at the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road.

The playground is currently being designed under the aegis of the same non-profit group that is raising money for the children's museum.

"Love Around the World" will feature a buffet dinner and dancing to the sounds of the Mike Dumas Band with Platform Soul. The evening will also include a live auction.

Tickets are $75 each. For reservations or further information, call Logan Bernstein at 781-383-6165.

STUDENT JOB BANK

Need a little help around the house? The Social Service League provides a referral service to match high school students looking for work opportunities in Cohasset. If you are interested in hiring a student to work for you, please call the League Office at 781-383-0771 between 8:30 a.m. and 3 p.m., Monday through Friday.

A list of student names is available for the following services: lawn mowing, leaf raking, general yard work, cooking, computer skills work, babysitting, house sitting, pet sitting, etc. at $7 per hour.

FIRST PARISH OPEN HOUSE

First Parish in Cohasset is celebrating the renovation of its 1722 Parish House with an Open House for members, friends, and honored guests on Sunday, Jan. 26 from 12-2:30 p.m. The Parish House is located at 23 North Main St. Displays of the ongoing activities of the parish will be presented, and refreshments will be served.

Music during the open house will be provided by Howard Altholtz on guitar with friends in concert and music by the First Parish choir as well. Jim Hamilton, a local cartoonist, will entertain both adults and children, and a local storyteller will hold the children's interest in the new childcare center.

HONOR ROLL

Robert P. Henderson, Head of School, is pleased to announce that Kayvon Michael Tehranian achieved academic honors for his first semester grades at Noble and Greenough School. Kayvon, a junior, received High Distinction for maintaining B+, A- average. Keep up the hard work, Kayvon!

BOOKS COOK PROGRAM

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades 1 and 2 Books Cook program by calling 781-383-4109.

Once Upon a Recipe is for grades 1 and 2 and will be held from 3:15 to 4:45 p.m. on Wednesdays, and will be held at the Joseph P. Osgood School. Children will enjoy making bread Boas after reading "The Day Jimmy's Boa Ate the Wash" or making candy houses after reading "Hansel and Gretel," as example.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $55 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin in late January on Wednesdays right after school until 4:30 p.m.. Each week will feature different books and cooking.

For more information details and registration, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781- 383-4109.

That is all the news for this week. Please make sure to send me all of your news, photos and event information no later than Mondays at noon.

BLIZZARD MEMORIES

PHOTOS/JESS MANSON

Chris Haraden, author of a new book on the Blizzard of '78, displays some blizzard memorabilia during an open discussion last Thursday of the Hull Lifesaving Museum's upcoming Blizzard of '78 25th Anniversary Exhibit. The open house at the station museum, 1117 Nantasket Ave. provided a forum for South Shore residents to share their memories of the storm, and to preview plans for the upcoming exhibit.

Jack and Joyce Zimmerman pore over Blizzard of '78 souvenir editions of the Boston Herald American newspaper at the Hull Lifesaving Museum. Visitors were encouraged to bring photographs, newspaper clippings or other mementos of the storm. For more information on the upcoming exhibit, contact Victoria Stevens at 781-925-5433.

WEDDINGS

Mr. and Mrs. Brian Palladino

Palladino - Sutherland wedding

Erin Sutherland and Brian Palladino were married on July 20, 2002 at St. Anthony Church, Cohasset. The Rev. John Mulvehill officiated.

The bride is the daughter of Susan and Frederick Cox of Hull and George and Margaret Sutherland of Harwich. She is a 1992 graduate of Cohasset High School and a 1996 graduate of the University of Massachusetts—Amherst. She earned her master's degree in education from UMASS—Boston. She is a ninth-grade history teacher for the Marshfield Public Schools.

The bridegroom is the son of Rocco and Diana Palladino of Plymouth. He graduated from Plymouth North High School in 1992 and from the University of Massachusetts—Amherst in 1997. He earned a master's degree in special education at Eastern Nazarene College. He is currently working on a certificate of advanced graduate studies through Fitchburg State College. Mr. Palladino is employed with Randolph Public Schools as chairperson for the middle school special education department.

Following the wedding ceremony, a reception was held at Scituate Country Club. The couple cruised the Caribbean on their honeymoon.

They are at home in Plymouth.

Thanks for speaking up

Before 2003 gets too far along, we still have some important 2002 business to attend to. Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter to the Cohasset Mariner in 2002.

A few wrote thank you notes to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject, putting pen to paper to share your views with your fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salute the following citizens:

Connie Afshar & Susan Etkind; Monique Armstrong; Mark Bell; the Bell-Sheridan Family; Michelle & Brigette Berube; Isabel Blackburn; Randall W. Bodner; Russell Bonetti; Garrett Bradley; Jack Buckley; Tomi Bukowski; R. Murray Campbell; Margy Charles; David & Mary Ann Chase; Woody Chittick; Stephanie Church; Marylan Clark; Cheryl Coats; Gail Kearney Collins; Barbara Cummings; Mark DeGiacomo; Richard F. deLima; Lee Anne Ciciotte DeVries; Mike Dick; Patrick Dougherty; Marion Douglas; Bob Ernst; John S. Galluzzo; Mr. & Mrs. Stephen Gillis; Beth & Jamie Gilman; Martha Gjesteby; Georgie Gladdys; Ron Goodwin; Valerie Greene; Peter Guild; M. Hart; Michael Hayes; Thomas M. Healy;

The editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner belong to you. It's where you can speak out or just say thank you to a citizen or group that went beyond the call of duty.

Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

Last year, the Cohasset Mariner received 157 letters from 105 different people, groups or organizations.

To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year — which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy. Let us hear what you think in 2003.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Food Pantry support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

As we complete our 10th year in operation, the Cohasset Food Pantry would like to thank our many benefactors. We have recently moved to St. Anthony Parish Rectory and can now provide ground floor access to the pantry. We are very grateful to Fr. John Mulvehill for offering this space to our organization.

For the past 10 years, the Food Pantry was operated in the Second Congregational Church. With much support and generosity from Rev. Gary Ritts, Dee Dee Perry and the congregation. During this period, Bob Thompson contributed many hours of service to the pantry. He will always be remembered for his gentle leadership and kind spirit, Our new home is dedicated in loving memory to Bob Thompson. Through Bob's memorial fund we were able to purchase new appliances and complete the move to St Anthony's.

We are very grateful to Steve Buckley who donated and installed our beautiful new shelving.

We are also thankful for our loyal volunteers who come to help stock the shelves, distribute food and provide cheerful conversation and guidance to our recipients. Several of these volunteers have been with us for many years.

The Cohasset Food Pantry relies on food and monetary donations throughout the year. We have been blessed this season with an abundance of food donations thanks to the monthly food drives at our local churches and our many benefactors. There are many organizations and people who helped us provide holiday meals and gifts for Thanksgiving and Christmas. We wish to acknowledge:

Kinnealey Meats - Thanksgiving turkeys and pies; Carriage House Nursery School; Community Center Nursery School; Second Congregational Church; Cohasset High School; St. Anthony Church. CCD Program - Ann Musto, Kathy Horrigan, Eileen Craven, Julie Trendowicz, Marie Kelly; Mary Lee Pestone; Rusty Skippers; Second Congregational Church - Angel tree; Molly McGowan - scout troop; Mary McKelvy- Girl Scouts; Liz Richardson - Girl Scouts; Jody Doyle - First Parish Church - Christmas trees; Judy Wilson and Julia DeWaal- Food baskets - Osgood Kindergarten students; Beth Wheatley Dyson - St Stephen's holiday food drive; Pilgrim Cooperative Bank- holiday food drive and Christmas turkeys; Jane Corry; Corrine Cahill; Jim Clinton - Stop & Shop; Ozzie Osborne; Dr. Sceery; The Thompson family who distributed food baskets on Christmas Eve.

The Cohasset Food Pantry is open every Tuesday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. Parking is available at the rear of the rectory.

Toys appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of all the staff and residents at Project Turnabout in Hingham, I would like to thank the Cohasset Social Service League for providing toys for children of the residents over the holiday season. The young men in our residential treatment program have a difficult time as it is, and the League's thoughtfulness and generosity helped make some of their lives just a bit easier over the holidays. The kids that came to visit had a surprise waiting for them under our Christmas tree and it turned the day into a happy occasion. Thank you for thinking of us. Happy New Year to you all.

Heartfelt thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

I am currently a resident of Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home.

Over this past holiday season I received many gifts from generous, kindly people — some of whom I did not even know.

I would like to extend my thanks to all who were so thoughtful to remember me, as it is difficult to say thank you individually.

Thank you for helping me.

HEALTH NOTES

Some tips to avoid Norwalk Virus

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

According to the Massachusetts medical Society, Norwalk-like viruses NLV cause approximately 23 million cases of disease each year in the United States and are the leading cause of outbreaks of gastroenteritis. Illness lasts 12-60 hours and is characterized by sudden onset of nausea, vomiting, and watery diarrhea; the incubation period is 12—48 hours.

Viral gastroenteritis outbreaks can occur in institutional settings, such as schools, childcare facilities, and nursing homes, and can occur in other group settings, such as banquet halls, cruise ships, dormitories, and campgrounds.

Transmission is facilitated by high rates of infection by persons exposed to the source, a low infectious dose requirement, the absence of long-lasting immunity, the durability of the organism, and the potential for multiple modes of transmission. The virus is transmitted by hands contaminated through the fecal-oral route, directly from person to person, through contaminated food or water, or by contact with contaminated surfaces or fomites.

Fomites are inanimate objects that carry disease-causing germs, which spread infections and are one of the most common ways that kids get sick.

Fomites are inanimate objects that carry disease-causing germs, which spread infections and are one of the most common ways that kids get sick. Toys in a day care or in a doctor's waiting room may have been handled (or mouthed) by contagious kids. Cutting boards and kitchen sponges may teem with bacteria from the uncooked food they have touched. Toothbrushes in the same drawer or cup may be the way that colds or NLV spreads through the family.

Germs commonly live on fomites for minutes or in the case of the NLV up to 18 hours. The most likely fomites are objects that frequently come into contact with uncooked food, toileting or diapering activities, dirt, or the bodies of living creatures. Fomites, which are moist or are stored in a dark place, are the most likely to spread disease. Tissues, diapers, hairbrushes, forks, and spoons are common fomites. Dry, impersonal objects, such as walls, light fixtures, or doorframes, are less likely to spread infection.

The best thing that can be done by persons to reduce their chance of getting infected is frequent hand washing, prompt disinfection of contaminated surfaces with household chlorine bleach-based cleaners, and prompt washing of soiled articles of clothing. If food or water is thought to be contaminated, it should be avoided.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

The case for burying village wires

LOCAL VIEW

HUBERT VAN DER LUGT

The narrative history of Cohasset, Part III, shows how we started the village renaissance in the early 90s with the town pump handmade by Charlie Butman prominently located in front of the Cohasset Hardware Store at the intersection of Elm and Main Streets.

A number of years before several buildings on the intersection of Elm and Brook streets had already been given a new lease on life There was also the James Brook Walk improvement with its lanterns. What was the Breadshop and the area around it, was restored and improved We are fortunate to have Donna Green's studio in town The area between French Memories and Tedeschi became Ship Cove Park with stone benches, trees and shrubs. Hub Shipping and Flemmings are blending in nicely with the Maritime Museum and the Captain Wilson House.

Just a few years ago the Town DPW Garage was transformed into a meeting place for Cohasset youngsters The Hingham Savings Bank spent a lot of money on beautifying what used to be Cohasset Savings Bank The Pilgrim Cooperative Bank spruced up its building as well, Mr. Johnson, and attorneys Humphreys and Henderson did their share along Brook Street.

Two years ago Cohasset Revitalization Corporation emerged and basically developed the present plans for the downtown improvements Peter Roy matched dollar for dollar the contributions made by dedicated people from all over Cohasset, together about $ 300,000.

None of all this so far has cost one cent to the Cohasset taxpayers Topping it all off is the labor of love contributed by Gerd Ordelheide, who saved the Red Lion Inn from falling apart a few years ago The place was seriously neglected when he put his money where his mouth was and went to work spending whatever it took Built in 1704, the Inn now has a new lease on life and is good for another 300 years

This is an impressive list of improvements which took place in the past 20 years, none of which cost the town one red cent, if anything it resulted in higher valuations and thus larger tax payments to the Town. Everything was paid for by the property owners and the many concerned citizens The entire town benefited from these efforts.

The various grants add up to more than $3 million and will make it possible to put it all together with major improvements of the streets, sidewalks, crossings, lights, and parking.

Please for once, in this once in a lifetime situation, do not look at this as a "tax," look at it as a good investment to spruce up Cohasset's front yard, like we all do around our own homes from time to time.

One thing only remains to be covered, these unreliable, unsafe, ugly wires and cables dangling over our heads from those leaning, creosote poles. The only one thing left to be financed one way or the other is the funeral of these monstrosities.

Has anyone ever met anyone who liked the looks of these obstacles? Do you think that anyone will miss them once they are gone ? Would it not be a pleasure to replace a few of these poles by flowering trees?

Mr. Ordelheide, the owner of the Red Lion Inn, has made a $ 100,000 pledge towards the estimated $800,000 cost to put this finishing touch on the revitalization of our village A number of other downtown property owners are now getting together in an effort to match his generosity.

The way most people see it is that not doing this now means that it will never happen, at least not in the foreseeable future, not in my time anyway.

Please for once, in this once in a lifetime situation, do not look at this as a " tax ," look at it as a good investment to spruce up Cohasset's front yard, like we all do around our own homes from time to time. This is the front yard of our town, let's go all the way, let's do it right. Spending $3 million on new sidewalks, crossings, streets, and lights in addition to everything that already has been spent for research and planning and not getting rid of these ugly poles, wires and cables, is tantamount to going to a wedding in a tuxedo, with a cummerbund and a bow tie, wearing beat-up worn out old sneakers.

The only thing I am asking the Town is to spend between $ 600.000 and $650,000 over three to five years to top it all off, nothing more than what has already been done in many other towns all over New England. It is nothing really new, many other towns with less history and less prosperity than Cohasset have done it before. Spread out over five years it is less than $ 150,000 per year. One less time per year to a game, to a concert or out for dinner, that's all it will cost for a few years only.

I am not saying all this frivolously, I do respect and understand the feelings and concerns of those who are of different means and opinions Those same good people I am asking to also look at it the other way though, as an integral part of a downtown improvement plan, upkeep if you will, we are about 80 percent there.

Come on let's go all the way, Cohasset is worth it! It will look great! It is a matter of priorities in our daily lives, our legacy to those who come after us. We owe it to those who came before us and who created Cohasset in the past. Let's do it right. Vote yes on Jan. 25! It will be appreciated and a joy forever.

Hubert van der Lugt is the owner of Hub Shipping on Elm Street.

Cohasset Teen Garage needs your support

COMMENTARY

JACK WORLEY

Due to the Fiscal Year, 2004 budget crisis facing the town, the Recreation Commission's budget of $15,600 for staffing of the Teen Garage has been slashed $10,000, reflecting a meager $5,600 of town support for this popular operation.

The Garage is a safe, supervised haven for Cohasset youngsters grades 6 to 12 and is located directly behind the Red Lion Inn, in the town's old highway department garage. The Garage is open and supervised for youngsters to drop in, socialize with peers, play electronic games, pool, etc and offers dances and other special activities on a regular basis year round.

Approximately $40,000 was raised via the generosity of residents and local business and civic groups during 1998/1999 and through the laborious efforts of Youth Resources Committee members and residents, the 50-year-old building was transformed into a Teen Center.

It has been via small, per capita fee charges for dances and special events only, that the operational costs of the Garage have been satisfied, such as electricity, phone and heating bills, as well as equipment video games, etc.

The town government support came in the form of $15,600 per fiscal year allocated to the Recreation Commission budget for the supervision/staffing of the Garage. The Recreation Director assumed overall responsibilities of Garage operations, upkeep and staff.

In our effort to accommodate the budget deficit of $10,000 for staffing of the Garage, we are asking residents and local business/civic organizations for financial support via tax deductible donations.

There are self addressed envelopes available on the table, outside the Recreation office in the foyer of Town Hall, for mailing your thoughtful and greatly appreciated donation to us. Checks can be made payable to the Town of Cohasset and please include your mailing address, if not on your check, in order that we can acknowledge your generosity.

Some feel Romney showed them up by declining pay

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Last week was not so much for analysis as observation. At the risk of seeming, or being, naïve: the dialogue between the parts of government was straightforward, the big decisions unmade, the conflicts avoided for now.

The most important development short term was the handling of a pay raise for legislators. It is the kind of issue that will fade quickly, but occasionally and persistently earn a mention in the press, always snidely.

Gov. Mitt Romney, using a mildly tortured methodology of his administration's invention, determined Massachusetts lawmakers ought to receive a 6.5 percent pay increase. Voters approved the system where every two years, the governor adjusts lawmakers' salaries based on the rise or fall of income in Massachusetts in the past 24 months.

The increase sparked a statewide debate over whether lawmakers should take a pay raise when they're cutting assistance to people without jobs. Perhaps the most remarkable facet of the discussion was the number of ordinary people willing to say the politicians deserve some kind of increase. The number was more than zero. The Senate decided in closed-door caucus not to accept the $3,258 increase — except for Sen. Guy Glodis.

Romney's a successful businessman, which means it's reasonable to expect top-notch political skills. But life is a series of learning moments for him right now.

Last week, for instance, yielded a rare instance in which the clichés of political reporting appear valid. "Only in Massachusetts/Boston/Your Locality . . ." is among the dumbest of such banalities. Yet it really could be that Beacon Hill is one of the few places where the CEO of an organization in the red could announce he's giving up his salary, and the lesser-paid employees would grumble.

That's just what happened though: a number of House members felt Romney showed them up by foreswearing his pay. They also pointed out that he's actually redirecting it to attract talent to his Cabinet by bolstering his advisors pay.

The griping was refined and amplified, one could argue out of all proportion, by House Speaker Thomas Finneran. He complained that legislators ought to earn a good salary, and have it adjusted regularly, or else the government will wind up being run by "idle, bored, wealthy people."

Romney had been told Beacon Hill wasn't like the private sector, and he'll spend the next four years grappling with that reality, including whatever class resentment is now simmering in Speaker Finneran's office.

Long term the most important event was the naming of Therese Murray of Plymouth as the Senate Ways and Means Chairwoman. Murray's handling of her job will affect thousands of people for many years, as she and new Senate President Robert Travaglini strategize how to respond the budget proposals and deal making of the governor. She is hard-edged personally and liberal politically, an appropriate combination for her branch. Some questioned if she's intellectually heavyweight enough to do the job; now she's got a chance to prove them wrong.

Travaglini's other leadership selections had people cheering or licking their wounds this week.

• Sen. Frederick Berry (D-Peabody) became the new floor leader of the Senate Democrats, replacing Linda Melconian. Selections generally had to do with who supported whom for the presidency. Sen. Marian Walsh of West Roxbury will serve as assistant leader, Joan Menard of Somerset as majority whip and Robert Havern of Arlington as assistant majority whip. The rest of the Senate committee assignments are "forthcoming."

• On roll call after roll call, three quarters of House members resisted rules changes offered by Republicans and House liberals who believe House Speaker Thomas Finneran and his deputies are ignoring the legislative priorities of some members. Finneran's critics attracted few allies among the more than a dozen new state representatives, who for the most part voted with leadership against changes intended to bring more debate to the House. The House overwhelmingly rejected attempts to make it easier to bring bills and veto overrides to the floor that have demonstrable support and to assure preferred committee assignments for representatives who are not on Finneran's leadership list.

• The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority, after delaying the opening date numerous times, announced the $6.5 billion east-west connection from the turnpike to the Ted Williams Tunnel will open Jan. 20. The connection is a monumental benchmark of the Big Dig project, but its opening has been delayed so many times it's become as much a millstone as a milestone for the project's reputation.

• Word of a likely 30 percent in funds for Boston's affordable housing programs shocked advocates in the capitol city. Mayor Thomas Menino said the reduction in funding from the US Department of Housing and Urban Development means he can't achieve his goal of creating more affordable housing in the city. HUD cut the city's allotment by $13 million. "What this does is it sets the housing authority back years," Menino said.

CANDIDATES CORNER

John Beck to run for Sewer Commission

John Beck announced he has drawn nomination papers for the upcoming vacancy on the Cohasset Sewer Commission. He and his wife, Stacey Weaver, have lived in Cohasset since 1990 and currently reside at 44 Nichols Road.

John has a bachelor's degree in Engineering Physics and master's degree in Mechanical Engineering. His early professional career was as a nuclear engineer with Yankee Atomic Electric Company. He was instrumental in the design, construction and operational support for the Yankee plants in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine and Vermont, as well as the Seabrook plant in New Hampshire. Later in his career he was the chief operating officer at the Vermont plant and vice president at a two-plant station in Texas. For the past twelve years he has been the president and principal of his own consulting firm, Little Harbor Consultants, providing management consulting services to his clients from Alaska to Spain.

He feels that his technical background and project and executive management experience provide an excellent foundation for him to make a meaningful contribution as a sewer commissioner. He says that, if elected, he looks forward to working with and learning from the incumbent commissioners, as well as all the other Cohasset officials with whom he will have contact. One of his principal goals is to help assure that Cohasset has a comprehensive wastewater management plan for the entire town.

He feels that by serving the town as a sewer commissioner he can begin to repay the town for the pleasure of living in our beautiful community.

Status of the death penalty

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was reading the other day about how the governor of Illinois, a Republican named George Ryan, has made a clean sweep of the state's death row by commuting the sentences of all 156 condemned inmates.

This seemed to make sense since the courts in Illinois had found 13 death row inmates had been wrongly convicted of their crimes since capital punishment was resumed in 1977. Twelve others had been executed.

The news from Illinois got me to thinking about the status of the death penalty in Massachusetts. It doesn't exist, of course, although the people have voted for it at least twice in non-binding referenda and twice it has been rejected by the Legislature by a margin of one vote.

The last person executed for a capital crime in the Bay State was a doubleheader — Edward "Dutchy" Gertson of Everett and Philip Bellino of Boston on May 9, 1947, for the murder of Robert "Tex" Williams of Haverhill in a marsh in Lynn.

The three of them were cohorts in a dice game holdup and Gertson and Bellino were afraid that Williams was about to start talking about it to the cops. For the record, Bellino, who fired the fatal shot, went to the chair last at 12:17.5 a.m., eight minutes after Gertson.

Two women have been executed in Massachusetts, both by hanging in the 18th century in the days before the chair.

The last South Shore men to sit in "Old Sparky" were Bartolomeo Vanzetti of Plymouth and Nicolo Sacco of Bridgewater on Aug. 23, 1927, for the murder of paymaster Frederick Parmenter and guard Allessandro Beradelli in the well-publicized South Braintree holdup.

Before that it appears to have been Harry Marshall (aka Enrico Mascioli) of Hull who was paid $35 by Mrs. Lena Cusumano in Nantasket Beach. He met his maker on June 6, 1912. Mrs. Cusumano was sentenced to death, too, but the sentence was commuted the day before she was to die.

Two women have been executed in Massachusetts, both by hanging in the 18th century in the days before the chair. Before electricity, as a matter of fact.

Bathsheba Ruggles Spooner of Brookfield, the 21-year-old mother of three, went to the scaffold July 2, 1778, for enticing her teen-aged lover and two soldiers to whack out her troublesome husband, Joshua. Too late it was discovered that she was five months pregnant.

Rachel Ward was hanged in 1789 after she admitted to "highway robbery," i.e., snatching a handkerchief from a teen-aged girl who was flaunting it on the Boston waterfront. They didn't fool around in those days.

Of course, Rachel's reputation may have had something to do with her eventual punishment. She used to lure trusting mariners with her cries for help to an apparently abandoned ship where her husband, George, and his men would kill and rob them.

Long before their colony became a part of Massachusetts, the Pilgrims of Plymouth had to pronounce the death penalty over one of their own, John Billington, who shot his neighbor, John Newcomen, to death to settle an old feud in 1630.

But the Pilgrims bore him no grudge. They named a lake, the Billington Sea, after him.

LIBRARY CORNER

Building update

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will close its South Main Street facility on Monday, Feb. 17, and tentatively open its new Ripley Road building on Monday, March 3.

No books or fines will be due during this time period. Also, we will not be able to place holds on books. It is suggested that residents visit the Hingham Public Library during this transition period.

We apologize for the inconvenience in advance and look forward to serving the Cohasset community in our new space very soon. Look for other notices regarding the opening in upcoming Library Corner bulletins.

The 360 degree view from Blue

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF McGUIGGAN

Sunshine is delicious, rain is refreshing, wind braces up, snow is exhilarating; there is no such thing as bad weather, only different kinds of good weather. — John Ruskin

High atop Great Blue Hill in Milton, the nation's oldest weather observatory exists in a world of its own. Isolated at 635 feet above sea level, the Blue Hill Observatory, looking like an old-world castle, has its own peculiarities of weather, what weather folk call a microclimate. Up there, where the winding road skirting the edge of the Blue Hills ski slope comes to an abrupt but scenic halt, the air is two or three degrees colder, the wind stronger, the snow deeper, the fog thicker. Up there, the old saddles up against the new. One can still take in the expansive view of the ancient hills, the same hills Abbott Lawrence Rotch enjoyed when he built the weather station in 1885, though the once sleepy hills and beyond are now strewn with the artifacts of modern life. Inside the observatory, one can still watch the instruments from a simpler time working reliably alongside the super computers that stream out data from Automated Surface Observation Systems (ASOS).

Abbott Lawrence Rotch was only 25 when he built Blue Hill Observatory. The son of prominent Bostonians, he was born in 1861 and, as a child, traveled extensively in Europe where he attended school in France, Germany and Italy. Fascinated with weather, at the age of 14, he began a weather journal and after graduating from MIT, purchased the summit of Great Blue Hill and built his observatory, modeling it on the stone weather stations he had seen in Europe. Thus began a daily record of precise climate observations, uninterrupted to this day.

Fascination with weather is mankind's common bond. We share its power, beauty and mystery with a collective oneness that few, if any other events or circumstances can inspire. The weather shapes our daily behavior, our mood, indeed our daily conversation. Our language is peppered with weather-related idioms, fair-weather friend, under the weather, head in the clouds, calm before the storm, full of hot air. Weather is one of the few subjects we can talk about across the spectrum of human diversity and experience without fear that we might offend someone. Indeed, one keen observer of human relations noted that we should not knock the weather because nine-tenths of the people couldn't start a conversation without it.

Two people who are happy to converse at length about the weather are Bob Skilling, Observer-in-Charge at Blue Hill, and Don McCasland, Director of Education, who, along with Executive Director Charles Orloff are the three full-time employees charged with keeping Abbott Rotch's legacy alive.

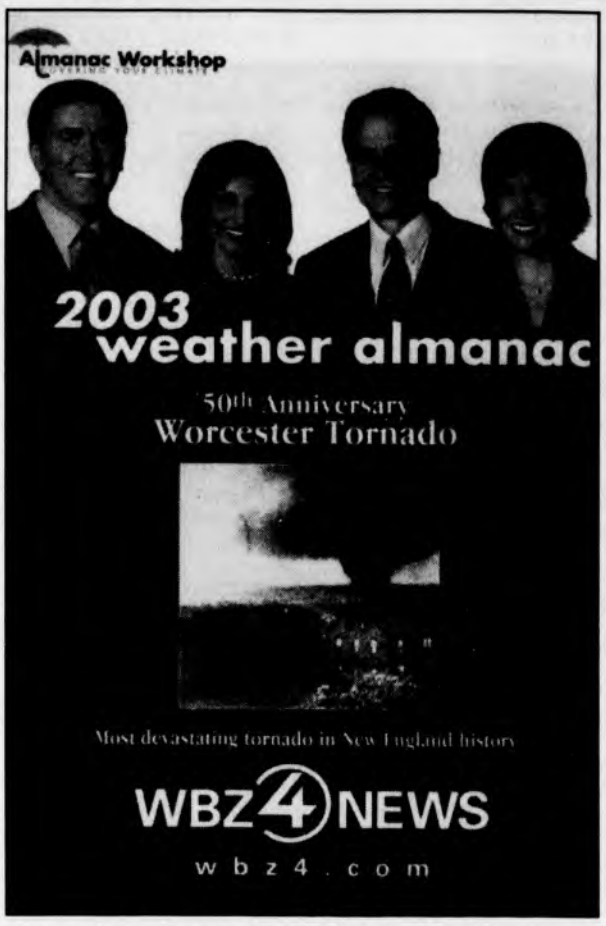
Bob Skilling, a Hingham native who lives in the house where he grew up, remembers being fascinated by the wind as a youngster.

"I loved seeing trees blowing in the wind," he recalls, "loved seeing what wind did to trees, how it shaped them and bent them. And I loved storms."

He began his own weather journal at the age of 10, taking daily temperature readings. By 1953, the year of the devastating Worcester tornado, Skilling's hand-written journal had become a meticulous, detailed day-to-day record of all that was happening outside his window. As a Hingham High School senior, he began writing occasional weather stories for the Hingham Journal (since 1994 he has written the weekly Hingham Journal weather almanac that appears inside the front page) and entered his high school science fair with an exhibit of his journals and a few simple weather instruments. He walked away with first prize.

Since 1960, Skilling has been Hingham's official government weather watcher and, since 1978, Observer-in-Charge at Blue Hill.

"I love looking out the windows, across these hills, and watching the weather," he says from a tiny office crowded with weather artifacts old and new. "I love tracking the weather, reading thermometers, reading relative humidity, the way it was done 40 years ago."



For weather enthusiasts, the 2003 WBZ Weather Almanac is a must for the meteorological library.

Skilling shifts in his chair when asked what the weather forecast will be for the days to come, as though he knew the question was coming.

"I get asked that all the time," he says, "and I tell people that we're not forecasters up here, though they did do forecasting here at Blue Hill until 1971. Now, we only track the weather. Our job is to compile a day-to-day record of what has occurred so that patterns and trends can be seen." But then, with a grin, loathe to disappoint his visitor, he offers that we can expect a few inches of snow that evening and the next. If anyone knows what's coming, it's Bob Skilling.

Don McCasland was also a kid who was fascinated by the weather and, like Bob Skilling, had a particular interest in the wind. His weather interest came largely from kite flying, from the exhilaration of harnessing the wind with a homemade kite and the sensation of sending it high up into the sky. It seemed only natural that after years of offering his kite programs to area schools, he found himself working at Blue Hill where experiments using kites and balloons to study atmospheric conditions were pioneered. Destiny was working in other ways, too. It was at Blue Hill Observa-tory that Don McCasland's parents met in 1941.

Blue Hill Observatory.

When he arrived three years ago, Blue Hill Observatory was at a crossroads. After more than a century of homogeneous record keeping, with measurements taken from the same location with the same tools and by the same methods, after historic discoveries, important research, and the training of generations of meteorologists, Blue Hill Observatory faced an uncertain future. Machines threatened to replace the precise instruments read by human eyes whose measurements had been carefully and lovingly entered by human hands, in delicate script, into countless ledgers over the years.

How Blue Hill found itself at that pivotal moment in 1999 — a figurative storm of the century bearing down on it — can be traced back to 1912 when Abbott Rotch died, bequeathing the observatory, with an endowment, to Harvard. Over the next decades the observatory was recognized the world over for its pioneering research and writing in the field of meteorology, but by 1971, the longtime affiliation with Harvard had ended and the observatory had been transferred to the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC), steward of the Blue Hills who, in turn, leased the building to the National Weather Service.

The weather shapes our daily behavior, our mood, indeed our daily conversation. Our language is peppered with weather-related idioms, fair-weather friend, under the weather, head in the clouds, calm before the storm, full of hot air.

In 1981, under the leadership of Dr. William Minsinger, the Blue Hill Weather Observatory Club was established. Inspired by the observatory's past accomplishments and energized by ambitious goals, the club undertook building repairs, celebrated a centennial in 1985 and won the observatory a National Historic Landmark designation in 1989.

A decade later, however, with pressure mounting on the National Weather Service to maintain the aging building, and with the movement, nationwide, to replace manned stations with unmanned, automated systems, Blue Hill Observatory was slated for modernization. Club members again rallied, arguing for the observatory's historic significance and the importance of its recordkeeping as a benchmark for world climatology and global warming studies.

Members proposed that the observatory be opened to the public as a science center and in May of 1999 the old-world castle, newly renovated with MDC funding, opened as the Blue Hill Observatory Science Center, private, non-profit and member-supported. In the few years since the center has welcomed countless students, scouts, church groups, families, home-schoolers and after-school programs to its weather-watching, kite-making, balloon-launch, hiking and sky-art workshops. Among it innovative programs is WINS — Women in Natural Sciences — a program that nurtures middle-school girls and encourages their continued participation in science. Offered in several area schools, WINS courses are also offered to area girls organizations.

With its new educational mission of fostering a public understanding of and appreciation for atmospheric science, the Blue Hill Observatory continues to maintain a meticulous, unbroken record of climate conditions, employing both modern technology and the tried and true instruments of yesteryear, the ever-reliable barometers, pyroheliometers, thermometers, hygrothermometers and rain gauges. High atop Great Blue Hill, everything old is, indeed, new again. Abbott Lawrence Rotch would certainly recognize the place and would, no doubt, feel right at home.

For weather enthusiasts, the 2003 WBZ Weather Almanac is a must for the meteorological library. Filled with month-by-month climatological information and astronomical highlights as well as stories about clouds, global warming and storms, including a special report commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Worcester tornado, the Almanac is available for $3.50. Make check payable to Blue Hill Observatory and send to P.O. Box 500, Milton, 02186.

Vanderweil stepping down from sewer commission

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

After 20 years on the Sewer Commission, Gary Vanderweil is stepping down and will not seek reelection at the April 5 Town Election.

Vanderweil joined the commission in 1983, several years after an expensive plan to construct a sewer system for the entire town was voted down at Town Meeting. At the time, the town was being pressured by the state to fix numerous faulty leaching fields and a sewer treatment plant that was exceeding its capacity.

Under the leadership of former sewer chairmen Charlie DeSantis and Ted Guild, Vanderweil helped the Sewer Commission make up the difference for the lack of a town-wide system.

During his tenure, the commission designed and implemented the North Cohasset sewer system, which services about 300 homes via Hull's treatment plant. They also expanded the Central Cohasset sewer system from 200 to 800 homes, increasing the capacity of the treatment plant at Jacob's Meadow from 80,000 to 300,000 gallons per day.

Vanderweil took over as chairman of the Sewer Commission three years ago, and has since worked towards creating sewer access for homes in the Little Harbor area.

He said he enjoyed the challenge of planning the town's sewer systems. "It's a volunteer effort," he said. "It's a lot of work, but I felt Cohasset needed a cost-effective sewer system."

"I think the sewer commission needs some fresh blood."
— Gary Vanderweil

An engineer, Vanderweil is CEO of R.G. Vanderweil Engineering in Boston, a firm that designs mechanical and electrical systems for buildings.

John Beck, who will run for the spot to be vacated by Vanderweil, is also an engineer. Beck worked for many years as a nuclear engineer at Yankee Atomic Electric Co. and more recently has been the president of his own consulting firm, Little Harbor Consultants.

Vanderweil said he supported Beck's bid for election. "I think the sewer commission needs some fresh blood," he said. "I always thought engineers had a lot to contribute."

Potential candidates for elected town offices have until Feb. 18 to secure 50 signatures from registered voters to make them eligible for the April 5 election.

Seats up for election include:

- Board of Selectmen. Michael Sullivan has not indicated if he will seek reelection. Roger Hill has taken out papers for Sullivan's seat.
- Board of Assessors. Michael Patrolia, who is undecided on running for re-election;
- Board of Trustees for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Agnes McCann, Patience Towle and Carol Riley, who will all run for re-election;
- Board of Health. Maureen Chapman is undecided;
- Planning Board. Robert H. Sturdy will seek re-election;
- Recreation Commission. Richard Barrow will seek reelection
- Sewer Commission. Gary Vanderweil is not running;
- The Water Commission. John McNabb will seek another term.

Barrow to run again

After initially indicating he would step down, Richard Barrow has decided to run for another term on the Recreation Commission. Barrow, who has been on the commission for 27 years, said last week that he would not run again but was convinced otherwise by fellow commission members. Barrow said he would still consider stepping down if the right candidate joined the race. "I don't want to discourage a good candidate from running," he said.

Absentee ballots available for special town election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election on Jan. 25 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon on Friday, Jan. 24, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office; or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand-delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury, and mail or hand-deliver the application to the clerk's office.

Absentee ballots must be mailed by the voter him/herself. Returned ballots should be mailed, or can be hand-delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Jan. 25 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill-in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. Ballots can be inserted into the machine face-up, face-down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

For Voters with Physical Disabilities: If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your own vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with the Town Clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the poling place because of physical disability.

A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Nomination papers are available at Town Hall

Nomination papers for the Annual Town Election for 2003 are available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available for the 2003 Town Election:

- Selectmen — one for three years
- School Committee — two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library — three for three years
- Assessor — one for three years
- Board of Health — one for three years
- Cohasset Housing Authority — one for five years
- Planning Board — one for five years
- Recreation Commission — one for five years
- Sewer Commission — one for three years
- Water Commission — one for three years.

Friday, March 7 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 29, and for the Annual Town Election, Saturday, April 5.

Computer Take-Back Bill

Environmental activist John McNabb of Cohasset and Clean Water Action announced the refiling of the Computer Take-Back Bill, which if passed will help relieve the state budget crisis. The state legislation ties into the work of the national Computer Take Back Campaign (CTBC), a coordinated effort of state and national groups that has developed model legislation and will be organizing broad public support in 10 states nationally this year. The fourth annual report card showed that u.s. computer manufacturers are still lagging behind their European counterparts, who are reducing the toxicity of this waste and taking financial responsibility for its collection and recycling.

"Local governments are subsidizing the inefficient design practices of computer manufacturers, whose products are toxic and are costly to recycle," McNabb said. "Mass. cities and towns pay $6 to $21 million per year to collect and recycle used CRTs and computers. The state spends about $400,000 a year on programs to help the cities and towns with this waste.

"Computer manufacturers in Massachusetts, like their counterparts in Europe, should be required to pay for the collection and recycling of their products, to take this "unfunded mandate" off the backs of local government."

This year's Computer Report Card echoes last year's findings of substantial double standards within the computer industry. Companies that actively resist take-back requirements and hazardous material phase-outs in the U.S. operate in the European Union under rules requiring life cycle responsibility. U.S. customers still get second-class treatment from global computer manufacturers.

Raw data for the report card was obtained from the companies' Web sites and supplemented by follow-up surveys. Japanese firms continued to dominate the report card's environmental rankings, returning eight of the top 10 scores. Among U.S. firms, only IBM and Apple made the top 10. The report also documents that Europe and Japan are taking the lead internationally by passing laws that require take-back and recycling of obsolete products and the phase-out of lead, cadmium, mercury, brominated flame retardants and other highly toxic materials. The U.S. has no such laws and is in danger of become a computer pollution haven.

Cohasset wrestlers continue to rise against the creme of the crop

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High wrestling coach Torin Sweeney is known for putting his team up against the best competition around, even if it means taking a few extra regular season losses.

Sweeney has pitted his Division III Skippers against the likes of juggernauts BC High, Durfee and New Bedford this season. He feels that anything he can do to prepare his team for the post season tournaments will be well worth a blemished record.

The philosophy seems to be paying dividends, as the Skippers record fell to 8-3 this past Saturday, but not before showing they could compete evenly with Duxbury, one of the best teams in the area.

"Basically, all it comes down to is Sectionals and States," noted Sweeney, who has seen plenty of his wrestlers perform brilliantly at these tournaments over the years. "The only way to do well there is to go against some of the best opponents we can."

Duxbury edged Cohasset, 38-34, even though the teams split the 14 matches, 7-7. Duxbury merely had more pins than the Skippers (pins being worth six points and a decision win being worth three or four).

The match was close the entire way through, the Skippers even taking the lead at one point. However, Sweeney observed that the final score was the result of something slightly more mundane than actual wrestling talent, offering: "If we had won the coin toss, we would have won that match."

In wrestling matches, the team that wins the coin toss can select to declare what wrestler they will put forward in the even or

Lady hoopsters done in by Scituate's late game pressure

Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Implementing a ferocious full court defense and hitting some clutch free throws, the Scituate High girls basketball team fended off neighboring town rival Cohasset in the waning minutes, Saturday night at Cohasset, for a 52-46 win.

Scituate came out of the gates quick taking an early 6-0 lead with four minutes into the first half behind a well anticipated steal and finish from senior guard Christina Obert, who finished the game with seven points.

Led by senior captain Lindsay Grossman, who chipped in12 points for the game, and tenacious defense from La'Raine Langford, the Lady Skippers quickly pulled even with the Sailors, and with six minutes remaining in the half, the game was tied 11-11.

The first half ended on a flurry of baskets by both teams to end in a 22-22 deadlock.

The second half started off where the first half ended. Both teams traded baskets until Cohasset stretched its lead to 43-39 with 4:30 on the clock behind clutch outside shooting from junior guard Jenn Buckley — who had 11 second half points, 13 for the game.

Scituate then ripped off an 11-0 run, causing consecutive turnovers from Cohasset, to take the lead and eventually the game. Eight players scored for the Sailors in the second half, but it was their full court press as well as there free throw shooting in the last three minutes of the game that made the difference.

"We need to keep this effort up. We are playing with great teamwork and it paid off," noted second year coach Scott Gilmartin. "We got great free

Moral victory

Gutsy overtime loss for Cohasset boys a big building block

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Sigh...this came within inches of being a truly great story.

Cohasset's Chris Bilodeau had a chance to cap a dramatic come-from-behind effort in Carver, Monday night, when, after a steal inside the game's final five seconds, the star guard took the ball straight to the hole and created contact. The ref blew the whistle, but the foul call went Carver's way, sending the game into overtime tied at 56 all.

"I think that might have been one of those 50-50 calls that, if we were at home, we might have gotten," offered Cohasset boys basketball coach Ron Ford. "That's not a criticism of the refs at all, though. Both those guys who did the game are good refs, and they both called a good game. It's just that that was a very tough call to make that probably could have gone either way."

In the extra four minute period, the visiting Skippers, with just six bodies available with two out due to illness and another pair on the bench after fouling out, simply ran out of gas, and the host Crusaders walked away 73-62 winners..

"We lost the game but we won a morale victory," continued Ford. "This was a total gut check of a game, and my guys who were out there showed me there was something special in them."

Going into this game, few close observers of the South Shore League basketball scene would have given Cohasset much of a shot of comingout

Swim team cursed?

Cohasset-Scituate team endures a wide range of maladies

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Warning! Warning! Stay away from anyone associated with the Scituate-Cohasset swim team. This includes team members, swimmers, divers, coaches, assistant coaches, water boys, towel boys, and managers. The team is cursed.

Now, cursed is such a strong word. It seems like it might be a touch too strong for the situation. After all, being only mid-January, the winter season has grown just over a month old, not nearly as long as the several decades it took for our beloved Boston Red Sox to earn the title. But with cancellations, injuries, sicknesses and a bunch of other bizarre happenings, it seems that every day "cursed" is becoming more and more appropriate.

"This is the best darn team we've ever had," smiled coach Jamie Kearney, "but let's face it: we're cursed."

The hex started early in the season, when the team was heading for its first dual meet of the year, a Dec. 16 match-up against Cardinal Spellman. Just hours before the meet, Randolph, the host-town, was bombarded with snow, prompting the meet to be cancelled on the grounds of driving safety.

Not too bad, but it is always a bummer to miss the first meet of the year.

The next scheduled meet was set for Jan. 3, where the Sci-Cohs would visit another league opponent. This contest was also postponed due to inclement weather. Yet, there was not a single drop of snow the entire day locally, merely rain. Somehow, the meet was called off.

No more surprises

The word is now out: Cohasset hockey team is for real

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

OK, the surprises are over. After lopsided wins over Hull and purported league favorite Abington/East Bridgewater over the last week, the Cohasset hockey team is now clearly the team to beat in the South Shore League.

"I think it's safe to say we're going to be sneaking up on anyone anymore," said Cohasset rookie head coach John Blake, who took over a Skippers program in what many considered a rebuilding year. "We're playing well right now. The kids have faith in the system, and they're sticking to it. Plus, we've had some kids really step up their

Will's will perseveres

Sports world loses an icon, but local hoop star loses much more

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN

Will McDonough was "The Man" to anyone who ever aspired to great journalistic heights, but he was simply "grand dad" to Norwell hoops star Gerry Corcoran.

Will was talked about in reverent tones by sports fans everywhere as the man who'd been to every single NFL Super Bowl, but the appreciation he felt from his grandson for making every one of his basketball games he possibly could probably meant immeasurably more to him.

"When he was home, he was almost always there," said Gerry. "I really liked having him there. It meant a lot to me that he made the time, and I think it meant a lot to him too."

Unfortunately, Grampa Will will not be there to watch when Gerry becomes Norwell High's all-time leading scorer within the next few weeks, nor when he surpasses the 2,000-point barrier not long thereafter, nor when the Norwell boys basketball team (currently 6-0) begins another run into the state tourney.

Will McDonough, as no doubt anyone who would pick up a sports section such as this one well knows, succumbed suddenly to a heart attack at his Hingham home Thursday evening.

"It's sad; I think about him not being there anymore," said Gerry, a Norwell High senior. "But he was there for my last home game (versus Mashpee last Tuesday when Gerry scored a game high 16 points). I'm happy about that."

Will handled his celebrity status with ease and grace, in much the same manner Gerry – a clearly gifted 6-foot-5 athlete and hoopster who began hearing overtures from Div. 1 college recruiters as early as his sophomore season – seems to laugh off much of the attention he's received. Apparently, it was an inherited trait.

"My grandfather never really talked about those kinds of things," said Gerry, who recently announced that he was putting all college suitors on hold in order to do one year of Prep school. "We just had a regular grandfather-grandson relationship, I think. If I ever needed anything, all I had to do was ask, and he'd be the first one to help."

Naturally, Gerry was not in school Friday. He was, however, on the Carver High court with his teammates that night, playing a big role in the 73-46 win over the South Shore League rival Crusaders, pouring in 20 points in the blowout before taking an early seat on the bench.

"I didn't want to let my teammates down," said Gerry. "I just wanted to play."

Assessed Gerry's coach, John Willis: "I think Gerry just wanted an outlet from all that he was going through at the time. Sports can be good for that. He played hard. He rebounded well. He passed well. He defended very well. And, of course, he scored a lot. He was into the game."

Willis told Gerry by phone on Friday that he should not worry about the Carver game, but the veteran coach could tell by the time he got off the phone how important it was to Gerry that he be there.

"There are a lot of things more important than high school basketball, and this kind of is obviously placed way above that. Gerry was very close to Will. But I think Gerry realized his grandfather would have wanted him to play. Will loved watching Gerry play, and I'm sure that's part of what Gerry was thinking.

"It was hard to play, but I knew that's what my grandfather would have wanted," Gerry confirmed.

Several news stations and reporters turned out to see Gerry play and to talk to him afterwards. Coach Willis did not know how Gerry would respond to this, but he reports, as has so often been the case in the past, his star left him both surprised and very proud.

"There was a lot of pressure on Gerry in that game and a lot on his mind, but he handled it like a champ, and like someone far beyond his years," said Willis. "I think that somewhere it put a smile on Will's face."

throw shooting from Sarah Frasca down the stretch as well as good rebounding and defense from Kate Carlezon, Christina Obert and Suzanne Belmont. Kelly Chase also did a great job controlling the tempo at the guard position for us all game."

Cohasset girl's basketball coach Ellen Carr acknowledged the Scituate press in the final minutes as something the team needs to work better against.

"We just needed to communicate better," said Carr. "Scituate really goes no holds bar with their press and it was very tough for us to go against."

Scituate, who has won two of their last three, bettered their overall record to 3-6 with the win, while Cohasset, which also lost to Abington on Friday night, drops to 3-6 on the season

Scituate plays next tomorrow night at home versus Duxbury while Cohasset plays next at home versus Harwich.

HOOP NOTES

It was a tough weekend of basketball for the Cohasset Lady Skippers on paper, as they dropped their third in a row to Carver on Monday night, 63-55, but there were some encouraging signs, to say the least. The loss to Carver, who many see as a top team in the South Shore League, was a step backward in the standings but one forward by the team.

Facing newly crowned 1,000 point scorer Megan Jesse of Carver, the girls from Cohasset never backed down. Utilizing a newly invigorated post game led by Danielle Pinkus and her team leading 13 points, Cohasset pulled within four with under 2:00 left in the game. Carver pulled out the victory, but close losses to both Scituate and Carver should give the Cohasset squad something to build on in the coming weeks.

Swim team cursed?

"The first meet was understandable; nobody would have wanted to drive to Randolph in that weather," reported senior captain Bryan Bilton. "But the second meet? That was ridiculous. No one knows why that one was cancelled."

On Jan. 6, the team managed to make it to their first meet, only this time there actually was snow. Tons of it. In fact, the snow was so bad, the roads could hardly be seen out of the bus windows. The team vehicle, hampered by precipitation and poor driving directions, took nearly three hours to reach the Cape Cod destination of Nauset after twice getting lost.

Furthermore, the Sci-Coh's coach was unable to attend the meet because of a freak accident that occurred earlier the same day. Also, Cohasset's top swimmer could not compete because his alarm clock did not sound, leaving him a victim of CHS's newly implemented tardiness policy.

The Sci-Coh's had yet another meet postponed this past Tuesday, as Barnstable was unable to reserve its home pool, even though the date and time of the match had been scheduled months ago at a preseason meeting of Athletic Directors.

With all the cancellations, the team will need to re-schedule meets for the end of January, possibly as many as four in a single week. The winter season officially began 53 days ago, and the team has a record of 0-1. Some higher power simply must be working against them.

And the curse actually goes beyond mere meet cancellations. The team has been hit with the recent sickness going around, leaving practices very poorly attended. For one practice, the bus driver just forgot to show up, leaving thirty students of Cohasset and Scituate High stranded at their respective schools. The weight room that Scituate High promised Kearney would be operating before the start of the season still stands as an empty room with nothing but mats on the floor.

Winter can be an unpleasant time, but having an albatross nose-diving into the team's practice water has made things infinitely worse.

Oh no! I just remembered, the Sci-Cohs are supposed to travel to Nantucket this Saturday. If they can't even get a bus to a meet, how is a team as cursed as this one expected to take a boat?

of Carver with anything other than a loss, and that was before it became known that starting power Ben Lynner and invaluable sixth man Ross Lieb-Lappen were out of commission with the flu. This dropped the total of available players for Ford down to eight.

However, with 5-foot-10 John Andrade moving into the starting lineup and svelte 6-foot-2 swingman Ian Kidder stepping up into the 6-foot-2, 200-pound Lynner's starting power forward spot, the Skippers somehow found a way to take an early lead and maintain it through the game's 16-minute mark, taking a 28-26 edge into the locker room.

Juniors Bilodeau and Sean Connelly (each with 21 points for the game) paced the surprising first half output for the Skippers — the former from the outside, the latter on the inside. Bilodeau, who leads the team in scoring, played all 36 minutes and chipped in with five assists and three boards.

"Chris made the commitment to getting himself into great shape before the season, and it's been a big boost for us," said Ford. "He's a tough guy to take off the floor with everything he does well, and it's nice to know we don't necessarily have to."

Connelly, the team's only player standing over 6-foot-2 (he's 6-4), fouled out of the game at the beginning of the overtime period with 15 points.

"Sean played a great game at both ends and on the inside," said Ford. "With Ben and Ross out, we were really thin on the inside, but he stepped up big."

The veteran coach also had praise for the job done in the paint by the undersized Kidder (seven points) and junior reserve Dan Tarpey, who had two point and three rebounds in a strong first half stint.

Not long after the start of the second half, the host Crusaders went on a 16-4 run and stretched a lead to double digits, and advantage they held right up inside the final four minutes with a score of 56-44.

But that's when the Cohasset defense that had been extremely aggressive all game – led on the perimeter by Andrade (eight points) and Krupczak (three points) – was turned completely loose. A swarming press in the last three minutes forced one Carver turnover after another, and that gave birth to a dramatic game closing 12-0 run, capped off when Bilodeau fed Connelly in the lane for a quick lay-in with 30 seconds left on the game clock, tying the game at 56-56.

"With a short bench, we couldn't really use that press too much early on," said Ford. "I didn't want to wear the kids out, and we didn't have the fouls to give. But we went for broke in the last three or four minutes, and the kids just left it all out on the court.

"They were tired and it almost would have been understandable if they'd let down a little at that point, but there was no quit in any of them. I can't say enough about the effort I saw there at the end, and really all game.

Carver never got its final shot off, as a steal in the Skippers end in the waning seconds led to Bilodeau's fateful drive.

"Chris did exactly what he should have on that play," insisted Ford. "You take it in strong and look for the best shot or to draw the foul. I'd tell him to do just what he did in that situation 100 out of 100 times."

Connelly picked up his fifth an final foul early in the extra period, joining Kidder (who'd also fouled out) on the bench for good. The Skippers scored the first two points of OT, but then Carver scored the next eight, and that was pretty much all she wrote.

"Our kids just had nothing left at that point," said Ford. "If we'd had Lynner and/or Ross, I think this would've been a different outcome. But win or lose, this was definitely one we can build on."

At least that's what the coach is hoping. With the loss, the Skippers dropped to 2-6 on the season (0-4 in SSL play) and in clear danger of falling out of the postseason hunt.

The Cohasset boys must now go no worse than 8-4 over the remaining 12 games to avoid a second consecutive season without qualifying for playoff action, and that includes one time more against each of the SSL teams they've already lost to, and two apiece against league foes Hull (3-3) and Harwich (6-1).

"We can't look at it that way, though," insists Ford. "We can only worry about trying to play better basketball. If we do that, hopefully the wins will come. Hopefully, we'll get a little luck going our way too. So far we've definitely been a little snakebitten."

The Skippers will look to take a couple of big steps in right direction over the next two days with their annual getaway weekend. Tomorrow night, the Skippers venture to the far end of the Cape to take on Harwich (6:30 p.m.). The Cohasset hoops contingent will then go out for a team dinner, spend the night in a Yarmouth Hotel, and catch an early ferry the next morning for a game in Nantucket (JVs 11:45 a.m., varsity 1:15).

"This is a good trip that can pull the team together," said Ford. "We enjoyed it a lot last year, and I'm looking forward to it this year too. This is a good group of kids that all seem to get along."

MAXLAX REPORT

Game of the Week: U14 Bears edge Stingrays, 14-13

It certainly didn't take long to get back into the swing of things as the first weekend of games picked up right where they left off - GREAT entertainment, back and forth action, and some fantastic individual and team efforts. This game also put the U14 Division on notice that the newcomers, the Stingrays are for real.

This one got started quickly with both teams coming out on fire and trading goals in the opening minutes. Ryan Donovan teamed up with Dan Ferzoco to draw first blood for the "new" team while veteran Jake Minevitz teamed up with Ray Dupras to put the Bears on the board. Andrew "AJ" Johnson got his day off to great start as he found a seam in the defense and slipped in to take a perfect pass on the run and one-timed it into the back of the net.

Mike Rice tied it at two a piece with a rocket from the top of the box, and the "games were on . . ."

The next eight minutes of play were a see-saw of one-upmanship, with each team scoring in response to the other until the first half ended with the Bears up 10-9. The Bears attack featured a MaxLax first, with three separate players getting first period hat tricks — Johnson, Minevitz, and Jake Day (who had four points).

The Stingrays went back to the scoring machines of Donovan, who had his own hat trick (plus an assist), and Rice, who added five more scores (for six points in the initial 20 minutes of play).

After a charged discussion about "defense" on both benches during the break, the game took a decidedly different personality as the two groups focused their considerable skills on stopping the scoring of the other in what became a battle of the wills (and the brawn) throughout the second half.

Still, offensive juggernauts are a hard thing to stop and neither team was resting on their heels. Rice scored again on an end-to-end rush off of a loose ball situation that was created by a stinging Warren Sapp-like hit.

After winning the next face-off, Rice found Donovan alone in the corner of the goal, and he made a quick inside roll to dodge through traffic and put the Rays up by one.

Minevitz then created his own loose ball opportunity by picking the pocket of Rice, and he then rang the bell to bring it back to even at 11-11.

The Rays then took the momentum on two unanswered goals, the first by Ferzoco on a no look keeper coming from behind the net and then on a Ferzoco assist to Rice on a clean give-and-go from 20 feet out.

With time beginning to become a factor, both goalies stood tall in the cage and fought off a number of close shots to keep the Stingrays ahead.

However, AJ slipped one past the goalie when he pretended to take the ball behind and then Day found AJ again on a defensive mismatch that left him with an easy one-on-one that tied it up again.

The S-rays had a flurry of shots on goal, but the only one that would ultimately count was the one that got away, as Dupras scooped and cleared the ball to a charging Minevitz who capped off a great performance and the win, with a laser to the lower corner.

PLAYER(s) of the GAME: Mike Rice - STINGRAYS - Though in a losing effort, 8G/1A ain't too shabby!, Andrew Johnson, Jake Minevitz, Jake Day - BEARS - the first half HAT TRICK TRIO.

PLAY OF THE WEEK: TALONS v PANTHERS - Did you see this one ?

With the TALONS controlling the tempo of the game (and picking up right where these MaxLax Champions finished off last season), the players started to get a little creative as demonstrated by Zack Gray's "gorgeous" behind the back shot into the lower left-hand corner. It looked like a Rich Gannon fake as no one saw it coming until it was too late to do anything about it. You don't see this one very often . . .

games."

A 6-0 win over Hull on Saturday made three in a row for the Skippers and lifted their season record over .500 for the first time in the Blake Era at 4-3. More importantly, the three wins have come against league opponents, leaving the Skippers as the only unbeaten team in the SSL.

"With the wins over Abington and Norwell (4-1, on Jan. 4), I guess we've established ourselves as the team to beat in the South Shore League," continued Blake. "It's a good position to be in, but we can't get carried away with it. There's still la lot of hockey to be played, and I'm sure we're going to have teams gunning for us now, and really getting up to play us."

The 4-1 win over Ab/EB last Wednesday at Pilgrim came as a surprise to many, as the Green Wave returned the bulk of its state tourney qualifying team from a year ago, while Cohasset was absolutely decimated by graduation and transfer.

"I honestly thought we matched up pretty well with Abington going into the game," insisted Blake, who looked at common opponents to reach this conclusion. "We'd both lost to Rockland, and they'd lost to Blue Hills pretty big, while we hung in with them (3-2). I think we felt pretty good going in, based on that. Our kids pretty much ignored the press, and just went out and played their game."

Both team's entered the game unbeaten in league play and coming off big wins over Norwell, the other purported contender for the league crown. However, Cohasset seized control quickly, taking a 2-0 lead on goals by junior defenseman Mike Devine and senior captain John Durkin before the game was 11 minutes old.

Abington's John Dion narrowed the deficit to 2-1 with a tally 1:33 before the first break, but Cohasset got their two goal bulge back in the second when Durkin returned the favor on a first period assist from fellow captain Matt Davis, setting Davis up for the tally that made it 3-1.

Cohasset freshman forward Matt O'Connell scored his second goal of the season in the third period to wrap up the scoring at 4-1.

"I think the key to our success lately has been our defensive zone coverage," said Blake, whose team has now allowed just two goals in three league games. "The kids have come a long way with that part of the game. We've hammered it home in practice, and I think they're seeing for themselves now that the system works. That's where winning really helps. It feeds on itself."

There was little drama on Saturday night at Pilgrim Arena, as Hull had absolutely no answer for the top line of Davis (goal, two assists), Durkin (goal, two assists) and freshman Mark Bouchard (goal).

The third team captain, Tom Anderson, also scored, as did Devine and junior winger Mike Rasmussen.

The Devine goal was truly a thing of beauty, the junior blueliner going end-to-end and in-and-out of traffic to finally put it home with a nifty deke and finish.

Cohasset captain Tom Anderson crashes into an opposing goaltender in recent action.

"I've told Mike he can do that when he picks his moments, but I also told him not to wear himself out," said Blake with a laugh. "He's too valuable on defense, and we're going to need him out there every other shift, so we want him to stay fresh."

Freshman goalie Stefan Parnell and sophomore Brendan Michaud combined for the shutout between the pipes, as fast rising standout Parnell gave way to Michaud midway through the second period.

"Stefan just gets better and better every game out, and that's been a big part of our success," said Blake. "I can't say enough about how far he's come in so short a time."

Michaud was slated to get the start in goal last night with Mashpee, which lost to Hull earlier this month, coming to town.

The Skippers might well get another test from Harwich-Provincetown, who beat Norwell 1-0 this past Saturday, on Saturday at Pilgrim (7:20 start), but that will merely be a preview for Monday's Martin Luther King Day 12:40 matinee at Pilgrim against Scituate (7-1-1), the second ranked Div. 3 team in Eastern Mass who took Cohasset down in the Dec. 14 season opener, 5-3.

"That will be a real good game for seeing how far we've come as a team," said Blake. "There's no doubt Scituate was the better team the first time around, but we've come a long way since then. I think it will be an interesting game to watch."

Cohasset wrestlers continue to rise

the odd matches. Duxbury opted to declare first in all the even matches, a wise move as they were able to avoid two of Cohasset's top wrestlers.

In essence, the Dragons were able to strategize around "wasting" some of their top athletes against those of their opposition. Also, the Skippers ended up forfeiting the 160 pound class (and adding six points to Duxbury's total), something they might not have done if they could have declared first.

Still, Duxbury did take the match fairly. Sweeney did not seem to emote any feelings of sour grapes toward the victors.

"They are in the top five of Division three," said the veteran coach. "We are probably in the top ten."

The Skippers controlled the lighter weight classes, winning six of the lightest seven classes, the only loss coming from freshman Dave McKenna at 119.

Senior Dave Kupsc took 103 by a pin, while sophomore up-and-comer Jon Littauer had another pin at 112. After the McKenna loss, sophomore Joey Kehoe and senior Phil Strazzulla rattled off decision-wins at 125 and 130.

Seniors Terry Baroudi (pin at 135) and Chris McKenna (145) followed with wins that gave their team its only lead of the day. Sophomore Matt Baroudi, usually a wrestler in the 215 class, won after being bumped up to heavyweight for the match.

Cohasset will have another crack at Duxbury this Saturday, when the Skippers host an 11-team tournament. The teams to watch will include this rematch, along with local powers Rockland and Hingham vying for the tournament title.

The bracket will start at 10 a.m. on Saturday in Cohasset High School, with the championships being held at 5 p.m. the same day.

Cohasset will not be the only team looking for redemption at the tournament. Rockland was the team the Skippers beat in the final regular season meet last year to steal the Patriot League title away from the Bulldogs.

"We have definitely carried that momentum into this year," stated Sweeney. "[Cohasset] is a good dual meet team because everyone really knows their role."

SPORTS NOTES

Registration for youth lacrosse set for Jan. 4

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will hold its sign-up for the spring season on Saturday, Jan. 4 from 9 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

This will be the only day to register. Spaces are limited at all age levels; while Cohasset Youth Lacrosse endeavors to accept everyone who files their paperwork on registration day, the program has had to turn children away at some age levels in each of the last four seasons.

Registrations will be taken for both boys and girls in the 14 & Under (7th and 8th graders) and 12 & Under (5th and 6th grades) age groups. At the 10 & Under level (grades 3-4), Cohasset will field teams for boys and sponsor a weekly skills-development clinic for girls.

The youth lacrosse program is dedicated to introducing children to the sport. All players receive roughly equal playing time regardless of ability. Cohasset participates in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program, which does not keep standings or have playoffs. Every team makes several road trips per year, which be as close as games in Scituate or as far away as Martha's Vineyard.

In addition, there will be end-of-season jamborees for both the boys and girls.

The youth program may field as many as 10 teams this spring, depending on demand and available coaching. In spite of that expansion, roster spots at all levels will be limited and it is possible that some youngsters will be turned away.

Parents who can not attend the Jan. 4 registration can contact Jaffe by e-mail at CAJaffe@aol.com in sufficient time to have registration materials mailed and returned prior to Jan. 5. Include your name, address and the number of children being registered.

The registration fee is $125, which includes a uniform and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes mandatory insurance coverage and a subscription to a magazine especially designed for kids. Cohasset Youth Lacrosse does offer a discount to families signing up two or more children.

Late registrations, if roster spots are available, will cost $200.

Registration for the 10-and-Under girls clinic will cost $80.

The program is limited to Cohasset residents. At the 14 & Under level, players can sign up for the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program regardless of whether they are active on Cohasset's Middle School teams, or if they play on the team of a private school.

In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. The spring practice schedule has not yet been set. The teams will begin practicing in early March — indoor practice time has been scheduled — and start playing games in April. The season concludes in mid-June.

In addition to players, the program is looking for additional coaches at all levels.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; at all levels for boys, practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all boys must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces. Hockey helmets are not allowed, although hockey arm and shoulder pads are (hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick).

The girls game has less contact, but practices will be every bit as physical and demanding as for the boys. All girls must be equipped with sticks, mouthpieces and approved goggles.

There will be more information on the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program available at the Jan. 5 sign-up. If you need more information, or are interested in volunteering to coach, contact Jaffe at 781-383-9858 or CAJaffe@aol.com.

Gymnasts win two

Bixby paces Coh-Nor squad to 5-1 record

Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset/Norwell girl's gymnastics team improved to 5-1 overall, 4-1 in league play with a 125.6-115.9 win over Carver Tuesday night. The squad also won last Thursday over league rival Duxbury 131.3-106.9.

In last Thursday's meet with Duxbury the Skipper gymnasts were led by Meredith Bixby, who scored an 8.9 on the floor, 8.7 on the balance beam, 8.5 on the vault and an 8.4 on the uneven bars.

Teamate Nancy Durkin, also from Cohasset High, took second in the all-around with a combined score of 32.7 in the meet with Duxbury.

The girls will meet next tonight at home versus the Plymouth North/South squad.

Carriage House Nursery School open house

The Carriage House Nursery School is having an open house on Saturday, Feb. 1 from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. Parents and children are invited to come and meet the teachers. Explore the classroom with your three-to-five year old(s). Open house will be held at The Parish House, 23 North Main St.

Applications are available and must be completed and returned to the school by Feb. 10. A $30 registration must accompany our completed registration form.

Nursery school registration is based on a lottery system. The lottery will be drawn the week of Feb. 17.

If you cannot attend the open house, please call the school at 781-383-9785 and other arrangements will be made for you to visit the school and obtain an application.

The young three-year-old program is for children who are 2.9 in September; the older three-year-old program is for older threes and younger fours; and the Pre-K program is for children who will be four by Sept. 1.

Please direct your questions to the Director, Georgie Gladdys at 781-383-9785. The Carriage House School is licensed by the Office of Childcare Services and currently pursuing NAEYC accreditation.

SSCC Nursery School

The South Shore Community Center Nursery School announces nursery school applications for the 2003-04 school year will be available Tuesday, Jan. 21 at the Nursery School and the Community Center offices.

The registration process is based on a lottery system. Applications will be available until Jan. 28. All applications are due back to the nursery school office by Jan. 29 at 3 p.m.

Included in the envelope should be a copy of the child's birth certificate and a $100 registration fee. Application envelopes should be clearly marked "Nursery School Registration."

The lottery will be drawn the week of Feb. 4 and acceptance letters will be sent via mail the following week. Any child who does not get a placement in the program will have their registration fee returned.

Call Sheila O'Neil at 781-383-0036 for more information.

Sandcastles signups

SandCastles ChiidCare Center, a preschool and private kindergarten, is conducting open enrollment for its pre-school, pre-K and private kindergarten and summer camp programs.

An open house is planned for Jan. 21, for SandCastles serving children eight weeks to six years old.

Easy fishing in 'hard water'

Rec ice fishing course Saturday

By Justin Graeber
CORRESPONDENT

Every winter, throngs of ice-fishing devotees take to the ice, or as the pros call it, "the hard water."

For those curious about this unique sport, the Cohasset Recreation Department will conduct an ice fishing course at Island Creek Pond in Duxbury on Sunday, Jan. 19.

The course will be run by Paul Bruce of Duxbury, who has extensive experience with ice fishing.

According to the Rec Department, a previous group taught by Bruce boasted a catch of 15 pickerel and three bass in the span of three hours.

"In 15 minutes I can teach participants to be the best ice fishermen they can be," he said.

Bruce also teaches private ice fishing lessons and runs striped bass and bluefish clinics around the Duxbury area. Ice fishing is a fun hobby, but it is also one that takes place in wintry conditions that can be dangerous if the fisherman is not prepared. Here are a few tips from the National Ice Fishing Association's Web site: Dress warmly with winter boots and warm socks, gloves, and a hat. Before venturing out onto the ice, check to make sure it is at least four inches thick. Also, you should always ice fish with a buddy, or near other people.

The Ice Fishing course will be held Sunday, Jan. 19 from 9:55-11:55 a.m.. No ice skates are allowed. The course fee is $34 per participant — all equipment is included. Space is limited. Call the Cohasset Recreation Department at (781) 383-4109 to register or for more information.

Student, faculty exhibit at art center

The South Shore Art Center will showcase the artwork of students who have taken classes and workshops at the Center throughout the year. All students participating in SSAC courses and workshops were invited to submit one piece for this winter exhibition. The show will augment the January faculty show — Who's Who: South Shore Art Center Faculty Artists, and continues through Feb. 23. Both exhibitions will afford viewers a convenient opportunity to view the artwork of students and faculty and at the same time register for a winter art class or workshop. Registrations are still being accepted for courses for adults and children to begin the second and third week in January. If your New Year's resolutions included a creative focus...the South Shore Art Center can send you on your way. For more information visit www.ssac.org or to register call 781-383-2787.

Playground benefit dinner dance Feb. 8

"Love Around the World," a benefit dinner dance, will be held at the Red Lion Barn, 71 S. Main St., Cohasset, February 8 from 7 p.m. 'til midnight.

Proceeds will benefit the playground at Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum, which will open later this year. The museum will occupy a two-story wing at the back of the new Paul Pratt Library at the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road.

The playground is currently being designed under the aegis of the same non-profit group that is raising money for the children's museum.

"Love Around the World" will feature a buffet dinner and dancing to the sounds of the Mike Dumas Band with Platform Soul. The evening will also include a live auction.

Tickets are $75 each. For reservations or further information, call Logan Bernstein at 781-383-6165.

Arts and crafts

Arts & Crafts for grades K to 3 will be held from 3 to 4:30 p.m. on Mondays or Tuesdays, and will be held at the Joseph P. Osgood School.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $48 per child. Programs will be held on both Mondays and Tuesdays, and are scheduled to begin Tuesday, Jan. 29, and Monday, Feb. 3. You may register for either one of the two days, but not both.

For more information, details and registration call the Recreation office at 781-383-4109.

Books cook program

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for grades 1 and 2 Books Cook program by calling 781-383-4109.

Once Upon a Recipe is for grades 1 and 2 and will be held from 3:15 to 4:45 p.m. on Wednesdays, and will be held at the Joseph P. Osgood School. Children will enjoy making bread Boas after reading "The Day Jimmy's Boa Ate the Wash" or making candy houses after reading "Hansel and Gretel," as example.

The program will be five weeks in duration, costing $55 per child. Programs are scheduled to begin in late January on Wednesdays right after school until 4:30 p.m.. Each week will feature different books and cooking.

For more information details and registration, call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 781- 383-4109.

Police arrested 11 in December

December was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 11 arrests, one for Larceny over $250, one for Protective Custody, two for Possession of a Controlled Substance, four for Minor in Possession of Liquor, one for Assault and Battery, and finally two for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, Police Chief Robert Jackson said.

During the month of December the police department investigated 14 motor vehicle accidents. One of which resulted in personal injury. There were 127 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $4,370 in fines. Additionally, there were 131. Parking Tickets issued for $3,775 in fines.

Also in December our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 943 calls for police services, of those 123 were emergency 911 calls.

In the month of December there were two breaking and enterings of a business.

During the month of December Officer Paul Wilson and William English Jr. graduated from a 21-week Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council Police Academy and began field training with the department. In addition, Francis Yannizzi Jr., a 17 year Hull Police Department veteran, transferred to the Cohasset Police Department.

Finally in December the Cohasset Police Department was awarded a $20,500 grant from the Executive Office of Public Safety to purchase Anti-Terrorism Equipment, Jackson said.

The Hall is alive with the sound of music

Tickets on sale this week for spring concert series

The public is invited to attend an open house at the newly renovated Plymouth Memorial Hall at 83 Court Street (Route 3A) in Plymouth, MA, from noon to 4 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 18. Visitors will have first choice of seating and enjoy a $3 discount on tickets for the "Spring Concert Series" which features Beatlemania, Three Irish Tenors, Bo Diddley, Eddie Money, The Temptation Revue, America, and more. The open house will also feature tours, refreshments and balloons for the kids.

Regular-priced tickets will commence Monday, Jan. 20. At that time, tickets will be available on the Internet at www.ticketweb.com, by telephone to TicketWeb via toll free 866-468-7619 (all major credit cards are accepted), in person at Loretta LaRoche & Company, 50 Court Street, Route 3A, Plymouth, MA from 10 a.m. — 2 p.m., Monday through Friday, and at Plymouth Memorial Hall on the night of the performance as available. The following performers will play at Memorial Hall:

BONNIE RIDEOUT – Saturday, Feb. 22

The three-time U.S. National Scottish Fiddle Champion has won numerous music awards and appeared at the Kennedy Center in Washington DC. She will be joined by Jerry O'Sullivan, whose work on the bagpipe was seen in the film "Braveheart" an in concert with Dolly Parton and Sinead O'Connor.

AMERICA – Friday, Feb. 28

Founding members Gerry Beckley and Dewey Bunnell have kept the folk-rock tradition of America alive with such FM classics as "Horse With No Name," "Tin Man," "Ventura Highway," and many other great hits.

THE PENDRAGONS – Saturday, March 1

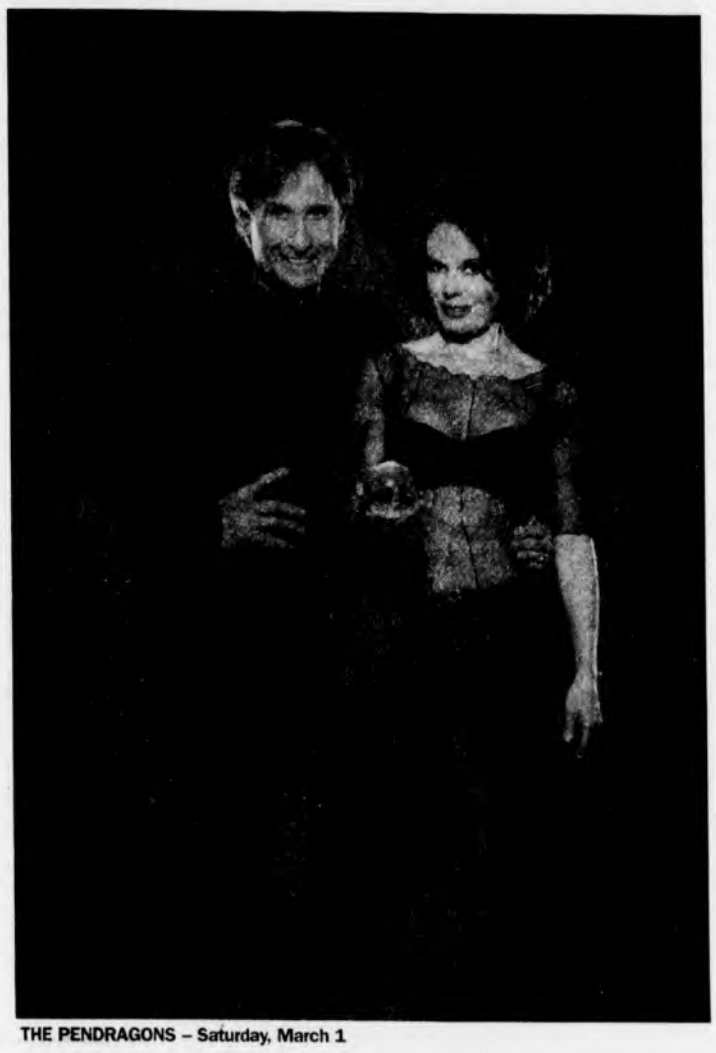
David Copperfield has called the husband and wife team of The Pendragons "One of magic's most creative performers," and audiences from Presidents to Kings have agreed. Constantly working on new and amazing illusions, audiences will gasp at the wizardy of The Pendragons, and come to realize why Seigfried and Roy have simply labeled them "Genius."

LOU RAWLS – Thursday, March 6

Three-time Grammy winner brings his silky smooth style to the Plymouth Memorial Hall stage with such chart-topping hits as "A Natural Man," "Let Me Be Good To You," "Tobacco Road," and the classic "You'll Never Find Another Love Like Mine."

THE THREE IRISH TENORS – Friday, March 14

Three of Irelands leading tenors: Claran Nagle of "Riverdance," Anthony Norton and Paul Byrom, will charm audiences with their splendid renditions of such haunting songs as "Danny Boy and "Galway Bay." They will be joined by Jaqueline Whelan, one of Ireland's leading sopranos.



THE PENDRAGONS – Saturday, March 1

THE KINGSTON TRIO with special guest TOM PAXTON – Saturday, March 15

Now celebrating 45 years in the business, these legends of folk –founding member Bob Shane, and longtime members George Grove and Bobby Haworth –continue to delight audiences with such folk anthems as "Tom Dooley," "A Worried Man" and the local favorite, "Charlie on the MTA." Joining the KT will be Tom Paxton, one of the most beloved songwriters of his generation to emerge from the Greenwich Village folk scene.

THE PUMMILLS – Friday, March 21

Four talented women, four grand pianos, one night of outstanding music as these four ladies dazzle the audience with songs ranging from Bach to Broadway.

Eddie Money remains one the most popular rock performers of the past 25 years, and his hits – "Two Tickets to Paradise," "Baby Hold On," "Take Me Home Tonight" – are still staples on the FM classic rock stations. Opening for Eddie will be a special acoustic solo performance by Men at Work lead singer Colin Hay, bringing new renditions of his hit songs, "Down Under" "It's A Mistake" and many others.

MARK WILLS & BLAKE SHELTON – Friday, March 28

Two of the hottest young stars on today's country circuit together on one stage, each with their own band. You've seen their videos on CMT and enjoyed their music on the country radio stations, now see in person why Mark Wills' "Nineteen Something" and Blake Shelton's "The Baby" are both currently top-10 songs on the Billboard Country Charts.

VONDA SHEPARD – Saturday, March 29

VONDA SHEPARD – Saturday, March 29

America has known her for years as the frequent co-star on the hit TV show "Ally McBeal," but Vonda's musical talents transcend the picture tube. Along with working with Chaka Kahn, Al Jarreau, Jackson Browne and others, her albums have been consistent winners, and her latest, "Chinatown," is moving fast up the charts.

BO DIDDLEY with special guest star BUDDY MILES – Saturday, April 5

For four decades, this Rock & Roll Hall of Famer has inspired such legends as Buddy Holly, The Rolling Stones and The Beatles. The famed "Bo Diddley beat" is one of the heartbeats of rock and roll, and time has done nothing to slow down the legend who asked us "Who Do You Love?" Opening for Bo Diddley will be Buddy Miles, the acclaimed drummer on albums by everyone from Muddy Waters to Jimi Hendrix, with whom he formed the group, "Band of Gypsys."

THE TEMPTATIONS REVUE with DENNIS EDWARDS – Friday, April 11

When Dennis Edwards took over as lead singer for The Temptations in the late-1960s, the result was a string of great hits – "Cloud Nine," "Papa Was A Rolling Stone," "Just My Imagination," "Ball of Confusion," and many others. All these songs will be featured in this great show, along with such Temptations' favorites as "My Girl"

TOM CHAPIN (Special school vacation week show) – Wednesday, April 23

Families will be delighted as folk singer Tom Chapin (brother of Harry Chapin) entertains the small ones with his great guitar playing and story-telling. Tom's children's recordings are aimed at kids 4-11 and have been recognized by awards from numerous parent's associations.

BEATLEMANIA-LIVE! – Saturday, April 26

This is about as close as you'll come to seeing The Beatles in concert. Performing over 30 Beatles songs – played live and note for note – and utilizing three full costume changes and period instruments, Beatlemania-LIVE! will have you dancing in the aisles. A splendid time is guaranteed for all!

TAYLOR DAYNE – Saturday, May 17

One of music's most dynamic live performers, Taylor Dayne ruled the dance charts in the 1990s, with two double-platinum albums and eight Top-10 hits, including the irresistible "Planet Love,' "Tell It To My Heart,' "With Every Beat of My Heart" and "I'll Always Love You."

After a recent $7 million renovation, Plymouth Memorial Hall has been transformed into a performing arts center with seating for 1,400. The building, erected in 1924, is now fully handicapped accessible. Memorial Hall's operations are currently managed by the Radisson Hotel Plymouth Harbor.

Regular-priced ticket sales will commence Monday, Jan. 20. At that time, tickets will be available on the Internet at www.ticketweb.com, by telephone o TicketWeb via toll free 866-468-7619 (all major credit cards are accepted), in person at Loretta LaRoche & Company, 50 Court Street, Route 3A, Plymouth, MA from 10 a.m. — 2 p.m., Monday through Friday, and at Plymouth Memorial Hall, 83 Court Street (Rte. 3A), on the night of the performance as available.

BEATLEMANIA-LIVE! – Saturday, April 26

"Some Like It Hot" brings Curtis to the stage

The American Film Institute doesn't mince words when it comes to the 1959 feature film "Some Like It Hot." The highly respected AFI simply calls it the best comedy ever made. Under Billy Wilder's direction, Tony Curtis and Jack Lemmon play two musicians who witness the 1929 St. Valentine's Day Massacre and are then left to run from the Mob while disguised as "Josephine" and "Daphne," the homeliest members of an all-girl jazz band en route to Miami.

In the film, Curtis portrayed one of the "on-the-run" musicians who tries to woo and win the affections of a band singer memorably played by Marilyn Monroe.

Tony Curtis in "Some Like It Hot."

More than 40 years after the film's release, Curtis is now starring in a national tour of a musical comedy stage version of "Some Like It Hot," a reworking of the 1972 Broadway musical "Sugar," at Boston's Wang Theatre through Sunday. No longer age appropriate to play one of the show's male —or even female — leads, this time around Curtis tackles the role of Osgood Fielding III, an "on-the-make" senior with romantic designs on "Daphne."

As a film actor, Curtis has some 120 features to his credit including "Sweet Smell of Success" (1957), "The Defiant Ones" (1958), "Spartacus" (1960) and "The Boston Strangler" (1968). Curtis is making his musical theater debut with "Some Like It Hot," topplining a 30-member company in the show written by Peter Stone, with music by Jule Styne and lyrics by Bob Merrill, and being directed on tour by Dan Siretta.

Tony Curtis will star in "Some Like It Hot," through Jan. 19, at the Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont Street, Boston. For tickets, visit the box office or call 1-800-447-7400.

'9/11 Portfolio' on display at Thayer Academy Art Gallery

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The tragic events of September 11, 2001 have seen no shortage of responses from the artistic community over the last year and a half. Like the ongoing news coverage and analysis, these are attempts to make sense of what was previously unthinkable and still hard to fathom.

Charles Guiliano, an East Boston artist, photographer and professor of art history and humanities at Suffolk University, is one more member of the arts community who is trying to make sense and also offer a deeper perspective in his current ongoing project, "9/11 Portfolio," a collection of photos, photo collages and other images

Dressing up mashed potatoes

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

One could easily make a case for leaving well enough alone when it comes to mashed potatoes but our family eats them at least once per week and variations on the theme are always welcome. In particular, I wanted a dish that would be a bit dressy for company (as a side for prime rib, for example) but not so starched-collar that the potatoes lose their earthy root vegetable appeal. There is nothing worse than a bowl of mashed potatoes that have lost their culinary roots in pursuit of star power.

I began with the notion of adding another root vegetable to the potatoes. I did not care for rutabaga but yellow turnips made a nice pairing since their thin texture and slightly spicy flavor make a good foil for the earthiness of the potatoes. Although it is better to boil potatoes in their skins (to avoid water absorption), I don't have the patience to peel hot potatoes, especially 5 minutes before serving dinner. Instead I peel them ahead of time and then cut them into 2-inch chunks for quick cooking. I did the same for the turnips.

I found that the turnips needed a 2-minute head start in the boiling water and that the cooking time was about 20 minutes. Beware of undercooking potatoes for mashing – you want them very tender for smooth mashed potatoes. Good mashed potatoes should be mashed by hand; you can't use any sort of electric appliance to help out. If you don't have a potato masher or ricer, you can use a large fork and a very large bowl. (A ricer produces a very smooth mash – I prefer an old-fashioned masher for an earthier texture.) You have to mash one potato at a time and you need room to push the others out of the way as you work. The other secret of good mashed potatoes is the proper ratio of liquid to potato. I find that each pound of potato needs about 1/3 cup of liquid and 2 tablespoons of butter. I prefer light cream as the liquid of choice. You can substitute chicken stock, although you will need to reduce the quantity, as it thins out the potatoes too much.

A discovery made at Cook's Illustrated proved that coating the mashed potatoes with melted butter (before adding any other liquids) helped to produce a lighter product (the fat coats the starch granules) so I adopted that method here. Warming the cream didn't seem to make a big difference in texture but did keep the potato/turnip mash hotter.

So far, so good. But I was still looking for a dressier recipe so I turned to the notion of a topping. Onions seemed like a good fit and I added one surprise ingredient, two anchovies. They dissolve in the oil/butter combination and lend a rich, but not fishy, taste that marries well with both the potatoes and the turnips. I found that cooking the roughly chopped onions over low heat in a covered skillet kept their texture and shape and married the flavors nicely. A couple of tablespoons of chopped parsley at the end of the 20-minute cooking time added some brightness to the dish. The onion mixture can also be held, covered, until the potatoes are ready to be served.

MASHED TURNIPS WITH ONION, PARSLEY, AND ANCHOVIES

Mashed potatoes tend to dry out quickly if not served immediately. If they cool off, place them in a saucepan over very low heat and add an additional 1/4 cup hot liquid and an extra tablespoon of butter at the last minute to jazz up the flavor and texture. You can also use this topping on plain mashed potatoes, without the turnips.

For The Topping

2 tablespoons high quality olive oil

2 tablespoons unsalted butter

2 anchovies

3 medium onions, peeled and coarsely chopped

1/4 teaspoon table salt

2 tablespoons chopped parsley

For The Mashed Potatoes

1 1/2 pounds Yukon Gold or Russet potatoes, peeled and cut into 2-inch pieces

1 pound yellow turnips, peeled and cut into 2-inch pieces

6 tablespoons melted butter

3/4 cup heavy cream, warmed

1 teaspoon table salt or more to taste

Freshly ground black pepper to taste

1. Heat the olive oil and 2 tablespoons of butter in a large skillet with a top. When foam subsides, add the anchovies and cook for 2 minutes over medium-low heat. Add the onions, 1/4 teaspoon salt, cover pan, and cook for 20 minutes. Stir in parsley and keep warm.

2. In a separate pot, boil turnips and potatoes until tender, about 20 minutes, and drain thoroughly. (Add the turnips to the boiling water first and then the potatoes 2 minutes later.) Remove to a large bowl, add the melted butter, and mash. Add 1/3 cup of the warm heavy cream and mash. Add additional cream to taste up to the 3/4 cup total. Add 1 teaspoon salt (or more to taste) and freshly ground black pepper. Top with onion mixture and serve.

recalling the shock and horror of September 11 and related world events, past and present.

"9/11 Portfolio" is on display in the Thayer Academy Art Gallery in Braintree through Jan. 30, with an opening reception and gallery talk by the artist scheduled Jan. 23 from 5-7 p.m.

According to Guiliano, 99.9 percent of the artistic responses to the 9/11 events have been in the nature of pure illustration. There have been the expected interpretive renderings of now indelible images from that day — the hijacked planes hitting the World Trade Center towers, the towers engulfed in flames, the horrified crowds fleeing the scene and the massive destruction in the aftermath at Ground Zero among other images. But very little from the art world, the artist/photographer suggests, has addressed the ambiguities and implications beneath the events and images themselves.

"I think this exhibit contains some very provocative, very tough images," said Guiliano, who also runs a gallery program at Suffolk University and in the past has been an arts critic and jazz and rock music critic with the Boston Herald, Patriot Ledger and Boston Phoenix among other publications. "This is certainly not pretty stuff that you'd hang over the sofa in your living room. But mainly the show attempts to go beyond illustration and ask the question of how exactly do we deal with these images, events and icons through the media."

"The images of 9/11, like the planes hitting the towers, the towers coming down, Ground Zero and others, have been shown repeatedly worldwide on television and every other media. And to repeat images in such a way eventually makes them etched forever in people's minds as icons, like the JFK assassination in Dallas, the space shuttle exploding and any other comparable events you could name. And once the images become icons, everyone in America or even the world somehow begins to feel a part of the whole event," Guiliano said.

9/11 Memorial Wall, NYC 2002 Collage.

"9/11 Portfolio" is perhaps at its most provocative in its series of photoprints developed from shots of as-it-happened news coverage on wide-screen TV. Images include the impact of the planes smashing the towers, the towers burning and eventually collapsing, crowd hysteria on the street, FDNY rushing to the scene and massive scattering debris. Plus, related coverage pictures of New York City, Osama Bin Laden and others, some with Breaking News captions lining the bottom of the screen and even the occasional WBZ TV4 or CBS logo in the corner.

The prints highlight what Guiliano's exhibit statement describes as "the horizontal striations of video transmission," presenting blurred, fuzzy images that perhaps most vividly portray the frenzy, chaos and confusion of being at the scene that day.

Mindful that the post-9/11 world climate is probably as close to an impending World War III as we've come in the modern era, other sections of the exhibit focus on horrific images and memories from the WWII period and previous. Some of the most haunting include photos of public executions in France, Manchuria and Shanghai, Adolph Hitler, Nazi propaganda posters and scenes of disturbing violence in digital still images from the film classic "Battleship Potemkin," a 1925 Russian epic by director Sergei Eisenstein portraying the revolt of two decades earlier by the peasant class and navy against the Czar.

The show finally reaches themes of peace and spiritual hope and healing with such prints as heart-shaped cakes lettered "I Love You" in German bakery windows, and celestial star-galaxy images titled "Cosmos."

"I think these images are very hard to look at with neutrality," Guiliano said. "My aim with the project is to stimulate, disturb and help answer questions for my

Gardening pursuits for the winter months

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Winter weather descended upon South Shore gardens early this season leaving many beds and borders overflowing with debris. With the fall cleanup only partially complete, I had anticipated that milder weather would surely return enabling at least a haphazard attempt to perform last minute preparations for the winter months. Instead, Mother Nature has provided nearly perpetual snow cover and consistently chilly temperatures offering few opportunities to clip, rake, and haul the leaves and spent perennial foliage to my expansive compost heap. Perhaps the only positive aspect of this harsh winter season is that the minor fluctuations in temperatures have minimized the hazards posed by alternating freeze-thaw cycles prevalent during milder winters.

Each day, as I return home from work and errands, I am constantly reminded of my overly passionate pursuit of plants. Beside our driveway, many potted perennials remain huddled together beneath the pendulous branches of a giant weeping cherry, a forlorn gathering of refugees destined to perish if left abandoned until springtime. Nearby, numerous decorative containers still filled with soil and withered plants lie partially buried beneath a thin crusty layer of ice and snow. A tangle of hoses lies on the lawn, drained of water but never coiled and stored before the first snowfall. A small pile of well-decomposed manure waits to be spread over depleted daylily borders. In years past, the month of January nearly always afforded a few days of comfortable outdoor activity but even this seasonal thaw seems in jeopardy as the long-term forecast suggest little respite from the deep freeze.

Should the weather moderate in the weeks to come, a variety of gardening chores can be performed during the dead of winter. Walking on the gardens will not compact the soil while the ground is frozen and with only minimal snow cover, my hedge shears will make quick work of the lingering dead foliage, which will be easily raked away across the frozen surface. Once the borders have been groomed, a winter mulch may be applied to protect evergreen perennials, marginally hardy plants, and perennials that were planted late in the season. The evergreen boughs of a discarded Christmas tree provide a valuable, airy protection for evergreen perennials in sunny, exposed locales that may be subject to winterburn due to dry, desiccating winter winds. A few of the perennials at greatest risk include candytuft (Iberis), ground phlox (Phlox subulata), coral bells (Heuchera) and pinks (Dianthus). Two or three inches of salt marsh hay, sh! redded leaves, or my personal favorite, white pine needles, spread around dormant plants will prevent fall transplants from heaving out of the ground during freeze-thaw cycles. The purpose of this kind of mulch is not to keep the plant warm but rather to keep the ground beneath frozen. The upper two or more inches of the applied mulch alternately freeze and thaw when temperatures rise and fall but the ground remains frozen and slowly thaws when temperatures begin to moderate in early spring.

The dormant winter season is an especially good time to observe the so-called "bones of the landscape". Woody plants provide structure and architecture to your outdoor living spaces in all seasons. Take a stroll through the yard on a clear winter day and note areas that might benefit from the addition of an ornamental tree or shrub to serve as a focal point in open spaces, provide screening of less attractive views, or add year-round beauty to your property. Be sure to make observations from within your home and consider the view from favorite sitting areas. Second story windows are ideal places from which to examine the shapes and contours of gardens and plantings; their outlines are more readily distinguished when foliage is at a minimum.

When bitter cold and persistent bad weather demand indoor activities, I reluctantly accept Mother Nature's gift of forced relaxation and settle into a comfortable chair to begin this season's endless wish list of new plants and proposed projects. January is the month to dream! Our mailboxes are overflowing with catalogs for seeds and plants and the covers of gardening magazines remind us of the beauty resting beneath the frozen ground. This is the month to research new plants, plan new gardens and order from those tantalizing catalogs.

For those homeowners, who have only a casual interest in gardening, books, magazines and catalogs may provide sufficient relief from these gloomy days until the greening of the landscape beckons them back into the yard in April or May. For passionate gardeners, who suffer with a year-round preoccupation with plants, on the other hand, there is a never-ending quest for new varieties, the need to absorb every bit of cultural information written and the desire to explore new methods for combining plants in the landscape. If you are a "plant-aholic" consider taking educational courses offered by local horticultural institutions including our local science center, the Arnold Arboretum, the Massachusetts Horticultural Society or the New England Wildflower Society. Local garden clubs offer outstanding activities. Gardening programs and information are available on the radio, TV and the Web providing therapy for the short term, and for! the serious addicts, participation in a plant society may be an effective remedy. Escape the winter doldrums by signing up for a course or attending a special event and expand your gardening knowledge with others who share your passion for plants.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

WHAT ALL THE NOISE IS ABOUT

New research shows that years of working in a noisy environment leads workers to suffer hearing losses. Questionnaires were sent to 22,194 adults asking them about the number of years spent working at a noise-filled job, as well as whether they had hearing problems, had persistent tinnitus (ringing in the ears), or wore hearing instruments. The investigators found that 2% of people who completed the questionnaire said that they had severe hearing problems, defined as needing a hearing instrument or having difficulty hearing people talk in both ears. While only 1% of those age 35 or younger had severe hearing loss, 8% of men age 55-64 and 4% of similarly aged women had severe hearing loss.

We bring you this column on matters of hearing in order to better educate our friends here in Abington on the importance and benefits of taking care of their hearing, thus enhancing their quality of life. If you have trouble hearing, or if a family member seems to be experiencing hearing difficulties, we welcome your call at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-878-9723. We offer comprehensive services at 80 North Avenue, Rt. 139, North Medical Building, Abington, including testing, evaluation, fittings, follow-up care and repairs. We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

P.S. According to the study cited above, men over age 35 who spent at least ten years at a noisy job were almost four times as likely to have severe hearing problems as those who never worked at a noisy job.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 15

Yesterday's planetary patterns continue today. In addition, the Gemini moon forms stressful contacts to Pluto in the morning and Saturn this afternoon. Stay calm no matter what is happening around you. If you are working, handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands intense concentration. Don't launch bold new ventures or large-scale enterprises. The moon aligns with Uranus at 9:16 p.m. and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 16

Stormy astrological weather continues. At 2:56 a.m. the moon enters emotional Cancer, beginning the final windup to this month's full moon. Energy runs high today and tomorrow. Stay alert and don't take risks. On the other hand, this is a time when you can cut through obstacles on emotional levels and free yourself from old fears, negative habits or limited thinking. An applying alignment of Venus and Neptune highlights creative endeavors. This period is prime for tackling renovation, repair, restoration projects in your home or office.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 17

Read yesterday's advice. The Cancer full moon has just about reached its peak today. People may be moody, argumentative. Be more tolerant and sensitive to the needs of others. Open the doors to a higher level of communication. Reduce stress levels by meditating or exercising. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Tackle a big work project; you can be most productive.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 18

The full moon culminates at 5:48 a.m., 28-degrees of Cancer-Capricorn. At this time the Cancer moon becomes inactive. Planetary influences turn around completely at 9:29 a.m., when the moon enters playful Leo. A harmonious alignment of the moon and Mars prompts you to get work projects out of the way this morning. The remainder of the weekend rates high for fun and games. Forget your troubles and go for the good times this evening.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 19

Take a vacation from routine and responsibilities. This day is prime for catching up on rest and relaxation, recharging your batteries. The Leo moon forms easy contacts to Venus and Jupiter this morning, generating a playful, social mood. Get back in the swing of favorite sports, hobbies; spend quality time with friends, family. Follow your bliss.

MONDAY, JANUARY 20

An applying alignment of Venus and Jupiter is a major plus in today's planetary picture. It prompts you to be more easygoing and carefree. Enjoy the moment. However, there are a couple of rough spots. The first occurs at 8:46 a.m., when the Leo moon opposes Uranus and becomes inactive. Allow extra time to get where you are going; there may be setbacks, distractions. The sun enters Aquarius at 6:53 a.m., remaining there until February 18. The moon enters Virgo at 1:32 p.m., and a potentially stressful 90-degree alignment to Mars is in effect between 3:40-6:40 p.m. Stay upbeat; don't allow doubt, fear or frustration to creep in.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 21

The moon continues to travel in Virgo, and Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, prepares for direct travel. That means that today may be hectic; there are likely to be unanticipated obstacles, delays. However, a harmonious alignment of Venus and Jupiter saves the day. It serves as a reminder to recognize the positives and count your blessings. Don't waste time on criticism or judgment; instead focus on what's best for all concerned.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 22

This is a great day to handle projects that are overdue and cluttering up your work area. Finish old business, fulfill responsibilities. Get your ducks in line so that you can launch important ventures in a few days. At 4:34 a.m. the Virgo moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive until 4:23 p.m., when it enters Libra. The big news today is that Mercury turns direct at 8:08 p.m., 12-degrees Capricorn. The next Mercury retrograde period will occur April 26-May 20.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23

The moon travels in social Libra today and tomorrow. However, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, prepares to form stressful contacts to Pluto and Saturn in the next few days. That means that this is not an ideal time for making major financial decisions or purchases. Relationship issues may also surface and become top priority in this period. Be willing to compromise; you can work out conflicts and strengthen key partnerships.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 24

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Libra moon continues active travel until 2:48 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. Instead of trying to change others or transform situations, this is a time to look within, take responsibility, change your thinking. The moon enters Scorpio at 7:09 p.m. Feelings and emotions run deep. If there has been friction building, this is a time when the truth may surface.

Down to the wire

Town vote is Saturday

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Burying utility wires in Cohasset Village will be on the ballot Saturday.

Polls for the special election to decide if residents will fund the project will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Town Hall. Voter turnout is expected to be low, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said, judging from the amount of absentee ballots requested.

While most residents seem to agree that burying the wires now, in conjunction with other planned improvements for the downtown area, could indeed be a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, they are divided on whether the project is financially sensible.

Proponents say burying the wires will add the final esthetic touch to a slew of other improvements already planned for the downtown area, to be covered by $2.7 million in grants from the state and the MBTA.

Opponents say, given the lagging economy and the proposed $485,000 general override to

Jerusalem Lane home in limbo

Work continues at owner's own risk

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Construction on a million-dollar-plus 4,400 square-foot mansion at 3 Jerusalem Lane continued this week despite a recent decision by the Zoning Board of Appeals to order homeowner Phil Ayer to "cease and desist" all further work on the property.

Responding to an appeal from neighbors who seek to thwart Ayer's efforts to build the home, the ZBA ruled on Jan. 16 that Building Inspector Bob Egan erred in his interpretation of the town's zoning bylaws when he issued a building permit for the project, which involved razing an 1,800 square-foot ranch to make way for the home.

Ayer said he will appeal the decision and apply for a special permit from the ZBA to allow the home to be completed according to original plans. The ZBA has given Ayer until Feb. 5 to pursue both courses of action. Ayer said he will not halt construction while the appeal and a decision on a special permit are pending.

According to the ZBA's deci-

New approach to affordable housing

Will go before Town Meeting

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Developing affordable housing in Cohasset could be something that happens from the inside-out.

At least that's what members of the Growth and Development Committee would like to think.

The committee is drafting an article for spring Town Meeting aimed at giving amnesty to residents who illegally rent out apartments, allowing them to apply for a comprehensive permit if they agree to keep the apartments affordable. A second article would establish the Cohasset Housing Partnership, an entity that would manage affordable housing and exist separately from the Housing Authority.

It's a grass-roots approach to affordable housing that seeks to avoid the growth concerns brought on by giant develop-

Peter Roy offers to sell Border Street boatyard

Park proposed for historic site

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Painters, get out your pallets. Cohasset's own "motif #1" at the harbor is about to be history.

According to the Community Preservation Committee, the old "Eastwick" building — that is not only a favorite with local artists but provides a backdrop to kayakers who surf the rapids below — is beyond repair.

CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey told his board Tuesday that Peter Roy of Margin Street, who owns the Mill River Marine Railway on Border Street, met with him and member Tom Callahan earlier that day about the town buying the entire site save the lobster pound.

Callahan, who is also a selectman, said one heavy snow would topple the building which is shored up inside by wires.

Roy wants the CPC to consider using community preservation funds to buy the site that

Rails trails plan

CPC cool to concept

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Scituate may love the idea, but Cohasset isn't buying it yet.

Although town Health Agent Joseph Godzik, Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo and engineering consultant John Cavanaro made a compelling case about the problem of obesity in the country and how a more walker-friendly society would combat that, the Community Preservation Committee has held off writing any checks.

What's being proposed is an $800,000 rails-to-trails project that would involve widening the Greenbush rail bed to accommodate a biking-walking trail that would facilitate more residents getting exercise. Godzik asked the CPC to recommend spending $25,000 out of the town's community preservation fund to pay for a feasibility study on the project.

"We're on the threshold of a major (nationwide) effort obesity on the same level that was used to reduce smoking," Bobo said. To that end, he said the

Elm St. housing

There are only two people on the waiting list for housing for the elderly at the Harborview Apartments behind the police-fire station on Elm Street, Cohasset Housing Authority Director Marilyn LeBlanc said.

Applicants must be at least 60 years old with an annual income not in excess of $40,600. Cohasset residents do get preference, she said.

Call LeBlanc at 718-383-1948 for more information.

Open burning season begins

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis from through May 1, for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch, Center at 781-383-0260 between the hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact permit issuance. Burning hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Water plant work starts

Water Commission contractor RH White Construction has begin work on major improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant. The project began January 6, and will be finished by June 1, 2003.

"This project will improve the operation of the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant by allowing the Plant, for the first time, to treat water on a continuous basis and which will improve the quality and production of drinking water for Cohasset residents," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

This project includes installation of Variable Frequency Drives (VFD's) on the finished water pumps, new energy efficient motors for the finished water pumps, and flow paced chemical feeds to automatically regulate the injection of treatment plant chemicals into the water. Weston & Sampson Engineering is overseeing the project for the Water Commission.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Wednesday, Jan. 22:

Advisory Committee, Jan. 23 at 7 p.m.
Conservation Commission, Jan. 23 at 7:30 p.m.

Water Commission, Jan. 23 at 8 p.m. at 339 King St.
Zoning Board of Appeals, (40A) Jan. 27 at 7 p.m.; (Avalon) Jan. 27 at 7:30 p.m.; (40B) Feb. 3 at 7:30 All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Hydrants OK

Fire Chief Roger Lincoln reported no problem with two fire hydrants used on New Year's Eve to fight a fire at 34 Fernway.

Four-quad gates

The Army Corps of Engineers has scheduled a meeting where the MBTA will explain the rationale for deciding not to install four quad gates. The meeting will take place Feb. 5 at 11 a.m. in Hingham Town Hall.

Winter guidelines

The public works department has issued the following winter guidelines for residents:

- Do not rake leaves or other debris into roads.
- Uncover storm drains blocked with leaves, snow or other debris.
- Do not plow or throw snow from private property onto the street or sidewalk.
- Do not block sidewalks with plowed snow or motor vehicles.
- Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15. It interferes with snow removal and is prohibited by town bylaws.
- The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mailboxes within the town layout.
- Sand for resident use only will be available behind the downtown parking lot.

Free legal clinic

Do you have a legal question or are you confused about a legal issue? The Bar Association of Norfolk County is sponsoring free legal clinics as a public service to the community. A panel of attorneys experienced in all areas of the law will be available for a one on one consultation with you to discuss your legal questions.

All consultations are strictly confidential. The evening legal clinics will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. on Tuesday evenings at the Quincy District Court on the following dates: Feb. 4, March 4, April 1, June 3, July 1.

For further information, contact Adrienne C. Clarke, Bar Association of Norfolk County at 617-471-9693.

Foreign objects clogging pumps

There are still many cases of foreign objects clogging sewer pumps, and this is to remind customers that only normal toilet and garbage disposer waste should be discharged. As the sewer department previously advised its users, it is necessary to charge for the Town's $85 ($100 on weekends) cost for service calls to remove foreign objects.

The following objects have caused repeated service calls: tampons, dental floss, baby wipes, Q-Tips. In addition, the following objects will also clog the pumps: bones, diapers, cloth, glass, metal, nuts, plastic, rags, rope, rubber, sand, sanitary, napkins, shells, towels.

Names of local soldiers sought

The Sons of the American Legion chapter in Cohasset would like to know the names of any Cohasset soldiers who have been deployed to the Persian Gulf.

The Sons are also ordering Blue Star Banners for the families of local soldiers. Please leave a message for Sons Commander Tom Wigmore at the American Legion Post, 781-383-9657,

Town Discriminates Against the Ayer Family

Dear Friends,

The civil liberties of the Ayer Family are being violated. The building inspector issued a permit to us to build a new house at 3 Jerusalem Lane in Cohasset. After 80% of the work has been completed, the zoning board of appeals has changed the rules upon pressure from a small group of neighbors. We may be required to take down our family home even though it has been built in compliance with the zoning rules and regulations of the town. The board is changing the way it interprets the rules and trying to take away our rights as citizens.

If this injustice is allowed to happen to us, then your home may not be safe. Half of the houses in Cohasset may be affected if this new interpretation of the zoning laws goes into effect. We humbly ask the good citizens of Cohasset to call your selectmen to protest.

Thank you,

The Ayer
Family

Mathew, Mary Anne, Mary Beth and Philip Ayer

AS SEEN IN THE TINYTOWN GAZETTE P. 13, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 22, 2003

"The 3 Jerusalem Lane home allegedly meets all required setbacks. But according to the ZBA, new construction on a non-conforming lot should have immediately triggered an application for a special permit, at which point abutters would have been notified and a hearing would have been held. But this did not happen. According to several town officials, the ZBA's vote may uncover a hornet's nest of other Cohasset mansionized homes which were built without special permit. Other neighborhood lawsuits may well be waiting in the wings.

Presumably, a special hearing will now be held and the zoning board of appeals will vote on (A) whether the house is substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood than the former house was; (B) whether the house is hazardous to the public health because of traffic congestion or for any other reason. And then of course there are damages which the homeowner will suffer if he has to alter his home (80% finished) in any manner. And of course, the homeowner has to pull his crew off the job. More damages."

Town vote on wires project is Saturday

cover the town's operating costs next fiscal year, it's simply not worth the additional taxes.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Wednesday the town expects to receive $150,000 in donations from local property owners, bringing the expected cost of the debt exclusion override that will pay for burying the wires to $650,000. Haddad said the project would cost the average tax-payer (owner of a $575,000 home) about $250, or $49.51 per year for five years.

"An override is necessary because the debt service for the project cannot be absorbed within the limits of Prop. 2-1/2, the state law that caps the amount a town can annually increase its property taxes. Unlike a general override, which is a permanent tax increase, a debt exclusion override is temporary, lasting only until the project is paid off. This debt exclusion will run for five years, which is the maximum allowed for a roadway project.

What may be confusing to voters on Saturday is the language on the ballot, which asks residents "to pay for additional infrastructure and streetscape improvements" in the downtown area.

"That's the way that the language was written on the warrant at Town Meeting," Haddad said. "You leave it general to give flexibility but the Selectmen have earmarked that money for burying the wires."

At last week's Board of Selectmen meeting, burying the wires was a hot topic of discussion. Selectmen Ronnie McMorris suggested continuing to allow donations to offset the cost of the project if the override passes.

"It's sort of like when you redecorate at home," said McMorris, arguing in favor of burying the wires. "You don't want to paint everything and then say 'Gee, that couch looks a lot shabbier than I ever thought it did.' And then we've lost the opportunity to have done it right in the first place."

Selectmen chairman Michael Sullivan also spoke in favor of the project. "I think this is a difficult time to ask people to pay up additional taxes for anything, and especially in light of knowing that we're going to have an override in the not-to-distant future," Sullivan said. "But at the same time, this is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for the town and I think that people should think long and hard about it rather than just saying 'I don't want to spend the money.'"

Selectmen Merle Brown said McMorris and Sullivan were wrong to voice opinions on the matter at a Selectmen's meeting. But if they were going to speak, he said, so was he.

"As far as the polls, they don't bother me," Brown said. "It's just the expense is an awful lot. Those people that want it done can donate the money. Those people that don't want it done shouldn't have to spend the money."

This Tuesday, the opinions of merchants and residents running errands in the village seemed to be as divided as those of the Selectmen.

"I think (burying the wires) is a great idea," said Sheldon Karp, a Marshfield resident and co-owner of Really Great Pizza on South Main Street, who plans to add an awning to the front of his restaurant when downtown improvements are completed.

"I'd rather spend the money on something else," said Ruth DeLay of Border Street, who was dropping off her laundry at Dependable Cleaners, on the corner of South Main and Brook Street.

Brad Blaser, a Cohasset resident who was also dropping off laundry, said he would vote yes to the override but still saw some potential negatives. "It removes the sort of cluttered look that's been around since electric power was invented," he said. "It may not maintain the cohesiveness of the small downtown area."

Ed Valente, who lives in an apartment on South Main Street, said he was impressed by computer-generated pictures that show the village wireless. "I think if you're going to do the rest of the project you might as well do it right," he said.

A Cohasset man buying a newspaper at Cohasset News, who declined to give his name, disagreed. "I don't really care to be honest with you," he said. "The wires have been there since I moved here in 1973. I'm going to vote against it."

Several other residents said they didn't know enough about the issue to voice an opinion.

Absentee ballots available for special town election

Absentee ballots for the Special Town Election on Jan. 25 are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noon on Friday, Jan. 24, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from town during the hours the polls are open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office; or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand-delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter, sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury, and mail or hand-deliver the application to the clerk's office.

Absentee ballots must be mailed by the voter him/herself. Returned ballots should be mailed, or can be hand-delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by Jan. 25 to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill-in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check-in tables. Ballots can be inserted into the machine face-up, face-down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

For Voters with Physical Disabilities: If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your own vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with the Town Clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the poling place because of physical disability.

A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the Town Clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

No races could spell sleepy election season

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

There are no races so far for the upcoming April 5 election.

Michael Patrolia on the Board of Assessors and Margaret Chapman on the Board of Health, who were previously undecided about running for re-election, have taken out papers.

Selectman Michael Sullivan has not.

If Sullivan decides to run, it could be the only race in town come April. Sullivan's potential opponent is Roger Hill, who narrowly lost to two incumbent Selectmen in the last election.

Gary Vanderweil is stepping down from the Sewer Commission after 20 years of work. John Beck seems poised to take over, with no one challenging his bid.

Richard Barrow was going to step down, but his friends on the Recreation Board convinced him to give it one more term.

Potential candidates for elected town offices have until Feb. 18 to secure 50 signatures from registered voters to make them eligible for the April 5 election.

Seats up for election include:

- Board of Selectmen. Michael Sullivan has not indicated if he will seek reelection. Roger Hill has taken out papers for Sullivan's seat.
- Board of Assessors. Michael Patrolia, who is running for re-election;
- Board of Trustees for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Agnes McCann, Patience Towle and Carol Riley, who will all run for re-election;
- Board of Health. Margaret Chapman will seek re-election;
- Planning Board. Robert H. Sturdy will seek re-election;
- Recreation Commission. Richard Barrow will seek re-election;
- School Committee. Rick Flynn and Chartis Tebbets will both seek re-election;
- Sewer Commission. Gary Vanderweil will not seek re-election. John Beck is running;
- The Water Commission. John McNabb will seek another term.

New approach to affordable housing

ments proposed under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

"I think we've arrived at a philosophical consensus on how this affordable housing thing is to be approached," said Selectman Tom Callahan, who along with other members of the Growth and Development Committee has been trying to come up with a plan for Cohasset to reach the state-mandated 10 percent affordable housing mark.

"It's no secret this is in response to 40B, but 40B is narrow in the types of housing it generates," Callahan said. "I think we all agree that large-scale housing like Avalon Bay is not something we want in Cohasset. It's not in the character of the town."

The committee's thinking is that the town can maintain its character if it can somehow encourage property owners to convert existing in-house apartments or accessory dwellings that are illegally rented into legally registered units that qualify as "affordable."

[Under Chapter 40B, a unit is considered "affordable" if a household can obtain it without spending more than a third of its income, which must be at or below 80 percent of the median income for the Boston metropolitan area.]

It is unclear whether these units would be recognized by the state as part of the town's affordable housing stock, but members of the Growth and Development Committee are hopeful they will.

The committee will review the effectiveness of a similar "amnesty" plan already enacted in Barnstable before finalizing the article.

Among the questions still being asked are:

- Would a tax break or other positive incentives be offered to those who agree to have such apartments?
- How long would an apartment have to remain affordable under an agreement with the town?
- Would the agreement be a covenant, or a deed-restriction that transferred if the house is sold?

Committee members worry that a long-term commitment like a deed-restriction may scare off potential subscribers to the plan. But too lenient a commitment also has problems; it may be disregarded by the state, were the town's affordable housing plan subject to review in the face of more proposed 40B development in the future.

Another concern is how many "illegal" apartments actually exist in the town, and if the number would be a significant contribution toward increasing the 2.76 percent of housing considered affordable in Cohasset today.

Changes made to Chapter 40B this fall allow a town under the 10 percent mark to deny issuing a permit to a developer if its affordable housing stock is increasing by 0.75 percent per year.

For affordable housing to grow at that rate, Cohasset would need an estimated minimum of 21 new affordable units per year.

"We're not going to do this with amnesty alone," said Callahan. "We're going to have to build more units at some point. It's just a question of how much local control there is over it."

The Cohasset Housing Partnership, the subject of the second proposed article, would address that need for local control. Appointed by the Board of Selectmen, the seven-member group would exist with the goal of developing "an in-house expertise on affordable housing," Callahan said. A representative from both the Housing Authority and the Senior Housing Committee would serve on the partnership.

Members of the Growth and Development Committee are undecided about whether preference on affordable housing generated by the amnesty plan would be granted to previous or current town residents, as is done in some towns in the state. The South Shore Housing Consortium in Kingston would probably be the agency to screen potential affordable housing tenants, committee members said.

A third article being drafted by the committee would allow storeowners in the downtown business district to create second-floor apartments without a special permit, provided the first floor of the building maintains its commercial use.

While these units would not be required to be "affordable" by the state's definition, Callahan said the state considers rental housing to be more affordable for low and moderate income families and individuals than single-family homes.

The Growth and Development Committee is passing the two apartment-related articles on to the planning board, which will hold public hearings on them because they would require changes to the town's zoning by-laws.

All three articles will probably be revised and put before voters at Town Meeting on March 25.

Proposed house would use Otis St. lots in two towns

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Zoning Board has stopped short of giving the go-ahead for a new dwelling at 28 Otis Ave. that would combine lots in different towns and different counties.

One parcel is in Cohasset and therefore, Norfolk County, and the other is in Scituate and Plymouth County.

Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick, who is drafting the decision, said the Zoning Bylaw did not prohibit the combining of lots with neighboring towns to meet minimum zoning requirements, and he seemed to be leaning toward upholding the applicant's appeal of the building inspector's decision to deny issuing the building permit because the adjacent lot is in a different town and county.

"I adopted the argument that we are surrounded by Plymouth County and therefore, I think the town would have affirmatively said it did not allow combinations," Chittick said.

If the zoning board agrees, the ruling would contradict a 1996 decision regarding the same property.

"My point of view is that we must contradict that finding," Chittick said. However, he praised Building Inspector Bob Egan for sending the applicants Brian and Julie Ann Murphy to the Zoning Board for a ruling.

Zoning Board members agreed the bylaw would have used more specific language if it meant to exclude combining lots with Plymouth County. Town Counsel has also advised that separate parcels may be combined and considered as one for the purpose of meeting the area requirements of the Zoning Bylaw.

What raised a "yellow flag" of caution is Cohasset would not have any say over what happens on the Scituate side of the combined lot. In other words, Cohasset could approve the house because it meets setbacks and minimum lot size requirements after the lots are combined, but those parameters could change in the future on the Scituate side and Cohasset would be out of the loop. However that point might be moot because most of the Scituate parcel is "wet" not buildable, Chittick said.

There was some discussion that any decision be conditioned that the Scituate side of the property remain "passive" if it comes under combined ownership and if it doesn't, whatever structure is built loses its Cohasset zoning protection. The decision may also be conditioned that the lots be combined in one deed.

The Zoning Board is also not sure the house complies with all setbacks. Chittick said the board may allow the lots to be combined but would not order the building inspector to issue a building permit until he is satisfied the house does not require any other zoning relief.

The Zoning Board wanted more time to deliberate and continued the matter until its Jan. 27 meeting.

Massport cites travel projections in new legal fight to build runway

By Michael C. Levenson
MICHAEL.LEVENSON@STATEHOUSE-NEWS.COM

A new runway is the surest way to ease flight delays at Logan International Airport and prepare for millions of new air travelers, the airport's aviation director testified at the start of a long and critical trial Tuesday.

The nearly mile-long airstrip would allow the airport to keep three runways open on windy days, avoiding delays of up to three hours, the director, Thomas Kinton Jr. said during the first day before Suffolk County Superior Court Judge Margot Botsford.

The airport handles an average of 120 flights an hour. Windy days push that number down to 60. But the new runway — technically known as 1432 — could raise the number of flights back to at least 90, he said.

Kinton's testimony began a new chapter in the decades-long standoff between the airport and its neighbors over an injunction barring construction of the airstrip, which would be Logan's sixth.

Also in the fight against the runway are the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset which say the proposed runway will add thousands of flights a day overhead and impact their quality of life.

Backers of the runway say it's critical to easing travel delays and making the state's economy more competitive.

Attorneys for Boston, Winthrop, Somerville and Chelsea argued the post-9/11 dip in air travel makes a new runway unnecessary. The Massachusetts Port Authority, the agency that oversees Logan, should look instead at increasing air travel at regional airports such as Hanscom Field in Bedford, and instituting pricing plans that ease congestion during peak hours and promote travel during off-hours.

By pushing the runway, Massport seems to be pursing a "single-minded focus of putting more concrete at Logan as an answer to its flight delay concerns," said Stephen Leonard, attorney for the City of Boston. Besides, he added, "Nothing will eliminate delays at Logan or at any airport."

Kinton said air travel at Logan has declined since Sept. 11, 2001 to 22 million passengers in 2002 from a high of 27 million in 2000. But he predicted air travel would soon rebound. By 2008, Logan would again serve 27 million travelers, and by 2018, more than 37 million, he said.

Failure to lay a runway would pave the way for unprecedented waiting times, he said. "Very quickly, I feel we will be back to the days of record delays at Logan Airport" Kinton said.

Foes said they intended to present evidence at the two-week-long trial that would show air travel may resume more slowly than port authority officials predict. And when it does rebound, more travelers will head to small airports outside Boston, they said.

Mark Pearlstein, Massport's attorney, said the agency has pursued the regional alternatives at Hanscom and the off-peak incentives pursued by the runway's foes. "While they are important," he said, "they can't substitute for the runway."

The trial could end in removal of the injunction, which has stood since 1974, when it was issued after a judge found that Massport had not fully reviewed the runway's impact.

The project gained new life in February 1999, after Massport filed a proposal to reopen the process. State environmental officials certified the project's credentials in June 2001 and the Federal Aviation Administration followed suit in August 2002.

Foes have long argued the runway will bring added smog and noise to the area. They plan to offer testimony from neighbors about the burdens a new runway would bring to the area.

The opponents have also filed suit in federal court, arguing that the FAA did not adequately analyze the effects of noise and the impact on the air quality of their communities.

Historic Hagerty house qualifies for preservation money

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Hagerty house at 40 Park Ave. is not only the site of a new concept — hands-on maritime education for schoolchildren — it's also a very old structure.

In fact the historic significance of the Victorian building coupled with the mission of the non-profit Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research that is leasing the town-owned structure won the hearts of a majority of the Community Preservation Committee this week.

The CPC agreed to recommend spending $36,000 for handicapped-accessible bathrooms, window replacement, and bringing the heating and air conditioning systems up to code. The center must also install a sign explaining the historical significance of the building, member Tom Callahan said.

Town Meeting will have the final say this spring, when voters will decide on this expenditure and others recommended by the CPC.

CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey cast the lone dissenting vote because he feels a restoration project should pay more attention to historic details. He said restoration does not equate with installing vinyl windows, for example.

The Community Preservation Act, adopted by Cohasset nearly two years ago, allows a town to partner with non-profits, and allows multiple-purpose projects. The Center, which is leasing the Hagerty building from the town for a nominal fee, will lease the second and third story of the house to the South Shore Art Center for artist studio space that will help cover the operating costs of the building.

The preservation act also states community preservation funds may be used to rehabilitate and restore municipally owned historic sites.

The Hagerty House is actually the Capt. Aubrey Crocker House and has a long and historic association with Cohasset's Maritime history, according to David Wadsworth of the Cohasset Historical Commission.

Crocker (1846-1906) was a successful defender of the America's Cup as captain of the Puritan in 1885.

Wadsworth explained boat builder John Eltman and later Francis Hagerty, whose early developments in modern, bonded plywood helped revolutionize maritime small boat construction, owned the house.

"Its new use as a site for maritime education continues the historic maritime association of this valuable and active building, and contributes to the town's long and illustrious maritime heritage," he said.

Ivimey questioned if the project proponents figured "prevailing wage" into their construction estimates. He said town projects that cost upwards of $25,000 in a given year must pay union wages.

Taking that into consideration, the CPC worded its approval so the funding could be split over two years — $16,000 in fiscal year 2004 and $20,000 in fiscal year 2005 — if it is determined that the prevailing wage law pertains to this project.

The Center for Student Coastal Research is dedicated to supporting exploration, understanding, and investigation of environmental issues in the South Coastal Watershed.

According to director Jack Buckley, the center strives to teach students to become stewards of the region's maritime environment by promoting educational activities that engage students in the study of coastal watershed issues, and to teach students how to conduct environmental research that addresses real issues in coastal communities.

CPC member Al Moore explained that if a project like this gets the OK from town meeting, the town does not simply write a check for the amount. The town writes the checks as the work gets done, he said.

Member Debbie Cook said liked the plan.

"It's a great proposal," she said.

Preservation board walks, not runs to rails-trails proposal

Board of Health wants to make the town more walkable of which the rails-trails project would be an important part, he said.

Scituate's CPC, which has a longer rail corridor, has already allocated $45,000 for a similar study and won the endorsement of the Board of Selectmen there, Godzik said.

But the Cohasset CPC isn't so sure the project would pass muster with the MBTA and its Greenbush construction contractor, Cashman Balfour-Beatty, which have said rails-with-trails is not practicable.

Bobo stressed there is a new regime in the corner office on Beacon Hill that might be friendlier to the concept.

The CPC stopped short of rejecting the request out of hand. CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey gave the men three weeks to work with state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, a rails-with-trails supporter and avid bicyclist, to determine if there is any wiggle room with the MBTA and the state Secretary of Transportation over the issue.

The CPC, which includes former and current members the Conservation Commission, is also concerned about the impact any widening of the railroad bed would have on wetlands, particularly in the southern part of town.

The trail would be eight feet wide would have a surface of packed gravel. The Cohasset portion of the project is estimated to cost $800,000.

Hopes are to have the trail run from the Scituate's Greenbush station to the Hingham tunnel. Godzik, Bobo and Cavanaro also argued that rails-with-trails are safer because of the fencing required, and the fact that it would provide an alternative to walking along the tracks themselves, a dangerous practice.

They said a number of walkers and bikers are currently using the existing right-of-way and said the trails could add to train ridership because it would attract walkers and bicyclists to the stations.

Bobo stressed if there was enough of a groundswell of support from Scituate, Cohasset and Hingham, accompanied with the change in power structure at the state, the project could be very viable.

He said an easement would be needed from the MBTA, but no land-takings would be required.

CPC member Debbie Cook said she thought the idea was terrific, but would not want to see the loss of any more wetlands along the Greenbush corridor.

But Jim Dedes, another member, said he thought the greater good of bike trails would be an adequate trade off for wetlands modification.

Al Moore, the Planning Board's representative on the CPC, said he was reluctant to pay for the study because of the current fiscal crisis would make the actual project cost prohibitive.

"In this economic climate, it's not easy to appropriate big money for this kind of thing," said Moore, adding he was concerned about spending $25,000 for the study and get nothing in return.

The town adopted the Community Preservation Act at last year's annual Town Meeting. It derives it money from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax and a 100 percent state match. Allocations are recommended by the committee and then voted on by Town Meeting. The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historic preservation, and affordable housing.

Scituate's CPA adds a 3 percent surcharge to resident's tax bills. Selectmen there have pledged support to Scituate resident Mark Fenton, who is spearheading the cause, in the past and continued to do so by supporting the CPA's recommended $45,000 for a feasibility study.

Fenton has spent months garnering support among Scituate residents and other area officials for his rails-with-trails proposal, claiming such an addition to the Greenbush line would help ease many parking problems and add to the overall aesthetic nature of the line. After Fenton produced numerous pieces of research stating the safe nature and feasibility of such a trail, members of the Scituate CPA reluctantly agreed to fund a portion of a feasibility study.

But if Cohasset and Hingham do not jump on board with the study, the future of the trail is left hanging. Scituate's Town Meeting will vote March 3 on the $45,000 appropriation— a figure Scituate town officials were told would decrease should Cohasset and Hingham join in on the study.

Peter Roy offers to sell Border Street boatyard to town includes a boatyard for $750,000, or the assessed value, whichever is higher. Tearing down and removing the dilapidated structures on the parcel would cost an additional $500,000, of which Roy would pledge $250,000, according to Ivimey.

Roy, who purchased the property several years ago and hoped to save the historic Eastwick building, faced myriad environmental regulations for the waterfront property. To make the project viable, Roy planned to construct condominiums at the site but a new town bylaw passed at last year's Town Meeting made the project more difficult because it eliminated use variances that could allow residential units in a waterfront business district. Roy, who also owns Atlantica and Kimball's, could not immediately be reached for comment.

Ivimey explained Roy envisions a town park at the site with parking and a dock with about 10 slips for 20-foot boats. The lobster pound would be carved out of the parcel, and would be privately owned, with the stipulation that its exterior is spruced up.

The CPC essentially closed submissions for proposals for fiscal year 2004 funding Dec. 31, with the caveat that if an important or unique project came up, the members would consider it. The Roy proposal fits into that category, Ivimey said.

The Mill River Marine Railway site is one of the most familiar in town. In addition to the lobster pound, it has housed a boat-repair year for more than 30 years. "Motif #1" was used in the 1987 movie "Witches of Eastwick."

The CPC will make recommendations for funding on a range of proposals to the March 29 Annual Town Meeting that has the authority to approve the expenditures.

The committee took the Roy proposal under advisement.

Work continues on new home at 3 Jerusalem Lane

sion, if Ayer meets the deadline, the cease and desist order will not be issued until the application for special permit is denied or "otherwise terminated." The board says any construction in the meantime is "at the owner's own risk."

Ayer purchased the property in April of 2001 after Egan granted him a building permit based on the fact that the proposed structure conformed to the town's setback, height and density requirements.

"Without the building permit, the Ayers never would have purchased the property," a statement from Ayer's lawyers said.

In October, when neighbors complained that Ayer had no right to demolish the existing home and build a bigger home in its place, Egan denied their request to issue a "cease and desist" order.

But in the appeal, the ZBA found last week that the lot area of about 14,000 square feet was insufficient for a home the size of the one Ayer is building. The board said a conforming lot for a home that size would need to be 35,000 square feet.

Egan said Friday that Town Counsel advised him in October "that I was correct in my interpretation" of the town's zoning bylaws.

But Paul DeRensis, a lawyer for the firm that represents the town, said "the judgment call is (Egan's), not ours." "We don't drive the car. We see ourselves as mechanics under the hood. We just keep the engine running for the building inspector," DeRensis said. "When we talked to the building inspector, he said there was no increase in non-conformity. If someone tells us there was no increase in non-conformity, then we tell them to go ahead an build."

Woody Chittick, chairman of the ZBA, has defended Egan's role in the matter. "I think Bob (Egan) worked really hard and the issue that were facing is not crystal clear," he said. "There's a lot of gray area in the law there. So this shouldn't be interpreted as the zoning board against Bob."

Egan said that two current projects on Jerusalem Road involve circumstances similar to 3 Jerusalem Lane, but no plans had been made to notify owners that their building permits may have been wrongly issued.

Ayer's lawyers said they will ask Egan to "enforce the ZBA's decision equally across the board" and issue cease and desist orders to those projects as well. One of those homes, at 575 Jerusalem Road, is reportedly being built by Planning Board member Chris Ford.

Ayer's lawyers said four additional, similar projects were issued building permits and certificates of occupancy, according to town records dating back to 1999.

Chittick said the Zoning Board was not yet considering ordering construction stoppages on any other projects. "People have to appeal to us. We're not an enforcement agency," he said.

The next crucial step is likely to be a public hearing held by the ZBA to decide whether Ayer's home is worthy of a special permit. The board can deny the permit, Chittick said, if it finds the home is substantially more "detrimental to the neighborhood" than the ranch that initially occupied the lot. The permit can also be denied if the structure is deemed hazardous to public health because of traffic congestion or any other reason.

Chittick said the term "detrimental to the neighborhood" is "subjective." "It could be appearances of different types. It could be something impacting safety or quality of life," he said. If the permit is denied, the project would probably be required to "conform to the character of the neighborhood," Chittick said.

DeRensis said even though a building permit was issued, the town would not be "financially responsible for any changes the homeowner might have to make for his home to conform with the by-laws of the town."

Ayer, who is preparing for a legal battle, says he should not have to pay for any changes to the home that may be requested. "This is our dream home," he said in an interview Wednesday. "It's a beautiful home, and a small group of people want to ruin that for us."

Ayer has assembled a team of four lawyers, and said he is considering hiring a civil rights lawyer to argue that he was singled out for "prejudicial treatment" because others with similar projects in town were not treated in the same way.

Roberta Sawyer, one of Ayer's lawyers, said Egan was correct in issuing the building permit. She said the ZBA has created a "zoning nightmare in Cohasset which will impact many of the current homeowners."

Ayer, a sub-contractor, is living with his family in Holderness, N.H. He said they had planned to move into their Cohasset home, which is now 80 percent complete, in late March.

Despite the ZBA's ruling that Ayer's home violates town bylaws, other town officials are moving ahead with possible amendments to the zoning bylaws that would add further protection against the demolition of existing homes to make way for larger ones.

The Growth and Development Committee is drafting an article for Town Meeting that would require any proposed home more than 3,000 square feet or more than 10 percent of its lot area to require a Special Permit and be subject to a site review by the Planning Board.

STAFF PHOTO/CHRIS BERNSTEIN

The ZBA ruling that the owner of the home at 3 Jerusalem Lane must seek a special permit may have opened up other new homes on under-sized lots to scrutiny.

A vote for the village

We agree the timing is terrible. The state is facing a fiscal crisis of monumental proportions that will have a profound effect on municipalities across the commonwealth, including Cohasset. We won't know the full ramifications of cuts in state aid until spring.

However that being said, it's a mistake to link Saturday's debt exclusion vote to potential cuts in services and layoffs due to the recession. Voters should not confuse the debt exclusion with the general override planned for the spring. Apart from increasing your property tax bill, the two issues are completely unrelated.

In other words, whether voters opt to pay for burying utility wires in the village has nothing to do with funding for the schools or town services.

The village revitalization project that is 10 years in the making is being entirely paid for through state grants and MBTA mitigation funds, save the effort to bury the utility wires.

The village project is moving ahead even if the utility wires stay above ground. Saturday's vote is a "one shot deal" – the sole opportunity to bury the wires while the village streets are being dug up anyway for new sidewalks.

Make no mistake about it, burying the wires will have a profound visual effect on village improvements; it will also do away with all the ugly utility poles. Before you vote Saturday, please take a ride along Elm and South Main streets, count the poles and see how close they are to the street.

We are sensitive to the fact that Cohasset's taxes are among the highest in the state. Voters have gone to the polls time and time again to approve general overrides for the operating budget, and debt exclusions for schools and sewers. Some residents, especially those on fixed incomes, are being priced out of town. However, that situation is unlikely to change until the town can meet the challenge of providing affordable housing.

But we do not believe that voting yes on Saturday would have a negative affect on the outcome of this spring's estimated $486,000 general override, which is needed to help maintain services and will cost the owner of a home valued at $575,000 about $166 a year.

Although the debt exclusion for the wire project is estimated at $800,000, it will cost the owner of that same home, only about $50 a year for five years because local business owners have agreed to donate upwards of $120,000 toward the project.

We think the village is as much a part of Cohasset's character as its ledge, ocean vistas and historic common. But it's a fragile place. Many villages and town centers across the state and country are dying because businesses and shoppers no longer support them.

Burying the utility wires is the kind of project that we'll be kicking ourselves about five years from now because we didn't take advantage of the opportunity when it presented itself.

We don't think the wires project is frivolous, and truly believe a revitalized village will pay for itself many times over through the businesses and shops that will thrive there. It makes sense to do the project right and bury the wires while we have the chance. The village is worth the investment.

Telemarketing law up and running

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley D-Hingham announced the states new Telemarketing law, which allows consumers to reduce, the number of telemarketing calls that they receive, is now up and running.

"I was happy to support this legislation last session and am delighted that it is now up and running. This will allow people to reduce those annoying calls which always seem to come at the worst possible time," Bradley said.

If you sign up by March 1, you will be on the first list which goes out April 1, and that list will be updated every quarter thereafter. To apply or access information you can go to the web site www.mass.gov/donotcall or you can call the toll free number 866-231-2255.

Save $650K, vote no on wires

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset has a chance to save $650,000 on Saturday, Jan. 25, by simply voting 'No' on the Override relating to the replacement of a segment of the village telephone poles and wiring.

We are faced, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad, with a 10 percent cut in local aid from the State in 2003, and probably a 15 percent cut ($433,000) next year. Mr. Haddad is considering personnel layoffs next year in the Department of Public Works, the library, and the Town Hall. Apparently, he is ear-marking the town's back-up Stabilization Fund to pay debt service for our new schools, in that the State has indefinitely postponed its obligations for these.

With its sewer and school indebtedness, Cohasset is nearing a financial bind. Not a few of us shudder as yearly taxes mount constantly.

The replacement of a few telephone poles and wiring with Victorian-style light fixtures may have some esthetic appeal for the cosmetically-minded, but this is not Disney Land or even Williamsburg. For that group, why limit the toil to a few poles between the Red Lion and St. Stephens? Why discriminate against the Common, Depot Court, Ripley Road, South Main to St. Anthony's, Elm Street to the Harbor,

It is undoubtedly gracious of two individuals to chip in on the greater expense. Yet, with the town financially strapped, the State nearly broke, the nation in fiscal straits, does Cohasset still wish to imprudently dissipate $650,000 for eye appeal to a tiny segment?

I like to think not!

Why burying village wires makes sense

TO THE EDITOR:

On Saturday, Jan. 25 Cohasset residents will be asked to vote for a five-year debt exclusion Proposition 2-1/2 override in the amount of $800,000 to bury overhead utility lines in Cohasset Village. The override will cost the average tax-payer $305 ($575,500 home value), which will be dispersed at an average increase of $61 a year for five years.

Because of approximately $120,000 in pledges from village businesses, the total amount due from property taxes is now reduced to $680,000, which will proportionately reduce the average rate payer increase to about $50 a year..

In addition to the $120,000 pledge from village businesses the Town is receiving over $3.6 million in funding assistance to reconstruct the Village infrastructure and streetscapes:

That funding consists of:

- $1,500,000 [illegible] Economic Development Grant
- $1,100,000 payment by the MBTA to replace the James Book Drainage Culvert
- $500,000 value of work by the MBTA to reconstruct the rear municipal parking area.
- $169,000 Transportation Enhancement Grant for the St. Stephen's sidewalk safety project
- $250,000 in preliminary planning and design services by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation.

If the override passes it will represent less than 16 percent of the total dollars invested in Cohasset Village. Some consider this a fair contribution from the community for a significant infrastructure gain, a contribution of dollars to long overdue basic housekeeping needs. Others argue that this is not the best economic time for an override and may further burden those who are struggling with escalating property taxes. However, it is without question the only time the community can bury the utility lines at less than half the cost of what it would be if it were a stand-alone project. It is cost effective and makes sound planning sense to do it now.

Removing the overhead wires will provide more space for sidewalk and parking areas; protect the wires from future storm damage; and remove the aesthetic marring of crooked wooden poles and crisscrossing wires that overpower the village landscape today. If the work is not undertaken in conjunction with the reconstruction of the village sidewalks and roadways, then it likely will never be done.

A yes vote on Saturday will invest efficiently and with foresight into the village center, the heart of the community, an investment which future generations are sure to value and respect.

Vote no on burying wires

TO THE EDITOR:

I have two problems with last week's argument in favor of "burying village wires." The first is "who really benefits from this?" The Town of Cohasset does not have a two-tier property tax as do some of the "other towns all over New England" referenced by Mr. van der Lugt. Hence Cohasset businesses pay the same tax rate as I do on my house. From my perspective, absent a separate and higher tax rate on commercial property, the businesses in the village area are seeking a public subsidy to benefit their private businesses. Nearly all the historical "improvements" advanced in favor of spending $800,000 to bury the utilities are what we used to call the costs of doing business. Thus, the greatest direct beneficiaries of the project will be local businesses who pay the same tax rate as you and I. The value to me is cosmetic and I believe there are higher priorities.

Bringing me to my second problem: who is prioritizing public projects to be paid for by Cohasset citizens. In the latest Globe South is a headline "Schools expect devastating state aid cuts." If the state doesn't deliver adequate aid for Cohasset schools, who do we think will pay for what is already committed? How long will state aid be delayed? Two years? Three years? Oh, and don't forget those state "grants" to Cohasset for other public projects. Who will pay for all this?

Burying utilities even when it is "a once in a lifetime opportunity" is optional. Many other projects in the pipeline are not. I'd think by now we'd recognize this is the same old song of those espousing a position but with no real understanding of the actual outcome on everyone. Do school expenses cost what they were projected to cost? In fact, has any other town project cost what it was projected to cost? The closest I can recall is the sewer installation in Central Cohasset but then something happened at the last minute and we exceeded budget. And these are, in my view, "essential" town services, not optional projects benefiting a few.

In two days Cohasset residents will vote on a Prop 2-1/2 override. Gov. Romney is telling us to fasten our seat belts in terms of revenue sharing on already committed town projects. President Bush is telling us that federal money to the states is going to have to be cut back to help balance the budget and finance the war on terrorism. Our Town Manager is telling us that "free cash" isn't as free as originally projected. In this environment does it really make sense to vote to spend an additional $800,000 for a non-essential project? Vote "NO" on the 25th.

Priorities questioned

TO THE EDITOR:

After reading this weeks Mariner (Jan. 16 issue), I am writing as a concerned lifelong citizen of Cohasset regarding the downtown renovation. If the reporting is accurate, we are facing "bad fiscal news" for the town along with a bleak school budget. I am hard pressed to support spending $650,000 on underground wires, new sidewalks, etc. if we are looking at an additional override in the future just to maintain operation costs at a 4 percent increase for the school budget this fiscal year.

It is apparent that we will have to cut school programs system wide including special needs and METCO along with teacher layoffs and other programs that will affect our children's education.

While I understand that we have a window of opportunity to spend the $1.5 million Public Economic Grant and fund the revitalization, it might be wise to look to the future and recognize the longer-lasting benefits of funding education versus an "attractive" downtown.

Esthetics in one hand - Education in the other hand - yours to choose but I suggest that you vote no on Jan. 25. If you have school age children, get out and vote for their future.

HEALTH NOTES

Buckling up and use of child restraints save lives

By Steve Bobo

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I've recently been taken to task, among other people, by my wife, for letting our granddaughter, age 9, ride in the front seat of my air bag equipped van. This, and the fact that one of the Board of Health staff lost a niece in a senseless black ice skidding accident when she was ejected from the car and killed has prompted a reminder that the easiest way to avoid serious injury is to obey a few simple rules when you're in a car.

Seatbelts

A recent government report calculates the U.S. economic costs of an average roadway fatality at $977,000 and estimates the economic costs associated with a critically injured crash survivor at $1.1 million. The study from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) highlights the vital importance of seatbelt use. In one year, the use of seatbelts prevents an estimated 11,900 fatalities and 325,000 serious injuries, saving $50 billion in medical care, lost productivity and other injury related costs. Conversely, the failure of crash victims to wear seat belts leads to an estimated 9,200 unnecessary fatalities and 143,000 needless injuries, costing society $26 billion.

According to the doctor who heads NHTSA, "The evidence is overwhelming that seatbelts save lives and reduce the severity of injuries. This report makes it obvious why we must buckle up and why we must dedicate ourselves to a higher seatbelt use rate,"

Buckling seat belts should become a habit as important as looking for traffic when pulling into the street, and as common as combing your hair. Those who don't use seat belts are burdening us with additional health costs as well as the emotional worry of potentially losing our loved ones.

Child restraints

The first rule, recommended by NHTSA is that all children age 12 and under should ride in the back seat. For rules about specific seats or cars, contact the Board of Health.

These are the other rules for child seats:

- Use a rear-facing child seat for children from birth to at least 20 pounds and one year of age.
- Use a forward facing child seat for children who are at least 20 pounds and one year of age until about 40 pounds and approximately four years of age.
- Use a belt positioning booster seat from about 40 pounds until the child can sit with his or her back straight against the vehicle seat back cushion, with knees bent over the vehicle's seat edge, without slouching (approximately 4 ft. 9 ins.).

Use vehicle lap and shoulder belt for children who have outgrown a booster seat and can sit with his or her back straight against the vehicle seat back cushion, with knees bent over the vehicle's seat edge, without slouching, and feet on the floor (approximately 4 ft. 9 ins. and 80 pounds).

Call the Board of Health for the specific rules for your car. They save lives, so don't let your grandchild talk you into riding in the front seat.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Falcons — fast flyers and impressive hunters

A BIRDER'S-EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Falcons, like hawks, are raptors, or birds of prey. They get their name from the Latin word "falx", meaning "sickle". The long curved talons are the connection here. These talons on large feet become powerful weapons when used against prey. The beaks of falcons are notched with a "tooth" at the tip. They use their beaks to break the neck of their prey by severing the spinal cord.

Certain features characterize all "true falcons". All have pointed wings. They all sport "moustachial marks" in varying patterns and degrees of prominence. Females are larger than males. They do not build their own nests. They are particularly known for their ability to fly fast. They all catch prey in the air, although some species do not hunt in this manner exclusively. Not counting the one record of a Eurasian Kestrel collected at Nantasket Beach in 1887, there are just four species of falcons that appear in New England.

The American Kestrel used to be called Sparrow Hawk, in spite of the fact that it is not strictly speaking a hawk, and sparrows are not the major food in its diet. It is the most widespread and common falcon in North America. The use of nesting boxes has helped to increase their range northeast into Newfoundland, and deforestation, strangely, has increased their numbers in the Neotropics. It is certainly the falcon most often seen at World's End where I saw one on New Year's Day.

Kestrels like to hunt from perches, partly because they don't just eat birds, but enjoy mice, voles and other small mammals. They will even eat reptiles, amphibians and crickets. American Kestrels frequently hover in one spot above the ground. In fact, this is a helpful tool in identification. Right from birth kestrels are dimorphic, meaning males and females have different plumage. If you look at the back of a kestrel's head, the feathers form a pattern that looks like two huge black eyes on either side of a beak. This is to ward off predators approaching from behind. Kestrels use holes in trees or nesting boxes to lay their eggs, but do not add nesting material.

The Merlin was previously known as the Pigeon Hawk. Whether this is because pigeons are a favored prey or because merlins resemble doves in flight is not clear. Merlins are only slightly larger than kestrels, but are darker and less colorful. Their sideburns are less pronounced than those of a kestrel are. They use a variety of nesting places from ledges to tree cavities to old crow stick nests.

They eat birds and dragonflies caught in the air, but also will cruise low over the ground to find small mammals. Their flight is fast and very direct. When seen, they frequently appear to come from nowhere. Merlins love to harass other raptors, which consider merlins their prey. This behavior can be a clue to identification.

The Peregrine Falcon is found on every continent except Antarctica. It has wide dark "sideburns". Peregrines mostly eat songbirds and small shorebirds, but will take birds up to goose or even heron size. Exceptional eyesight allows them to recognize birds from as far away as 3,000 feet. They are known for an aerial maneuver known as the "stoop". To stoop, they tuck their wings in close to their body and dive vertically at great speed toward the ground, either knocking their prey to the ground or catching it in mid-air at the bottom of this dive. They have been widely reported to be the fastest birds on earth with speeds of up to 200 mph. Recent studies with better scientific instruments show their speeds to be fast, but probably considerably less than previously thought. Swifts may actually be faster flyers than the peregrines.

Peregrines went from the brink of extinction in the 1950s due to the effects of DDT to being removed from the federal Endangered Species List in 1999. This remarkable recovery is partly due to the banning of DDT in the United States, but also due to captive breeding and reintroduction programs. Birds from these programs were reintroduced to former territories and also to cities. Peregrines ordinarily lay their eggs on the ledges of high cliffs, but seem to consider urban skyscrapers good substitutes for cliffs. Since cities also have a good supply of pigeons, finding enough to eat is not too difficult. Peregrines now successfully nest on the Custom House Tower and the Christian Science Church in Boston. Although DDT has been banned in the United States, it is still used in the tropics where Peregrine Falcons spend their winters. This is a continuing concern.

Gyrfalcons are the largest falcons in the world and are falcons of the Arctic. However, they move southward in winter, sometimes even into New England. According to Veit and Petersen, the Gyrfalcon has been "a rare, but regular migrant or winter visitor" in Massachusetts since 1955. Last winter, there was great excitement, because a Gyrfalcon suddenly appeared on a ledge of the Boston Design Building in South Boston. It stayed around for several months, giving many birders, including me, a good look at a bird we did not expect to see. Norman Smith, director of Blue Hills Trailside Museum, has banded and studied raptors for many years. He was able to determine from the band number that this bird was the same dark morph female Gyrfalcon he had banded at Logan Airport in 1998. The bird has returned again this year, although my first attempt to find it was unsuccessful. There are no ptarmigans in Boston, but there should be plenty of ducks, gulls and rats to keep the gyr well fed.

Merlins and Peregrine Falcons are most often seen during migration, but some kestrels are here throughout the winter. Keep an eye out for them if you are walking on World's End or in Bare Cove Park. For a treat requiring a little more effort, you may want to go into Boston to look for the Gyrfalcon on or near the Boston Design Company building. If it is there, birders will materialize at the spot in an instant!

Tools they left behind

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The next time I'm in a hospital for an operation I think I'll bring a CPA along. It's not to check the bill, although that's not a bad idea. It's to count the tools the doctors used to carve up my insides. A study in last week's New England Journal of Medicine reported that surgeons leave their instruments behind in their patients about 1,500 times a year in the United States. I like to keep souvenirs of things I have done and places I've been but this is carrying collecting too far.

Think of how unnerving it must be to be wheeled out of the operating room, freshly stitched up after abdominal surgery, and hear the doctor ask, "Anybody here seen my watch?"

And think of how much more unnerving it must be when no one says he has seen the time piece.

I like to keep souvenirs of things I have done and places I've been but this is carrying collecting too far.

The study involved checking insurance records of about 800,000 operations in Massachusetts hospitals between 1985 and 2001 during which 61 pieces of equipment were left behind in 54 patients.

The Herald dug up (a poor choice of words) one of them, a 67-year-old Sharon man who entertained a nine-inch metal clamp in his stomach for two years before another doctor found it by accident.

And a 35-year-old Belmont woman who walked around for four months with a 12-inch metal and rubber retractor in her stomach that caused her pain in several areas.

"It was moving around," she said.

And you thought that sawbones at Mount Auburn Hospital who left his patient in mid-surgery to cash his paycheck represented the pits in surgery.

Lest you think that a sponge or a surgical clamp left behind and a sharp malpractice attorney might make you a millionaire, be advised that the average suit nets the patient only $52,581.

It's spilling a cup of hot coffee in your lap at a McDonald's that really can put you in a higher tax bracket. The patients most at risk are those who are fat — or "larger bodied," as the study puts it — which offer more nooks and crannies in which instruments can hide.

It also offers another opportunity for the victim to sue Burger King for making him or her fat by putting all that grease in their French fires and burgers.

The favorite place for the sponge or the clamp to play hide and seek with the operating team are the abdomen, the pelvis and the chest.

The items most often left behind by careless doctors and nurses are the sponges that are used to soak up blood and excess liquids while the operation is going on.

I haven't had abdominal surgery for going on to 15 years now and I've been thirsty ever since.

I wonder if they counted all the sponges when they sewed me up and sent me home?

Takes issue with McMorris statement

BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

I take issue with Ms. McMorris' statement that Rich Silvia is not a good senior housing advocate and does not deserve to serve on the Community Preservation Committee. This simply is not true.

During Rich's 12-year tenure on the Housing Authority, he has been an active advocate for low income and senior housing in Cohasset, and a participant in several housing CPI and CPC regional groups. Rich has been proactive in the Cohasset Housing Authority's search for new low-and-moderate-income housing sites in Cohasset. The CHA has recently been working with the Town Manager, DPW, South Shore Housing and others to develop a site off of Route 3A. Rich works with South Shore Housing, regional, state and federal funding sources to find innovative ways to not only develop and fund, but to form a nonprofit corporation to manage housing — not just for those in retirement, but for young people getting started, town employees, shopkeepers, tradesmen, single parents and seniors who do not have a fixed income or stock portfolio to fall back on.

When most abandoned the proposed senior housing in the old Osgood School, Rich was an integral part of the CHA team that worked to develop a proposal to convert the former School into senior housing with an innovative senior daycare center and fought hard to bring it to Town Meeting. If this plan had been supported and voted through, Cohasset would not be confronting 40B issues now.

As a member of the CPC, Rich rose to the challenge when asked to spearhead a combined effort to preserve the Barnes property as open space. As a result, 32 acres of deep-core forest habitat were saved with no impact on the tax rate.

Rich attends seminars and classes on affordable housing and environmental issues; he recently graduated from The Executive Office of Environmental Affair's Community Preservation Institute at the University of Massachusetts.

What better credentials could anyone have? If Rich Silvia is unfit to sit on the Housing Authority and the CPC, then no one is.

But of even greater concern is that I believe his removal from the Housing Authority is directly related to his opposition to The Senior Housing Committee's proposed development on the Stop & Shop site. Other CPC members voted against it. Can they expect to be replaced? It certainly gives the appearance of a blatant attempt to dominate and intimidate an independent CPC.

The following is only one of many reasons the CPC turned down the Senior Housing Committee: Chapter 165 of the Acts of 2002, An Act Relative to Community Preservation of Historic Resources, Section 4, (2)....with respect to community housing, the Community Preservation Committee shall recommend, wherever possible, the reuse of existing buildings or construction of new buildings on previously developed sites.

It is a very challenging time. Cohasset needs people like Rich if we are to preserve the integrity of its character.

Donations sought for Teen Garage

TO THE EDITOR:

Due to the fiscal 2004 budget crisis facing the town, the Recreation Commission's budget of $15,600 for staffing of the Teen Garage has been slashed $10,000, reflecting a meager $5,600 of town support for this popular operation.

The Garage is a safe, supervised haven for Cohasset youngsters grades 6-12 and is located directly behind the Red Lion Inn, in the town's old highway department garage. The Garage is open and supervised for youngsters to drop in, socialize with peers, play electronic games, pool, etc. and offers dances and other special activities on a regular basis year round.

Approximately $40,000 was raised via the generosity of residents and local business and civic groups during 1998/1999, and through the laborious efforts of Youth Resources Committee members and residents, the 50-year-old building was transformed into a Teen Center.

It has been via small, per capita fee charges for dances and special events only, that the operational costs of the Garage have been satisfied, i.e.: electricity, phone and heating bills, as well as equipment video games, etc.

The town government support came in the form of $15,600 per fiscal year allocated to the Recreation Commission budget for the supervision/staffing of the Garage. The Recreation Director assumed overall responsibilities of Garage operations, upkeep and staff.

In our effort to accommodate the budget deficit of $10,000 for staffing of the Garage, we are asking residents and local business/civic organizations for financial support via tax deductible donations.

There are self-addressed envelopes available on the table, outside the Recreation office in the foyer of Town Hall, for mailing your thoughtful and greatly appreciated donation to us. Checks can be made payable to the Town of Cohasset and please include your mailing address, if not on your check, in order that we can acknowledge your generosity.

Democrats to hold caucus in Cohasset

A caucus will be held for all registered Democrats in Cohasset at Town Hall on Saturday, Feb. 8 at 10 a.m. to elect five delegates and five alternates to the 2003 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. In each case, two male, two female and one either will be elected.

The Convention will be held on Saturday, June 7 at the Paul E. Tsongas Arena in Lowell. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset.

Candidates for delegate and alternate must consent to nomination in writing.

All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. Those not elected as delegate and alternate, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 10 Granite St Quincy MA 02169 not later than 10 days after the caucus date.

For more information please contact Agnes McCann at 383-0222 or the Democratic State Committee at 617- 472-0637

Rich Silvia applies for re-appointment to CPC

McMorris seeks other applicants

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Richard Silvia, the former governor-appointed member of the Housing Authority, has applied for a vacancy on the Community Preservation Committee.

Silvia previously served on the CPC as the Housing Authority's representative, but was removed from both groups when former acting-governor Jane Swift, during her last days in office, appointed Taffy Nothnagle to the Housing Authority in Silvia's place.

Silvia said he believes he may face opposition to being re-appointed to the CPC from Selectman Ronnie McMorris, whose husband, David McMorris, created the CPC's current vacancy when he resigned due to other commitments earlier this month.

Silvia's belief that McMorris is opposing his bid stems from comments McMorris made at the last Selectmen's meeting.

At that meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad recommended Silvia for the vacant "at-large" seat on the CPC. "Rich is a very important member on (the CPC) right now, and it would make sense going into their budget cycle that we have continuity, so I would suggest we appoint Rich to fill David's position," Haddad told the Selectmen.

"I don't look at this as having anything to do with Rich Silvia. I look at this as having to do with making sure the CPC has someone who addresses the town's need for affordable community housing."
— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested the Selectmen let the public know of the vacancy first.

"The Community preservation Act is supposed to be addressing three areas, one of which is affordable housing," McMorris said. "It was my feeling that Dave (McMorris) was really the member of that committee who had the most interest in affordable community housing, and my concern is that we find someone with the same interest to replace him. While I appreciate the fact that Rich has come forward and has served on the committee, I would like to put it out the community and see if there is, in fact, someone who does have that interest."

Selectman Fred Koed suggested Silvia's experience on the Housing Authority was testimony to his interest in affordable housing.

McMorris later said, "I think we need someone who has the interest to serve on a subcommittee on housing, which to my knowledge, Rich (Silvia) was not doing."

Silvia, who served on the Housing Authority for 12 years, said he was surprised to learn of McMorris' comments. "She has no idea obviously what I do," he said. "I have been working on housing projects for a long time."

In an interview this week, McMorris said she was not trying to say Sylvia was not qualified for the CPC. "I didn't oppose his appointment," she said. "I don't look at this as having anything to do with Rich Silvia. I look at this as having to do with making sure the CPC has someone who addresses the town's need for affordable community housing."

McMorris said because of her role in getting the town to adopt the Community Preservation Act, she feels "an obligation" to see that the CPC is concerned about affordable housing, which is an issue the committee was formed to address.

If there is a rift between Silvia and McMorris, it may stem from a close vote in late December when the CPC decided to deny funding to the Senior Housing Committee, which McMorris serves on. The SHC had requested the CPC to provide $10,000 for financial planning and $2.1 million over 20 years for a proposed senior housing project on a town-owned site behind Stop & Shop on Route 3A.

At the last selectmen's meeting, McMorris alluded to the request, saying a proposal from the SHC did not receive "the support it should have."

Silvia said he did not support funding the project because it was "80 percent upscale housing" and he did not think it in the best interest of the town.

Silvia said his record on housing speaks for itself, citing a plan he developed to turn the old Osgood School into a senior housing facility, which eventually lost out to another plan to turn the building into a library.

"We have a great library now," Silvia said. "But if we had gone through the plans for senior housing, we may not have all the problems with 40B that we do now."

The appointment to fill the vacancy on the CPC will be taken up at the next Board of Selectmen meeting, Jan. 28.

The CPC agreed Tuesday to send a letter to Board of Selectmen recommending Silvia's appointment.

We'll make you smile.

Haddad-AdCom budget powwow

At 7:30 p.m.tonight

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Town Manager Mark Haddad will meet with the Advisory Board tonight to discuss the town's budget for fiscal year 2004. The advisory board will make recommendations to Town Meeting this spring based on their reviews of the budget. "They're an important body," said Haddad. "They carry a lot of weight. They're the eyes and ears of the town."

Haddad said he expects $436,000 in local aid and lottery revenue cut from the budget for 2004, making the current job of the Advisory Board all the more important. If a general override is going to pass at Town Meeting in March, a vote of confidence from the Advisory Board will go a long way toward making that happen.

The estimated amount of the expected general override was originally pegged at around $485,000. Though budget news from the state has become far more dire in the days since that figure was calculated, Haddad said an increase in the override is not something he would seek. "That's totally in the hands of the Selectmen, but I am not recommending that," he said.

Haddad's attempts to pin down exactly how much local aid Cohasset will lose in the next fiscal year have been unsuccessful. In recent weeks, Haddad said, the fiscal forecast seems to change almost daily, and it's never quite accurate. At issue is whether Cohasset will be hit harder by the state than other towns because it is not as dependant on local aid. The town relies on the state for 8 percent of its operating budget of $29 million.

"I'm just sitting here waiting for the Governor to put out his own budget. Make a decision. Give us a number."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Haddad said he is in constant contact with Rep. Garrett Bradley, but he is not convinced the current numbers are final. "You know something," he said. "I'm just sitting here waiting for the Governor to put out his own budget. Make a decision. Give us a number."

Haddad said he is inviting both the School Committee and the Advisory Committee to attend the next Selectmen's meeting on Jan. 28 so that all three groups can consider together how to make up for the local aid cutbacks.

Tonight's meeting will be a first for two new members of the Advisory Committee, Bernadette Faulkner of Heather Drive and Jaime Gilman of Rust Way. Both were appointed this week by the Town Moderator, George Marlette.

What's New

"Land's End" by Michael Cunningham (New Nonfiction: 917.44 / CUN)

Cunningham, Pulitzer Prize winning author of "The Hours," first came to Provincetown more than 20 years ago and promptly fell in love with its beauty and charm. This is his very personal celebration of one of the most idiosyncratic and extraordinary towns in America — "the Morocco of North America, the New Orleans of the north."

"Chasing Tiger" by Curt Sampson (New Nonfiction: 796.352 / Sampson)

The author of six books on golf, Curt Sampson understands the game and the impact Tiger Woods has had on it — but what about the other guys? In Chasing Tiger, Sampson charts the state of golf as the new century unfolds and takes a look at its rising stars.

"The Genealogy Handbook" by Ellen Galford (New Nonfiction: 929/Galford)

Ever want to track the adventures of your ancestors and discover long-lost relatives? This is the book to get you started - a comprehensive guide that provides the tools for both traditional and contemporary research methods as well as "expert advice on how to use the internet to further your research on-line.

"In the Devil's Snare" by Mary Beth Norton (New Nonfiction: 133.4/Norton)

The Salem Witchcraft crisis of 1692 is one of the most perennially fascinating and horrifying events in our history. In this thorough, meticulously researched account, historian Norton gives us as clear a picture of what happened during that brutal winter as we are ever likely to have.

"Divided Loyalties" by Richard M. Ketchum (New Nonfiction: 974.7/Ketchum)

Subtitled "How the American Revolution Came to New York," Ketchum's new book (he has authored four others on the Revolution) focuses on the many ways the conflict tore apart this already deeply-divided city. At the center of the narrative are two families, the Livingstons and the Delanceys, whose divided loyalties reveal how individuals with similar life experiences chose different sides as the war erupted.

Building update

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library will close its South Main Street facility on Monday, Feb. 17, and tentatively open its new Ripley Road building on Monday, March 3.

No books or fines will be due during this time period. Also, we will not be able to place holds on books. It is suggested that residents visit the Hingham Public Library during this transition period.

We apologize for the inconvenience in advance and look forward to serving the Cohasset community in our new space very soon. Look for other notices regarding the opening in upcoming Library Corner bulletins.

Romney gets power to be the bad guy

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Mitt Romney campaigned for governor on the promise he could balance the budget without significant revenue increases or service cuts — i.e., without balancing the budget.

Last week, when logic required that Romney acknowledge cuts in essential services are coming, and increases in local taxes and state fees are under consideration, no one at the Statehouse let out an involuntary yelp of astonishment.

The numbers are what they are. Romney's first budget move was not to suggest "trimming the fat" or restructuring. He requested, and received from the House, power to reduce the local aid account by up to $200 million, with the proviso each city and town suffer the same percentage reduction. The Senate spent last Thursday grappling with the same issue and adopting a version of the House bills granting Romney greater discretion in making local aid cuts. Behavior on all sides was quite excellent – crisis behavior. The House had several difficult caucuses and wound up giving Romney most of what he wanted. Romney was careful to praise the Legislature, and in fact praise and blame for the situation was evenly divided.

For longtime observers, the striking development of the week was how the Legislature's most powerful player willingly gave up the Legislature's most important power. Tom Finneran, the Speaker, is frequently perceived as the most significant political force at the Statehouse. On the surface, you'd think he'd be unwilling to give up budgetary power and let Romney claim credit for solving the fiscal problem.

Beneath that surface, though, he was dealing with the core realities of democracy — he couldn't get his members to agree on what needs to be done, so they're going to let Romney do it. As one rep said in the hallway: "If he looks good, we look good."

Or bad. An odd and unpleasant example of the kind of thinking Romney will have to avoid came as cities and towns bemoaned the fact that neither they nor the state budgeted enough this year for snow and ice removal. The shortfall at the state level is $23 million and growing. The reps and mayors seemed to be suggesting the problem was too much winter instead of too little planning. Michael Norton of the News Service this week looked at the same numbers you'd think the lawmakers would. Over the last 10 years it's cost the state an average of $44.5 million a year to clear its winter roads. This year, reps and senators budgeted $16.5 million. The phenomenon was echoed in municipal budgets statewide. The state and locals argued they were just following standard procedure – that they under-budget for snow and ice every year, hoping for warm weather. It's the essence of poor planning, and the flaw is obvious: it's not warmer than usual every year. This year, for instance. And the state and communities have been experiencing winter since 1620. It is the kind of behavior that got the state into such trouble. Failing to match budget reserves with easily predictable increases in health care costs was another.

This is why, whatever posturing goes on in the House about "fiscal discipline," or in the governor's office about restructuring, the numbers describing reality are written in red ink, and everyone — House, Senate, Romney — looks foolish. Their behavior was commendable, but their math still could use some work.

• It was another one of those shiny, happy days on the Hill. Proud family members and political supporters gathered and beamed as officials took the oaths to begin their terms. This time, the moment had come to swear in the treasurer, secretary of state, attorney general and auditor. AG Thomas Reilly, Secretary William Galvin and Auditor Joseph DeNucci are old hands, but "Tim for Treasurer" Cahill is a new face.

• Cahill's first major appointment caught many people off guard. Democrat Rep. Joseph Sullivan, House chairman of the Transportation Committee, will be the commissioner of the State Lottery, which is headquartered in Sullivan's hometown of Braintree. Sullivan has no experience running such a large organization, but Cahill said Sullivan understands the importance of Lottery receipts for cities and towns. The Lottery's going to need a good lobbying voice this year as it combats plans to reduce prizes and allow alternative gaming venues such as casinos.

• Former Gov. Michael Dukakis had kind words in The Herald for Jane Edmonds, the former head of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, whom Gov. Romney tapped as director of labor and work force development. And Boston Mayor Thomas Menino, in the same story, praised Barabara Berke, the state's new director of economic development. The governor named Christine Ferguson the new commissioner of public health, saying she brings critically-needed expertise to state government's toughest job: bringing health care costs under control. "I am confident that Christy is the right person to help lead this effort."

• The group that put Bill Clinton on the political map is hoping to put a Democratic in the governor's office. Al From, founder of the Democratic Leadership Council, came to Massachusetts to promote the reinvigoration of the DLC here. The council should stress a slate of varied "mainstream" issues. From said. Sens. Richard Moore, D-Uxbridge, and Marc Pacheco, D-Taunton, are the politicians most identified with the DLC. "We want to speak to the office park dads and the suburban soccer moms," said Rep. Barry Finegold, D-Andover, another leader of the group. "Obviously, we didn't do that in the last election."

• Romney stood on a recently reconstructed bridge in Arlington to announce new policies aimed at easing traffic jams and fighting suburban sprawl. Romney said his administration is going to make repair of damaged bridges and roads a higher priority than commencing new projects. The new approach will play itself out in a re-prioritizing of transportation projects big and large under the oversight of top Romney aide Douglas Foy.

Got a suggestion for better government?

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has announced a unique opportunity for residents in his district to improve the way government works in Massachusetts.

The Pioneer Institute, a non-profit research group, is sponsoring the 12th Better Government Competition, which seeks ideas from individuals about ways to improve the quality of government services and deliver them more efficiently.

This year's competition poses four problem statements in the areas of special education, the Commonwealth's budget crisis, Medicaid funding, and small business development. One winning entry in each category will receive $3,000. Implementation of winning ideas from previous competitions has saved Massachusetts taxpayers more than $300 million.

"Making government more efficient should always be our goal and I urge my constituents to participate by sending in an entry," Hedlund said

For more specific information about the competition go to:

www.pioneerinstitute.org/bgc or call (617)723-2277 and ask for Shawni Littlehale.

Randi is a feisty kitten.

Legislative seminar

The office of State Senator Robert L. Hedlund is now accepting applications for the Citizens Legislative Seminar (CLS). The program, established in 1976 and run bi-annually, is designed to familiarize citizens first-hand with the legislature and the lawmaking process. Throughout the six-week program, CLS participants will listen to presentations from Senators as well as Representatives on the lawmaking process.

"The CLS is another wonderful way for constituents to become more familiarized with the legislative process," said Hedlund.

The Citizens Legislative Seminar will meet every Wednesday from March 19 to April 23, from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. The seminar is open to any interested citizen. Please contact Hedlund's Statehouse office at (617) 722-1646 by Thursday, Jan. 23 if you are interested in attending the CLS or would like more information.

Cohasset-Norwell gymnasts win fourth in a row to set up title showdown

Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Norwell/Cohasset girl's gymnastics team beat Randolph/Milton Tuesday night 125.8-118.7, improving their overall record to 9-2, (7-1) in Pilgrim Conference II.

Tuesday's victory set up a showdown that will take place tonight at 7:30 against first place Hanover at the South Shore Community Center in Cohasset.

Thursday night's meet versus Hanover could very well decide who will be the Pilgrim Conference II champions. For Norwell/Cohasset, a victory could mean a possible share of the league title with Hanover. A loss would knock them out of title contention all together.

"It's really going to be a huge meet for us," said Norwell/Cohasset coach Kara Connerty. "I hope we can get a nice crowd out to support the girls versus Hanover."

Their were some standout performances versus Randolph/Milton Tuesday night.

On the vault, Cohasset's Meredith Bixby came in second place with a score of 8.3, and Nancy Durkin, from Cohasset, came in third with a 8.2.

On the bars, Bixby came in second with a 7.7, and Norwell's Jenn Guiney came in third with a 7.3.

Bixby came in first on the beam with an 8.4, and was followed by teammates Durkin and her 8.2, and Katherine Coyne of Norwell, who had a 7.9.

On the floor, Bixby came in second with an 8.6, Durkin came in third with an 8.4 and Erin Kelly of Norwell came in fourth with a 7.8.

In the All Around, Bixby came in second to Randolph star Jenn Ng (33.5), and Durkin came in fourth.

Casey, McKenna and Baroudis key win at Cohasset Wrestling Tourney

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Torin Sweeney asserted in this space a week ago that a lost coin flip may well have cost his team a win in head-to-head competition with perennial powerhouse Duxbury on January 11, as Duxbury then got to choose even weight match-ups.

Well, that position gained a whole lot of credibility this past Saturday when Sweeney's Cohasset High wrestling team fended off the challenge of Duxbury and nine other teams to win its own annual Cohasset Wrestling Tourney. In fact, wrestlers from the host Cohasset team finished ahead of Duxbury wrestlers in eight of the 13 weight divisions in which both teams scored points.

"It was a good day," noted Sweeney. "We had some nice surprise, and one or two surprises that went the other way, but on the day there was a lot more good than bad.

"We're developing a nice rivalry with Duxbury that could carry over to Sectionals. It's a friendly rivalry, with good sportsmanship on both sides. I think we both bring out the best in the other team."

Cohasset finished with 197.5 points, a relatively comfortable 13.5 points ahead of second place Duxbury (184) and well ahead of third place finishing Hingham (129). Cohasset's primary Pilgrim Conference challenger, Rockland, took fourth place with 118 points. The rest of the field went Lynnfield (84.6), Hanover (62), Scituate (51.5), Marshfield (51), Holbrook (31) Hull (25) and Norwell (16).

Cohasset took home points in all but three of the 14 weight divisions, with four first place finishes, three seconds, two thirds and two fourths.

The wins were recorded by senior Chris McKenna in the 147 pound division, senior Mike Casey at 173, and the Baroudi brothers, senior Terry at 137 and sophomore Matt at

Basketballers end losing streak with a win over Hull

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The ultimate cure-all for a team's ills has always been a key win over a rival. The 65-56 win the boys basketball team recorded over Hull on Tuesday might have been exactly the fuel they needed to turn their season around.

"There's nothing to get the team pumped up like beating Hull," noted senior tri-captain Ian Kidder, who was one of four Skippers in double-figures with 11 points. "I think this win will change the momentum of our season."

The change would be a very welcome one, after a four game losing streak left the Skippers in a 2-8 hole, just another Norwell and Harwich loss away from playoff elimination. Now at 3-8, the Skippers will try to reverse the luck they had against league opponents Abington and Mashpee in their second go-rounds with them.

Against Hull, Cohasset led the whole way, opening up a six point lead at halftime, and never letting the visitors close the gap. Hull's dangerous big man, Chris Tabella, a solid all-around gamer at 6-foot-6, was kept in check, limited to 10 points, and plenty of bench time with foul trouble.

The Skippers also held down Brad Cohen, the Pirates' most potent scorer, never allowing him to establish a rhythm in the paint or on the perimeter.

Meanwhile Cohasset's center,

Scituate-Cohasset swimmers get first win of season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Oh, the joy of competition.

After finding themselves completely overmatched in the opening two contests of the year, the Scituate-Cohasset swim team took on Cardinal Spellman, their first comparable test. The Sci-Cohs took full advantage of the match-up, running away with a score of 95-43 before the scorers stopped adding points with three events to go.

"This was a meet I knew we had to have, and I knew we had the talent to do it," said third year coach Jamie Kearney. "I felt that if everyone swam their races the best they could, this meet would be a no-contest."

The Sci-Cohs set the tone early, although their Tuesday night match did not even begin until 7:30 p.m., starting right after a meet between Old Colony rivals Nauset and Sharon. Sharon won both the boys and girls matches, leaving them the front runners to take the OCL this year.

Scituate divers Becky Keyes and Darin Webster took a 1-2 finish in the opening event, outscoring their two Spellman counterparts 268-201.

The swimmers showed equal success out of the gate, with the 200 medley relay team of Bryan Bilton, David Ingber, Maran Monaco and Delia Regan taking first place points. Their time of 2:04 was the top medley time recorded by a Sci-Coh team this season.

Freshman James Smith was the team's top performer on the day, winning both of his individual events, the 200 Individual Medley (by an unheard-of margin 16 seconds) and the 100 butterfly, inching closer to Sectional qualification with a time of 1:08.

With lopsided win over Harwich, Cohasset skaters clearly team to beat

This seems the ideal week to begin my regular Cohasset High hockey report with a personal apology. I've been kicking around in my head for the last three weeks or so.

Yes, I was one of the many who offered for general consumption how long the odds were for a team from a school the size of Cohasset High to recover from the loss of a 10 key players.

EXTRA POINTS, PAGE 16

Top Dogs

Even though the Skippers returned four huge pieces, and two or three other established support players, I figured no way could they overcome the losses. Previous year state tourney qualifying teams Norwell, Harwich and, most especially, Abington/East Bridgewater weren't hit nearly as hard by losses as the Skippers. I concluded that depth of talent and experience would be the difference for those teams in the long run in the South Shore League title chase.

My bad.

First and foremost, I underestimated what superb talents Matt Davis, John Durkin, Tom Anderson and Mike Devine were. Not only is it clear that no team in the South Shore League has a top quartet even approaching the Skippers fantastic foursome, you could make the argument that these players are all among the top six or seven players in the league.

Harwich's Ryan Maguire leads the league in scoring, but Durkin and Davis were clearly the best players on the ice in Saturday's battle of the unbeatens against Maguire's Rough Ryders team on Pilgrim Arena ice while leading the Skippers to surprisingly easy 8-1 win.

I remember these two senior captains being very good players last year, but their exploits were somewhat overshadowed, at least in my perception, by the play of team leading scorer Greg O'Connell and defenseman extraordinaire Tim Straughn. We named these two now departed players to our Mariner All-Scholastic team, along with Mike Devine, honoring his incredibly steady and often underappreciated play as a stay-at-home defenseman. I now find myself wishing I'd pushed harder to find room for Durkin and Davis, and perhaps Anderson too.

Once again, my bad.

Of course, at the time I underestimated these Skippers, I had no way of knowing that a freshman goaltender, Stephan Parnell, would be able to step so seamlessly into the huge skates of South Shore League all-star goaltender Dan Kinchla, nor that the team as a whole would respond so well to rookie head coach John Blake and the defense-first system he sought to instill, nor that young veterans Ted Straughn and Mike Rasmussen would be so much improved, nor that there'd be such noteworthy contributions from first year regulars such as sophomore defensemen Joe Durkin and Tim Pilczak and freshman forwards Matt O'Connell, Mark Bouchard, and Brandon Smith.

"We thought all along we were a pretty good team," said Davis. "A lot of people were saying we were no better than third in the league after a 21-1-1 season last year. We thought the lack of respect we were getting from some people was ridiculous, but it looks like we surprised some people."

(Yes, and I was one of those "people," and the grin on Matt's face told me he knew this too)

"But we won't be surprising them anyone anymore," he continued. "We've got to come out big every game, especially league games, because they're all coming after us now."

OK, they're for real! The Skippers are clearly the team to beat in the South Shore League, and might, in my estimation (not that this is worth a whole lot at this point), even have a thing or two to say come state tourney time.

Now on to the game action:

Wednesday's 11-3 shellacking of SSL rival Mashpee was hardly unexpected. However, Saturday's 8-1 lambasting of Harwich, a team that had previously beaten purported SSL contenders Abington/East Bridgewater and Norwell, truly was.

"I think we've sent the message that the South Shore League championship goes through us," stated coach Blake, a former assistant at hockey factories Thayer Academy and Blue Hills. "But we've got to be ready for the best games from every team from here on out. We can't afford to let down one bit. Teams are going to be gunning for us now."

Harwich actually got on the board first on a nifty tally from the aforementioned Maguire just 4:16 in.

The Skippers seemed a little sluggish to start the game. However, falling behind for the first time in over 12 periods of hockey seemed to spark the fire, and Ted Straughn finally broke the scoring ice for the Skippers with 4:11 remaining in the first period on the power play, camping himself in front of the Harwich goal and deftly redirecting an Anderson slap shot from the point out of the air past the Harwich goaltender.

Durkin and Davis combined 102 seconds later on what coach Blake considered the key goal of the game. After picking up a loose puck near his team's blue line, Durkin quickly turned on the jets as he raced up the right boards to get himself one-on-one with the deepest defender. As he approached the corner, he then flipped a backhand pass that led perfectly the hard charging Davis in the slot for the quick one timer home, making it a 2-1 game.

"I thought that was absolutely the key goal of the game, and it was an absolutely beautiful goal too," said Blake. "That was a picture perfect 2-on-1 rush by two players who just keep coming up big for us. That goal really gave us the momentum going into the first break."

To say the least. It was all Skippers from there on out.

The lead doubled 5:55 into the second when Davis returned the favor to Durkin, feeding him beautifully in the slot from the corner for a quick tip-in through the pads of the helpless Harwich netminder.

Cohasset would score three more times in the period, with Davis lighting the lamp twice on a pair of positively electrifying solo efforts.

The two tallies, at 9:20 and 13:57 of the second, looked nearly identical. On the first, with the Skippers shorthanded, Davis picked off a pass just inside his team's blueline, split the opposing point men to walk in on the Harwich goaltender, then froze him with a nifty fake to the forehand and beat him with a backhand just inside the left post.

Davis' second lamplighter of the period and third of the game came when he again split the defense at his own blue line, this time after taking a quick feed from the backboards by Devine. He used the same exact move to freeze the Harwich goalie, but this time slid it between his widespread legs to make it a 6-1 game.

Sandwiched between those goals, frosh Brandon Smith netted his first high school goal, shaking off a check to stretch out one-handed and poke the puck through the pads of the Rough Ryders beleaguered netminder on a nice pass from the corner by Pilczak.

Coach Blake emptied his bench in the third period, but the onslaught continued. Rasmussen made it 7-1 with 6:54 remaining in the game, as he fended off some heavy checking in the slot to punch home a centering feed from O'Connell.

Junior forward Mark Davis closed out the scoring with just 12 seconds remaining with assists going to Smith and freshman Mike Martone.

Hockey Notes

In the Mashpee game, Durkin had a career night with a pair of goals and four assists. Devine also tallied twice, and freshman Brian Straughn netted the first goal of his high school career.

Alas, all good things must come to an end, and that's just what happened to Cohasset's five game winning streak on Monday…in fact, it came to a screeching halt.

The Skippers fell for the second time this year to Scituate, the second ranked Div. 3 team in Eastern Mass by Hockey Night in Boston. However, unlike the 5-3 setback in the season opener, the Cohasset skaters were clearly a little overwhelmed in the Monday matinee 7-1 loss to the Sailors. This dropped Cohasset to 5-5-1 on the season.

The Skippers did well to stay with the deep and veteran savvy Sailors through the first 20 minutes or so, holding to a 1-0 deficit, but Scituate netted two in the middle of the second period, and then sophomore Steve Sullivan scored a pair early in the third to complete a natural hat trick and essentially ice the game for the Sailors (9-1-1).

Durkin added his team best 15th goal on the power play (assists to Davis and Anderson) with 6:51 to go in the game to break up the shutout bid of returning Mariner All-Scholastic goaltender Joe Duggan.

John Durkin has led the team in scoring since he netted the team's first goal of the year, and his total now through 11 games is 24 points (15 goals, nine assists). However, Davis has been closing the gap since he moved from defense back to forward, and is now at 18 points (8 G, 10A). Ted Straughn checks in third with 11 points (3G, 8 A), followed by Rasmussen (4-6—10) and Anderson (2-5—7).

Despite giving up five of the seven goals Monday, freshman goalie Stefan Parnell still boasts an excellent goals against average of 2.4 (24 goals against in 10 games).

The Skippers were slated to get back into action against first year varsity program Carver at Bridgewater on Wednesday , and have a big non-league showdown with perennial power Hanover at Pilgrim Arena Saturday afternoon (12:20 start).

Bilton, a Cohasset senior, also scored double firsts, winning the 100 and 50 yard freestyle events. He was on another first place relay team as well, anchoring the 200 yard free relay team of Bilton, Ingber, Smith and Monaco.

Monaco had a solid day, pitching in two second-place finishes, right behind Bilton in both freestyle events. Scituate junior Coral Yang, Cohasset senior Ingber and Cohasset freshman Amanda Daley completed similar days, recording seconds in both of their individual events.

"We are not the type of team that will beat anybody with a few superstars," mentioned Kearney. "We rely on our depth and the contributions we receive from a number of talented swimmers."

With the match completely wrapped up after the 200 free relay, Cohasset continued to place solidly, putting an exclamation point on the match with the 400 free relay win of Kim Pfluger, Garret Donovan, Stephanie Long and Shevawn Mayo.

The win bumped up the team's OCL record to 1-1, but they remain sub-.500 after their non-league loss in Nantucket last Saturday. Nantucket, easily the strongest team the Sci-Cohs will face this season, dispatched their visitors 94-81, graciously only adding Sci-Coh points for the final four events.

Smith recorded the team's only individual first place on the day, winning the 200 IM with a time of 2:27.59. The team of Smith, Donovan, Monaco and Ingber won the 200 free relay.

Notables on the day included Nantucket's Henry Butler setting a school record in the 500 free with a time of 5:10.23, and Kaitlyn Ellis doing the same with the girls record in a time of 5:41.36.

"Nantucket is unbelievable; there's no way around it," said Kearney. "We came down here, we swam our best, and I can't ask for anything more. But they always have some of the best swimmers around."

The Sci-Cohs will take on the Taunton Tigers this Friday at the Taunton Boys and Girls Club, a non-league match-up.

Apology for swim team article

Last week, I wrote an article that was run in the Cohasset and Scituate Mariners discussing the recent misfortunes of the Scituate/Cohasset swim team, not realizing that some of my tongue-in-cheek anecdotes would cause any sort of stir. The piece was written with the intentions of good fun, however some points were called to my attention that need addressing.

First, I meant nothing against the Athletic Departments of Scituate or Cohasset for the meet cancellations, they were the result of bad weather and bad timing. The AD's of both schools have been instrumental in scheduling all of our meets and reserving pool time.

Also, no insults were intended towards the bus drivers. The mention of one practice where a bus did not show up was meant to show the bad luck that had befallen the team, not to imply anything against the drivers themselves. The drivers also have been remarkably accommodating for the team, and mentioning the incident showed poor journalistic decision-making.

Finally, I would like to apologize for making the new Scituate fitness center seem unappreciated. The room has been put to very good use with weekly dryland practices, and it simply did not belong in an article attached to the "curse of the swim team".

I am a high school senior who, admittedly, is more fallible than most adult correspondents you will read in the CNC newspapers. This article has been a learning experience for me, and I hope you will accept my apology.

Sincerely,
David Ingber

As the Sports Editor for the Scituate and Cohasset Mariners, as well as five other CNC papers, I take the final responsibility for what appeared in Dave's article. I recognized the story to be almost entirely a tongue-in-cheek piece from Dave, and, subsequently, granted a little more license than I ordinarily would have. I know Dave, a valued member of our Editorial staff, had no intention of insulting or provoking. Ditto for me.

Still, I apologize to anyone who was offended.

Sincerely,
Mike Spellman

MAX LAX REPORT

The South Shore Lacrosse family suffered a startling loss of one of its most promising young atheletes on Saturday night as Ryan Flannery (Scituate) was killed in a tragic auto accident. This bright and entertaining kid was an assistant coach for MaxLax as well as an outstanding player for BC High and a mentor for many of the younger laxers that he came in contact with. His patience and outgoing demeanor were never in short supply when someone was looking for some help with their game and he will always be remembered as an excellent role model, a stellar athlete and scholar, and as a true friend to many.

MaxLax wishes to extend its deepest sympathies and heartfelt prayers to his family for their loss. Ryan will indeed be missed, both on and off the field.

PLAY OF THE WEEK: U12 BLAZERS x TOMCATS – Did you see this one ?

The BLAZERS were in need of win to create some positive momentum as they started off this 3rd session after having a very challenging 2nd session and they got exactly what the doctor ordered in this commanding victory over the newcomer TOMCATS. One of the pivotal plays happened off of a great save by veteran goaltenderWes Ulmer who then began the clear by dodging several defenders and "hollering" for a middie-back as he crossed the mid-line at full speed. Catching the waiting defense a little off guard, Ulmer continued through the lanes and found glory with a nice upper corner shot from about 15 yards out. Who says Goalies don't have fun. You don't see this one very often . . .

Indoor Spring Training & Battery Club at SSBC

Starts Jan 25 in Hingham

HINGHAM- The best way to prepare for the 2003 baseball season is to work hard during the off-season. The first of three Indoor Spring Training Camp sessions for players 8 to 12, as well the second Battery Club session for the same age group, starts January 25 at the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham.

Two-hour STC sessions from 10 a.m. to 12-noon are scheduled each Saturday morning Jan. 25 through February 15. Two additional STC sessions for 8-12 year olds are slated for Feb. 22-March 15 and Mar. 22-April 13 at SSBC.

STC features defensive instruction for infielders and outfielders, one solid hour of batting, hitting lectures by SSBC's experienced staff, two live batting cages, and five individual hitting stations. Advanced registration is required. STC is open to SSBC members as well as non-members.

"Our coaching staff is one of the best in New England in terms of assisting players in their development," SSBC president/director Frank Niles said. "Before you know it the baseball season will be here. Our indoor spring training camp is geared toward players that want to be in mid-season form on opening day."

SSBC will also host two Spring Training Camp sessions for players 13 to 18 - Feb. 22-Mar. 15 and Mar. 22-Apr. 12.

Battery Club

SSBC's second Battery Club session, specifically designed for pitchers and catchers, will be held four consecutive Saturday mornings (8 a.m.-10 a.m.), Jan. 25-Feb. 15, for players 8-12 at Hingham.

The Battery Club is for pitchers and catchers who want to learn and work on the finer points of baseball's most important positions. Pitching focuses on mechanics from the wind-up and stretch, strategy and pitch selection, different grips and its effects, pick-off moves, fielding, and attitude.

Catching concentrates on proper receiving and throwing techniques, pitch selection, blocking low pitches, and overall strategy.

The staff includes Niles and Rick DelVecchio.

The third and final Battery Club for players 8-12 will be Mar. 22-Apr. 12.

Players 13 to 18 will be able to attend a special SSBC Battery Club session Feb. 22-Mar. 15.

SSBC is a year-round, full service club and training facility for baseball and softball players, boys and girls (5 and older), in Hingham. For more information about SSBC or any of its programs call 1-888-749-6466/(781) 749-6466, or visit its Web site at www.ssbc.com

217. No other team had more first place finishers, Rockland checking in next best with three and Hingham and Duxbury each seeing a pair of their grapplers go unbeaten.

For sophomore Matt Baroudi, who recorded pins in all three of his matches, this first place finish helps him emerge from the shadow of older brother Terry, and state his case as a legitimate contender for postseason glory.

"Matt is still learning, and making occasional mistakes, but he's getting the hang of wrestling in this weight class," appraised Sweeney. "His biggest problem is that he gets frustrated when he doesn't get the pins. He needs to slow down sometimes, and just wrestle smart, but he's getting there. He showed some nice things this weekend."

Terry Baroudi, who fell just one spot short of qualifying for All-States last winter, is clearly a favorite to reach All-States this year. He beat Duxbury's Dan Klebanoff in the finals Saturday, 3-0, making him 2-for-2 against this old nemesis he'd lost to 3-of-4 times prior to this season. Terry won by pin in his previous two matches, and his overall record now stands at 20-1 on the season, the lone loss coming in the finals at the Whitman-Hanson Tourney, a match coach Sweeney says he should have won.

McKenna won his first two matches by pin and then handled Lynnfield's Chris Stivers in the Finals with relative ease, 6-1, thus becoming the first Cohasset wrestler in four or five years to pull off the regular season tourney "Triple Crown," having previously also taken firsts at the Marshfield and Whitman-Hanson tourneys.

"That 'Triple Crown' is a tough thing to pull off," offered Sweeney. "We see like 30 different schools over the course of those three tourneys, and you don't know much about most of those wrestlers. There can be surprises in there, but Chris has handled everything thrown at him very well. I think it's pretty clear now that he's the best 147 around."

Chris is now 20-2 on the season, his two losses coming to Mike Brown of Canton and a Winchester wrestler, both of whom were ranked top five in the state at the time. McKenna could see Brown as soon as the Div. 3 Sectionals, and the Winchester grappler could well be there for the Div. 3 States.

"Chris is going to have his hands full in the 145 pound weight class, but he was right there with both of those kids he lost to, and I think he's a lot stronger now," noted Sweeney.

The best storyline of the Cohasset winners belongs to Mike Casey. A week removed from an embarrassing 21-5 loss to Duxbury's Steve Celino, the Cohasset senior got another shot at him Saturday, and turned the tables 180 degrees, coming out on top, 15-7. This dramatic turnaround was a testament to both Casey's versatility and Sweeney's coaching acumen.

"Let's just say we came up with a few adjustments to block Celino's best takedown move," said Sweeney, careful not to give away too much. "I think that frustrated (Celino) and forced him into mistakes, and Mike did a nice job of taking advantage of those. Even with those adjustments, though, that junior Sean Connolly, led the way for the hosts, pacing the offense with 15 points and 10 boards. Senior captain Jared Krupczak and junior Chris Bilodeau pitched in 11 points apiece from the backcourt.

Bilodeau has been playing some excellent ball in the past games, despite the Skippers' slide. He was the lead scorer in both the team's games on the "southern road trip" to Harwich and Nantucket (Friday night to Saturday afternoon). He threw down a career-high 29 against the Rough Ryders.

Harwich, considered by some to be the favorite to win the Div. 4 South bracket, ousted their guests 71-63, led by two time All-star Adam Rose, who had 21. The Rough Ryders opened the game with a running, transition style, capitalizing on the Skippers poor shooting for a 19-2 lead.

The Skippers, to their credit, fought back the whole way, closing the deficit to six at one point, before running out of time in regulation.

"We played really well against Harwich," lauded veteran coach Ron Ford, who called Norwell and Harwich "the class of the South Shore League" before the season started.

The team's Saturday afternoon game went much the same way, with the Whalers jumping out to a 20-6 lead within minutes. Bilodeau again guided an attempted comeback, scoring 11 of his 19 points on free throws. For the road trip, Bilodeau shot a robust 24-for-30 from the line, including 13-for-15 against Harwich.

Nantucket's 6-foot-8 freshman Sam Perrier was a presence in the middle all day, scoring only nine points, but snatching 12 boards and keeping Cohasset's big men from establishing themselves in the paint. The game was won from the perimeter by the Whalers, when senior Max Paulsen (16 points) sealed the game with three consecutive 3-pointers, for a one-man 9-0 run in the second half.

Girls jump to it

Lady hoopsters look to for strong closing run

By Lou Molinari

The magic number for the Cohasset High girls basketball team is 10. Or, it could be seven, or eight or even nine.

Heading into the new week, Cohasset held a 3-7 record, after losing two games last week to Carver, 63-55, and Harwich, 51-36.

Despite the two losses last week, the magic number is still good, depending on how it has to be used.

The Skippers have 10 games left to play. Seven wins out of the 10 would put the relatively new team into the tournament.

Should the 10 season wins fail, then Cohasset can work towards a personal best, a mark that coach Ellen Carr would like to see added on.

"Since we started the team four years ago, we have been showing a definite improvement," offered Carr. "We played junior varsity ball the first year. We won one game during our first varsity season, and last year, our second varsity season, we won six games.

"We would at least like to see the team improve the six win mark. Of course, we have nothing against winning a total of 10 to make the tourney."

The coach added: "We just want to see the team get better and better each year. I think we have a chance of doing it again this year."

Cohasset expects to have two all-star players back in the lineup this week. Heather Peraino has been out for a couple of games with an injured leg and Lindsay Grossman has been out sick, according to the coach.

"Peraino played a couple of minutes the last time out and looked pretty good," said the coach. "Grossman is expected to be back this week.

"Obviously, the two (returning league) all-stars will make a big difference for the team, once they're back at full strength."

In the game against Carver, Cohasset's Danielle Pinkus was the leading scorer with 13 points. She also led against Harwich with eight points, followed by Jen Buckley with seven points.

Coach Carr was also high in her praise of a young player, freshman Mia Lieb-Lappin.

"She played in a half game for us against Harwich and did a nice job," she noted. "She scored a foul shot and had three rebounds. She definitely shows a lot of promise."

Cohasset was scheduled to play Hull this past Tuesday, Norwell on Friday and Scituate on Saturday.

Boston's single scene is going to be shaken up! Are you or one of your friends one of the Hub's hottest and hippest? The Boston Herald and Star 93.7 are teaming up to choose who's the hottest male and female single in Boston.

Student, faculty exhibit at art center

The South Shore Art Center will showcase the artwork of students who have taken classes and workshops at the Center throughout the year. All students participating in SSAC courses and workshops were invited to submit one piece for this winter exhibition. The show will augment the January faculty show — Who's Who: South Shore Art Center Faculty Artists, and continues through Feb. 23. Both exhibitions will afford viewers a convenient opportunity to view the artwork of students and faculty and at the same time register for a winter art class or workshop. Registrations are still being accepted for courses for adults and children to begin the second and third week in January. If your New Year's resolutions included a creative focus...the South Shore Art Center can send you on your way. For more information visit www.ssac.org or to register call 781-383-2787.

Houseplants featured at garden club meeting

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting at the Second Congregational Church Bates Hall Tuesday, Jan. 28 at 9 a.m..

Donna Lane, a designer of interiors and gardens, will present the decorative and health values of houseplants. In addition, with the aid of slides, she will discuss grouping, scale, location, and presentation techniques for plants in an interior environment.

"Decorating with Houseplants" will be a very interesting and informative presentation for all who attend.

Hingham Symphony offers music for all ages

On the weekend of Feb. 1 and 2, Hingham Symphony and conductor Jin Kim will bring fun and inspiring symphonic music to audiences of all ages. The annual Discovery Concerts have become known for a variety of musical offerings, and the chance to interact with musicians and their instruments. This year's program also highlights performers at different stages of development.

The program features celebrated composer Robert Kapilow's musical rendition of Dr. Seuss' Gertrude McFuzz. Local celebrity Caroline, a cast member of WGBH-TV's ZOOM, narrates the role of Gertrude, a typical Seussian character who learns valuable lessons about wanting to fit in. Up-and-coming pianist, 15-year old Catherine Casey, will perform Ravel's Piano Concerto in G, accompanied by the HSO. Catherine, a student of Hui-Min Wang at the South Shore Conservatory, recently won their annual Concerto Competition. Talented members of Hingham High School's Chamber Orchestra will join the HSO for a selection, and the full HSO will perform Elgar's Serenade. Rounding out the afternoon, audience members are invited to talk with musicians and explore their musical instruments, at the Instrument Showcase.

Four Discovery Concerts will be held in the new, intimate performance hall at Derby Academy, 56 Burditt Ave., Hingham. Saturday, Feb. 1 at noon and 3 p.m., and Sunday, Feb. 2 at 1 p.m. An additional performance on Feb. 2 at 4 p.m. will benefit Derby Academy's music program (benefit tickets available through Derby). Chinese exercise expert at Jade Forest

At age 73, Professor Zhang Guangde, founder and Honorary General Director of the Dao Yin Yang Sheng Gong Center in Beijing, is offering seminars in the United States for the first time. He has taught his Dao Yin system in 17 different countries and has teaching centers located in China and across Europe.

Combining traditional knowledge with modern medical theory, Dao Yin Yang Sheng Gong is a comprehensive system of exercises characterized by harmonizing gentle fluent movement of the body with systematic breathing. It also involves the stimulation of key acupressure points in the body and enhances mental development and spiritual awareness.

Zhang will give a short introduction to his Dao Yin system from 4:45 - 5:45 p.m., Thursday, Jan. 30 at no charge at Jade Forest on Route 3A.

From 6-9 p.m. for a fee of $75 ($70 active Jade Forest students), Zhang will teach the Bao Jian Gong — Health Preservation form — which is comprised of eight simple movement patterns. (Prepay before Thursday and save $5)

For more information, call Jade Forest, 781-383-6822.

OBITUARIES

Betsy Cody Burns

Betsy Cody Burns

Betsy Cody Burns, age 58, of Scituate died Jan. 9, 2003 at South Shore Hospital following a long illness.

Born in Weston, she was a Scituate resident for 53 years and graduated from Derby Academy in Hingham and Sacred Heart School in Kingston. She was a graduate of Curry College in Milton and earned her master's degree in teaching at Bridgewater State College.

Mrs. Burns was a retired elementary school teacher from the Cedar School in Hanover, teaching there from 1965 until the mid 1970s. While her children attended Scituate High School, she was very active with the Scituate High Drama Department.

She was the daughter of the late Elliott J. and Elizabeth (Upton) Cody who owned the Three Ring Farm in North Scituate, now the Foyer of Charity.

She leaves her husband, John D. Burns, her son, Craig Burns and her daughter, Holly-Beth Burns of Scituate; and a brother, James E. Cody of Boston. She was the sister of the late Patricia Ann Cody.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Jan. 13 at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Interment was private.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Contributions in Betsy's memory to St. Anthony's Church, 10 Summer St. Cohasset 02025 would be sincerely appreciated.

Charlotte M. Drew

Charlotte M. (Hayes) Drew, 85, of Cohasset, a retired supervisor for Raytheon Corp., died Jan. 6, 2003 at South Shore Hospital after a period of failing health.

Mrs. Drew had worked more than 44 years for Raytheon in both the Newton and Quincy facilities.

Born, raised and educated in Newton, she had lived in Cohasset for 19 years.

Wife of the late Warren J. Drew, she leaves her daughter, Jane E. Delorey of Wilmington; her five sisters, Patricia Smith of Michigan, Irene Geary of Florida, Barbara McPhee of Framingham, Carol Smith of Millis, Dorothy Clarke of New York; and her three grandchildren and three great-grandsons.

Funeral services were held at the Newton Cemetery Chapel; the Rev. Donald Remick officiated. Interment was in Newton Cemetery in Newton.

Funeral arrangements were made by the Magoun-Biggins Funeral Home of Rockland.

Edward W. Malley Jr.

Edward W. Malley, Jr., 87, died at Jupiter Care Center in Florida on Jan. 7, 2003.

Born in Boston, he attended Moses Brown Prep school and graduated from Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn.

A former resident of Cohasset, Mr. Malley lived part-time in South Florida for almost 50 years before settling permanently in Palm Beach Gardens.

As a young man Mr. Malley built a successful business with his father, Edward Sr. and later his older son, Ted. North Terminal Inc., originally located on East First St. in South Boston and later in Hingham, received the Army-Navy E for excellence. .

He was a member of Toy Soldiers of South Florida, the Union Boat Club, the Cohasset Yacht Club, and the Cohasset Golf Club, enjoying his squash, golf, boating and collecting until he was stricken with Parkinson's. His interest in flying led to an appointment as a commissioner for the Mass. Aeronautics Commission.

Mr. Malley's life was not without sorrow or setbacks. In 1976 his youngest daughter, Stephanie Vaughan, lost her life in an auto accident. His eldest daughter, Kathie was seriously injured in another accident in 1965, but being as stubborn as her father, she persevered and now teaches from a wheelchair at Boston University.

After their divorce, Edward and his ex-wife Barbara Malley remained friends and Barbara went on to have a humorous novel (Take My Ex Husband Please - But Not Too Far) published.

Mr. Malley leaves his wife, Aliceann; three children, Dr. Kathleen Malley-Morrison (Frank), Edward W. Malley III, (Maureen), David T. Malley (Kathy), their mother, Barbara Beyer Malley, and seven grandchildren. He was also leaves eight loving dogs and cats who were a great comfort to him during his final illness.

There will be no services. A memorial will be held in Cohasset at a later date. Donations may be made in Edward's name to the National Parkinson's Foundation, Inc., 1501 9th Ave., Bob Hope Rd, Miami, Fla., 33136 or to the Peggy Adams Animal Rescue League.

Arrangements were handled by the Neptune Society.

Fritz Muelhaupt

Fritz Muelhaupt, 76, of Cohasset, a retired car dealer, died Jan. 15, 2003, at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth. Mr. Muelhaupt, who was born in Zurich, Switzerland, co-owned and operated Autohans, a foreign car dealership in Cohasset, for 31 years.

He leaves his wife, Alice M. Muelhaupt; a brother, Rolf Muelhaupt of Thalwil, Switzerland; a sister, Lucid Pollini of Bassano, Italy; and three nieces and two nephews.

A memorial service was celebrated at First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church, Main St., Cohasset Common. Interment was private.

Arrangements were handled by the McNamara-Sparrel Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Donations may be sent to the South Shore Visiting Nurse Association, 100 Bay State Dr., P.O. Box 9060, Braintree 02185-9060.

Edward B. Fitzpatrick

With his wife by his side, Edward "Butch" Fitzpatrick, formerly of Cohasset, died peacefully Dec. 28, 2002, in Tucson, Ariz.

Mr. Fitzpatrick was born in Boston to Edward and Ella Fitzpatrick of Watertown. He was a graduate of Watertown High School, Tufts University, where he received a BS in civil engineering, and Northeastern University, where he earned his master's degree.

He was a member of the American Society of Civil Engineering. He pursued his chosen field to become a consulting environmental engineer.

Mr. Fitzpatrick was a member of the BAJA Sporting Club in Green Valley, Ariz.

He leaves his wife, Rosemary, of 36 years; two sons, Matthew Fitzpatrick of Marshfield and Ian Fitzpatrick and his wife of Halifax; his mother, Ella Fitzpatrick, a brother, Kenneth Fitzpatrick, and a nephew, Brian, all of Watertown; three grandchildren, Shawna, Rebecca and Benjamin; and a cousin, Bert Dutton, and his wife Pat of Billerica.

A Memorial Service of the celebration of his life will be held at St. Andrew Episcopal Church of Belmont at a later date this spring.

Memorial contributions may be made to St. Andrew's Children's Clinic, P.O. Box 2043, Nogales, AZ 85628.

Kendall M. Pratt

Kendall M. Pratt, age 92, of Worcester and formerly of Dedham and Cohasset, died Jan. 12, 2003 in the Odd Fellows Home in Worchester, following a lengthy illness.

Born in Hanover, he was the son of William Howard and Lizzie J. (Mann) Pratt and was a graduate of Cohasset High School, Class of 1918. A 50-year resident of Dedham, Mr. Pratt worked as a security officer at Bethlehem Steel and Fore River Shipyard, Quincy for 24 years. He was also a security guard at Wellesley College from 1964-77, up until his retirement.

He was a member of the Odd Fellows for 75 years, during which he held all posts in the organization.

Mr. Pratt was also an avid auctioneer and tool collector, belonging to the American Auctioneers Association and the American Antique Tool Collectors Association.

He was the husband of the late Emily (Fortnam) Pratt and leaves his son, Kendall M. Pratt, Jr. and his wife Pauline (Morse) Pratt of Brooklin, Maine; his three grandchildren, Jeffrey of Bedford, Pa., Kimberly of Downington, Pa., and Christopher of West Chester, Pa.; a nephew, Samuel S. of Bedford, Pa., and a niece, Virginia Pratt Thompson of Madison, Wis.

Funeral services were held Friday, Jan. 17 at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, One Summer St.

Interment will be in Hanover Cemetery in Hanover.

Hope is topic at Glastonbury

The Glastonbury Series, "Listening to Other Voices: Hope in a Time of Uncertainty," will host a Middle-East panel to discuss the issues of "When Hopelessness Challenges Hope: Personal Stories of How the Spirit Survives." This event takes place Thursday, Jan. 23 at 7:15 p.m. at Glastonbury Abbey in Hingham.

Marina Pevzner is a Jewish woman from Israel and Maisa Khshaibon is a Palestinian Christian. Both are students in the Coexistence Program at Brandeis University. Joining them on the panel is Amal Jadou, a Palestinian Moslem. The three will be in dialogue with one another and with the audience.

There is no cost for admission—a free-will offering is appreciated. Please call the abbey to reserve a place at 781-749-2155.

Film, lecture series on prospect of war

The growing prospect of war in Iraq will be the focus of a film and lecture series to be held Jan. 23, and February 4 and Feb. 18 in Hingham, sponsored by the South Shore Peace Forum.

The opening program, to be held at 7 p.m. Jan. 23, will offer excerpts from a lecture delivered in the summer of 2002 in Boston by Scott Ritter. He served as chief of the U.N. Arms Inspection Team from 1991 to 1998.

This program, to be held in the Whiton Room of the Hingham Public Library, 66 Leavitt St., (off Route 228), will also offer the film "Hidden Wars of Desert Storm." The Rev. Ken Read-Brown, minister of the First Parish (Old Ship) Church, Hingham, will serve as moderator for a concluding discussion period.

For the second program, co-sponsored by The Old Ship Church and to be held at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 4 in the Parish House of The Old Ship Church, 107 Main St., Hingham, the speaker will be The Rev. John Beuhrens, former president of the Unitarian Universalist Association. He was a member of an interfaith delegation's Christmas-time trip to Iraq, and will discuss his experiences there. A question and answer program will follow his talk.

The final program, at 7 p.m., Feb. 18, in the Whiton Room at the Hingham library, will present two films, "Domestic Blowback: The Domestic Impacts of the Bush Administration's War," and "Steps To Peace: The Journey of September Eleventh Families For Peaceful Tomorrows."

The topic of Scott Ritter's Boston lecture was "Does Iraq pose a threat to our national existence through weapons of mass destruction?" Ritter, a Republican who voted for George W. Bush and a 12-year veteran of the U.S. Marines, tells his audience that there is no such evidence.

The film, "The Hidden Wars of Desert Storm," is described by its distributor, the American Friends Service Committee which provided all the films, as "an in-depth analysis of the history of U.S.-Iraq-Iran relations that preceded the Gulf War." It includes archival footage of Iraq in 2000, is narrated by actor John Hurt, and includes interviews with Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, Ramsey Clark, Scott Ritter, and others.

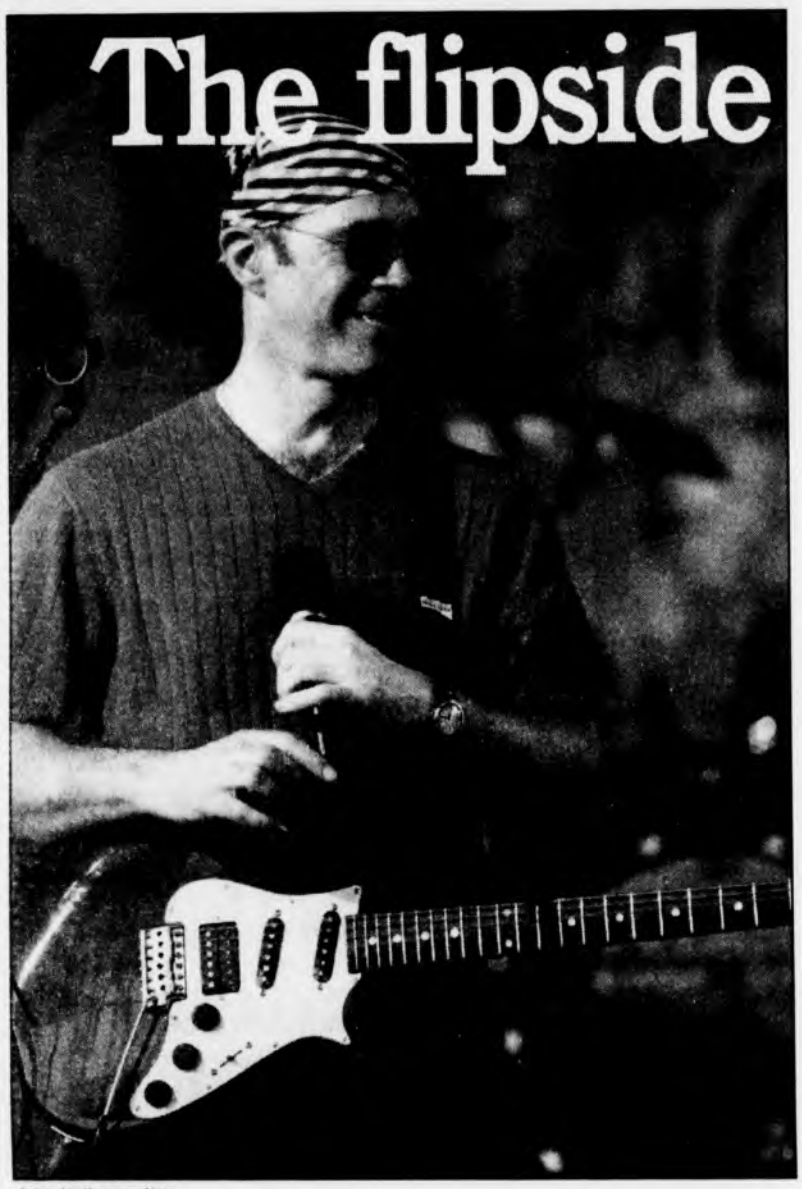
The flipside of Orleans

Band offers rarely revealed tunes at Plymouth concent



John Hall on guitar

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

You might think you know Orleans, that cheerful, sunny band from the pre-punk, singer/songwriter-rock 1970s who had major hits with "Dance With Me," "Still the One" and "Love Takes Time."

But a newly released career retrospective CD covering 30 years of live shows might make you think again.

In their '70s heyday, Orleans carved out a niche on the national concert scene with its brand of good-time, not-too-heavy, not-too-soft rock, drawing the same general audience as the likes of the Eagles, Jackson Browne and the Doobie Brothers. By the end of the decade, band leader and singer/guitarist/songwriter John Hall left for a solo career, highlighted by his organizing the 1979 No Nukes Concerts with Browne, Bonnie Raitt and Graham Nash.

Most listeners remember the band for the aforementioned hits and other numbers of what was then a similar mainstream, radio-friendly pop/rock ilk. But give the new 30th Anniversary Retrospective disc, "Still the One - Live," a spin, and you'll hear such chestnuts as onstage takes of Bob Marley's reggae classic "Trenchtown Rock," Les McCann's fusion tour-de-force "Compared To What" and a ragged, bluegrass recasting of Stevie Wonder's "Boogie On Reggae (Country) Woman." Plus, originals offering pointed social commentary on issues from consumer credit overspending ("Plastic Money") to the environment ("Plutonium Is Forever") and dabbling in other musical styles from blues and jazz to harmony-filled folk and country.

The tracks on "Still the One - Live" are culled from the past three decades of live Orleans tape archives, some stored in the band's own attic vaults, others submitted by longtime fans and colleagues. Together, they showcase a rarely revealed, more musically adventurous side of the band. This, said Hall, is how Orleans will be heard when the band performs in concert this Friday evening at Plymouth Memorial Hall, with friend and fellow '70s singer/songwriter and pop/rocker Jon Pousette-Dart on hand as the opening act.

"We've always been a band that's aimed to stretch the limits of our repertoire," noted Hall. "On this tour especially when we're promoting the 30th Anniversary retrospective disc, we're mixing things up musically more so than we've done since the early days in the '70s. The live sets are essentially a combination of the hits, more obscure tracks and the occasional cover song touching on our typical wide range of genres and styles. No matter how long we've been playing or how many shows we do, we always try to keep it fun and look for what we can come up with to please ourselves as well as our audience."

"The new CD is partly a result of interaction with fans who've followed us for a long time. We heard back from people with bootleg and radio tapes of old shows from the 70s and early 80s and who offered to send them to us. So we listened to many, many hours of these old tapes plus those that we'd been storing all this time. And what happened was we finally began to hear

South Shore memories captured on canvas

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"Treasured Memories," the current exhibit in the Dolphin Gallery at Hingham Public Library, is one for those who look at South Shore and Quincy history with a fond sense of reverence.

The collection of watercolors by Hull painter Elizabeth Trubia is on view in the Dolphin Gallery through March Trubia is a member of Marshfield's North River Arts Society and numerous other arts groups throughout the South Shore and Boston. Born in Quincy, she was raised in Hull and began painting shortly after graduating from Hingham High School (there was no high school in Hull during the era) in 1953.

"The paintings in 'Treasured Memories' are of historic local area sites taken from old photographs and the memories and recollections of numerous people," said Trubia in her artist's statement for the show. "Their objective is to breathe new life into bygone days and at the same time remain historically accurate."

Trubia's "Memories" mostly hearken back to local history of roughly the Victorian era (1890-1920). Perhaps given the proximity to Boston and its famously proper traditions, this age was well represented in style and fashion amidst the South Shore and Quincy vicinity, as most of the nine paintings on view demonstrate. For a touch of more modern diversity, one work jumps ahead to the early 1940s.

Trubia displays a light watercolorist's touch in her pieces, much like storybook illustration, but also a strong eye for detail with some strikingly memorable subjects. One of the most memorable is of the splendid Melville Gardens, which resided at Hingham's Crow Point in the latter decades of the 19th century. The work highlights the stunning Victorian architecture of the day, with twenty electric lights illuminating the lush grounds.

Hingham is also represented by another longgone site, the Grain Mill Pond at Hingham Harbor (circa 1910), filled in for many years now with a blacktopped parking lot and Station Street. Closer to the city of the era, "Quincy Center 1915" highlights the day's state-of-the-art transport mode electric trolley and the square's First Parish Church, a tourist attraction even then.

Trubia's most impressive subjects are perhaps those from history in her own hometown. "Hotel Nantasket 1880" presents the waterfront retreat in its genuine splendor for the time, with 145 sleeping rooms and electric lights. Two views of the original Paragon Park, an aerial shot and a closer angle of its famous gondola-floating lagoon, display the "mini world's fair" model upon which the Park was founded in 1905, with the various national pavilions and flags and elegant Schlitz Palm Gardens restaurant and virtually unrecognizable from the modern era carnival that eventually was closed and demolished eighty years later.

"I hope these pictures inspire people to preserve and protect our remaining historical heritage, and appreciate our great landmarks with a renewed sense of pride," Trubia also said in her statement.

"42nd Street" dances its way to Boston

BEST BET

Considered by many to be the Broadway musical for people who love Broadway musicals, "42nd Street" dances its way into Boston's Wang Theatre this week. The classic star-is-born story, set against the backdrop of a musical spectacular, is the stuff of Broadway legend and yet remains as fresh today as ever thanks to an all-new national tour of the production that won the 2001 Tony, Drama Desk, and Outer Critics Circle Awards for "Best Musical Revival." Based in part on the 1933 feature film of the same name, "42nd Street" first came to Broadway in 1980 - under the now legendary direction of the late Gower Champion - and ran for eight years. Featuring Broadway standards like "We're In The Money," "You're Getting To Be A Habit With Me" and "Lullaby of Broadway," by the team of Harry Warren (music) and Al Warren (lyrics), the current national tour is being staged by Randy Skinner who created new choreography and also recreated Champion's original dance numbers for the new Broadway production. "42nd Street" will be at the Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont Street, Boston, through January 26. For tickets, call 1-800-447-7400.

Rediscovering oatmeal

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Since most of us are most familiar with the instant variety of oatmeal, the notion of oatmeal as anything other than a stomach-filler may seem like tilting at windmills. Yet, steel-cut oats, properly prepared, is a serious breakfast and more than worth the trouble to make it. I wanted to find the best method for preparing both steel-cut and rolled oats, both avoiding a gummy, pasty texture and enhancing the natural flavor of the oats themselves.

Let's start with the different types of oats since that is where most of us go wrong. Whole oat groats are the whole oat kernel with just the outer hull removed. They have to be cooked almost forever and are very toothsome. Steel-cut oats (also known as Irish oats) are simply groats that have been cut into smaller pieces thereby reducing cooking time. Rolled oats have been steamed and flattened which reduces cooking time to about five minutes. Compared to steel-cut oats, they lack flavor and texture, and the porridge is mushier. Quick- cooking oats are similar to rolled oats but are cut into smaller pieces for quicker cooking. Instant oatmeal is precooked, rolled, and dried. Add boiling water and it is ready to go. Unfortunately, instant oatmeal resembles a paste more than a good bowl of oatmeal. In my opinion, this form of oatmeal is virtually inedible.

My recipe research turned up two recipes I liked very much, one from Cook's Illustrated and the other from Alton Brown. They both used 4 cups of liquid to 1 cup of steel-cut oats, a mixture of dairy and water, and an initial toasting step to enhance the flavor of the oats. I preferred the Cook's recipe since it used salt and called for milk instead of a buttermilk/milk combination that tasted a bit odd.

My first question was whether toasting the oats was a necessary step. The obvious answer was a resounding yes – they were sweeter and better flavored. I preferred using a large skillet for this process and one tablespoon of butter – the toasting goes quicker (2 to 3 minutes) and they turn out more evenly browned. (The skillet can simply be wiped out without washing.) I also found recipes that suggest soaking the steel-cut oats overnight but I preferred the texture of un-soaked oatmeal so I skipped this step.

As for the liquid, 4 cups of milk/water to 1 cup of steel-cut oats was just right: more liquid made a soupy oatmeal and less did not give the oats sufficient time to cook properly. The next question was whether some of the water should be replaced by milk, cream, half and half, or buttermilk. Some dairy was called for since all-water oatmeal tasted a bit bland. I finally settled on 3 1/2 cups water plus 1/2 cup half and half.

For some reason, a few recipes did not call for any salt. I found that a half- teaspoon of table salt was absolutely necessary to enhance flavors. However, the salt should be added after the first 15 minutes of cooking otherwise the oatmeal turns out a bit less creamy. As for cooking technique, I tried starting the oats in both cold water and simmering water. The cold water oats turned out mushy but those added to simmering water were creamy with a bit of chew. I also found that the oats needed to cook uncovered for best results. (Otherwise they become too soft.)

As for managing the process, I found it best to heat the water/dairy mixture in a large saucepan while I was toasting the oats in the skillet. (Be careful when adding the oats to the water mixture – it can easily boil over.) I then simmered the oats for 15 minutes, stirring occasionally, and then added the salt. You will need to adjust the heat level constantly as the oatmeal requires less heat as it thickens. In the last few minutes of cooking, you will need to stir frequently to avoid sticking. A heavy-bottomed saucepan is highly recommended. Some recipes suggest allowing the oatmeal to sit for 5 minutes covered before serving in order to make the oats creamier. I find that it takes about 5 minutes for everyone to add toppings and actually sit down to the table so I skip this step.

Although most folks will opt for the usual toppings (very cold milk is traditional with hot oatmeal – I also use maple syrup) you might also try fruit compote. I take a half-cup each of dried apricots, cranberries, and apples, 1/4 cup sugar, and 1 1/2 cups water and simmer the lot for about 25 minutes over medium-low heat. This may seem like a lot of effort but it's more than worth it for a special weekend breakfast.

OLD-FASHOINED IRISH OATMEAL

Note that the cooking time will vary depending on the heat level and your saucepan. You do not need to stir very much for the first 10 minutes of cooking. As the oatmeal thickens, more attention needs to be paid to the oats to prevent sticking to the bottom of the pot.

3 1/2 cups water
1/2 cup half and half
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1 cup steel cut oats
1/2 teaspoon table salt

Bring the water and half-and-half to a simmer in a large saucepan over medium heat. Meanwhile, place a 9- or 10-inch skillet (non-stick or regular) over medium heat. Add the butter and once it has stopped foaming swirl to coat the bottom of the skillet evenly. Add the oats and toast, stirring often with a wooden spoon or spatula, until golden brown and very aromatic, about 2 to 3 minutes. Stir the oats into the simmering liquid (to avoid a boil-over, take the saucepan off the heat when you add the oats) and adjust the heat to maintain a simmer. Cook uncovered for 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Add salt and stir gently to combine. Continue simmering and stirring occasionally until the oats absorb almost all of the liquid and the oats are swollen and tender with a bit of chew, about 5 to 15 minutes more. The oatmeal will be thick and creamy and almost pudding like. Serve immediately with fruit compote (recipe below) or cold milk plus brown sugar, maple syrup, honey, or cinnamon.

Serves 4 adults and may be easily multiplied although the toasting and cooking times may need to be increased slightly for desired results.

FRUIT COMPOTE FOR OATMEAL

If you cannot find one or more of these fruits, try your own combination.

1/2 cup dried cranberries
1/2 cup dried apricots, coarsely chopped
1/2 cup dried apples, coarsely chopped
1/4 cup sugar

Combine all ingredients along with 1 1/2 cups water and bring to a simmer. Cover and cook, stirring occasionally, until the liquid as almost completely absorbed and the fruit is fully hydrated, about 25 minutes.

ROLLED OATS VARIATION

Rolled oats do not have the texture and flavor of steel-cut oats but they do cook in only 5 minutes.

Substitute 2 cups rolled oats for the 1-cup steel cut oats in the above recipe. Increase the butter to 1 1/2 tablespoons. Add the salt along with the oats to the simmering water/milk mixture. Stir frequently and reduce the cooking time to five minutes or until the oatmeal is thick and pudding-like.

Mail order gardening

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Perched in my window seat, on another bitterly cold winter morning in January, I dream of springtime as I browse through an impressive stack of seed and garden catalogs that have arrived in recent weeks. The colorful photographs and vivid descriptions of gardens and flowers temporarily melt away the wintry images outside my window as I envision the magical rebirth of our landscapes.

My attention is frequently diverted by a constant procession of birds to and from my window feeder. Cardinals and finches perch briefly to feed as they easily crush the husks of sunflower seeds and consume their tender contents. A perky Carolina wren uses its long, curved bill to forage for tiny tidbits left behind. Nuthatches, chickadees and tufted titmice judiciously select choice black kernels to carry off to the nearby shrubbery and peck away at the outer shells to expose the rewards that lie within. Occasionally, a pair of plump, gray squirrels dashes across the frozen, lifeless gardens below chasing one another up and down the nearby dogwood tree, searching in vain for a way to access the feeder.

Despite the unseasonably cold temperatures outside, there are subtle assurances that springtime is on its way. The daylight hours have grown noticeably longer and the sunlight that streams through my windowpanes is remarkably intense and cozy. Earlier this week, I delighted in the sighting of several bluebirds among the branches of an ornamental pear tree, their brilliant blue plumage leaving an indelible image against the backdrop of a snowy landscape. Perhaps the month of February will bring a return to more seasonable temperatures and usher in an early spring.

By day's end, I had compiled a long wish list of new plants, all the while wondering where I would find space to plant even one additional acquisition. Years ago, when I was initially bitten by the gardening bug, my quest for new cultivars and unusual plants necessitated mail order gardening. In recent years, due to the increased popularity in gardening, many local nurseries now feature cutting edge perennials and exotic varieties in addition to a wide selection of reliable old time perennial favorites. Despite this increased availability, however, gardening catalogs still offer the greatest opportunity to view and research new plants. The wonderful world of plant material has exploded with thousands of new cultivars introduced every season thanks to hybridization and international transport of plants from one continent to another. Catalogs, magazines and browsing the Internet offer passionate gardeners invaluable inform! ation and access to an overwhelming assortment of plant material.

Time, money and space then become the critical factors in our pursuit to grow one of every plant on the market. For those who have time to browse through nurseries during the growing season, extensive and diverse collections of plants and shrubs are accessible throughout New England. Homework done during the winter months will often provide a detailed list of desired acquisitions that may reduce the tendency for impulse buying, saving time and money. Unfortunately, many of us have very little leisure time, especially once warmer weather arrives when we turn our attention to working the soil, pulling weeds and maintaining our private greenspaces. The winter months are often less hectic offering more time to research new plants, plan new gardens, and place orders for our selections, which will then be delivered to our doors when springtime arrives.

Through the years, I have purchased plants from an endless number of different sources with varying degrees of satisfaction. Purchasing any product by mail can be a gamble and when dealing with live plants, there can be considerable variability. One distinct advantage to buying plants locally is that you can observe the size and quality of the plant you are purchasing. When acquiring plants through the mail, glorious photographs and glowing descriptions may be irresistible while the delivered products may be only small, shriveled, dormant roots.

Seek recommendations from other gardeners for reliable mail order sources. If you know members of garden clubs or plant societies, they can usually provide great advice. If you are interested in a particular family of plants such as daylilies, iris, or hosta, you may find it best to order from catalogs that specialize in that species.

Should you decide to order from an untried source, place a relatively small order initially. This will enable you to judge the quality of the plants they provide. You can always place a second order if satisfied. Be sure to specify a shipping date so plants arrive at a time when you can deal with them. Avoid delivery dates near to an anticipated vacation, during a time when you expect to be especially busy or when the weather is not suitable for immediate planting. First time buyers should be aware that many mail order plants come "bare root" and require immediate attention.

As the sun set on this clear January afternoon, a spectacular full "Wolf Moon" gradually emerged above the treetops casting a mellow, golden glow across the icy, snow-covered landscape. Despite the frigid weather outside, the arrival of springtime seemed only weeks away, the dormant gardens below brought to life through the glorious pages of colorful catalogs. Browsing through gardening books and magazines during these cold winter months brightens even the dreariest days and helps the winter season pass more quickly.

all this music we made way back when the way the audience heard it, without the over-concern for technical perfection we sometimes had back then, and with the loose, open attitude that time affords."

Hall added his recollections regarding the disc's cover of "Trenchtown Rock," one of five tracks recorded in a well-remembered show at Cambridge's Harvard Square Theatre in November, 1975, and which comes close to the reggae genius of Marley's original. He mentioned that at the time Orleans was one of the first American bands to experiment with reggae. Also, that Marley himself was so impressed with Orleans that he asked the band to open for him in his Boston debut with the Wailers at the old Paul's Mall the following year.

Along with Hall, the current Orleans includes two other original members, brothers Larry (guitar, vocals) and Lance (bass) Hoppen, plus keyboardist Bob Leinbach and drummer Peter O'Brien. One more original, drummer/keyboardist Wells Kelly, passed away in 1984.

Orleans also has area shows coming up on Feb. 9 at the Iron Horse in Northampton and on Feb. 13 at Johnny D's in Somerville.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 22

This is a great day to handle projects that are overdue and cluttering up your work area. Finish old business, fulfill responsibilities. Get your ducks in line so that you can launch important ventures in a few days. At 4:34 a.m. the Virgo moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive until 4:23 p.m., when it enters Libra. The big news today is that Mercury turns direct at 8:08 p.m., 12-degrees Capricorn. The next Mercury retrograde period will occur April 26-May 20.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23

The moon travels in social Libra today and tomorrow. However, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, prepares to form stressful contacts to Pluto and Saturn in the next few days. That means that this is not an ideal time for making major financial decisions or purchases. Relationship issues may also surface and become top priority in this period. Be willing to compromise; you can work out conflicts and strengthen key partnerships.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 24

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Libra moon continues active travel until 2:48 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. Instead of trying to change others or transform situations, this is a time to look within, take responsibility, change your thinking. The moon enters Scorpio at 7:09 p.m. Feelings and emotions run deep. If there has been friction building, this is a time when the truth may surface.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25

The planetary patterns occurring in the past few days continue. An alignment of Venus-Pluto takes the spotlight. It has particular strength in this period because Venus rules Libra and Pluto rules Scorpio. Today the moon travels in Scorpio, the sign that is most concerned with emotional truth and transformation. Spend time alone; slow down, reconsider, think things throughpeace and vision.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 26

This is not a typical lazy, laid-back Sunday. An alignment of the sun and Mars generates ambition, high energy, and a Scorpio moon continues to evoke a passionate mood. It is best to stay busy with practical projects. Influences are prime for working out glitches, fixing things, figuring out puzzles, problem-solving. At 6:14 p.m. the moon becomes inactive, when it aligns with Uranus. Relief arrives at 10:26 p.m., when the moon enters cheerful Sagittarius.

MONDAY, JANUARY 27

The Sagittarius moon and Mars conjoin this morning, warning you to slow down and give greater attention to details, accuracy. Fortunately, this influence passes over quickly, and the afternoon and evening rate high. This is a day to keep things light, be more playful, enjoy the moment. The moon forms harmonious contacts to Neptune and Jupiter, prompting you to explore new options, make long-range plans, set goals.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 28

Conflicting planetary influences can make for a difficult day. Although the moon travels in adventurous Sagittarius, it forms challenging contacts to Pluto in the morning and Saturn in the afternoon. In addition, a polarity of Venus and Saturn occurs this evening. You may be forced to confront the realities of a financial or relationship matter. Listen to the voice of reason and do what your conscience tells you. Be more diplomatic; careless, insensitive remarks may come back to haunt you. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Uranus at 10:26 p.m., and becomes inactive.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 29

The moon enters Capricorn at 2:30 a.m. setting the stage for a 'get things done' kind of day. Roll up your sleeves and take on a big work project. It is okay to initiate new activities. However, it is best to postpone launching major ventures until next week, after the new moon occurs. Zero in on responsibilities you have taken on or promises you have made and follow through.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30

At 5:34 a.m. the Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. Don't be a procrastinator. You can be most productive, if you have a clear plan of action and stick to it. An alignment of the sun and Neptune also affects this day. It prompts you to take quiet time out for yourself. Instead of numbing out with escapes through the path of least resistance, do some serious soul-searching. Reflect on and learn from past experiences. Let go of recent hurts, traumas. Explore your options and set new goals.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 31

The final stage toward a new moon begins at 7:44 a.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. This is a day to finish projects already begun, clean and reorganize, clear the way for new activities. On a personal level, the dark side of a new moon brings an opportunity to shed emotional baggage, free yourself from self-defeating ideas, behaviors, patterns. Important insights and inspirations will come, if you have quiet space and time to listen.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

WHAT TO EXPECT

Because the hearing process is so complex, it is expecting too much to think that a hearing instrument will restore the hearing you had before suffering a hearing loss. It is not realistic to expect the instrument to bring perfect understanding of speech as soon as it is put in your ear. It may take a few weeks to adjust to and benefit from this introduction of sound. Bear in mind that the brain is the processor of speech. A hearing instrument will increase awareness to sounds, including many background noises, that you may not want to hear. In time, the brain will come to identify these sounds and adjust to them so that you can ignore them.

The human ear is an amazing instrument. When its parts fail to function properly or break down, today's amazing technology is doing its best to keep pace with helping the hearing impaired better enjoy the sounds of life. If you're worried about a loved one's hearing, or your own, we'd like to discuss today's options for addressing your concerns at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. We're now located in our brand new offices at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), easy to find across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth. Please call 781-337-1144 to arrange a consultation in our expanded facilities. We accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits and Mass Health.

P.S. A hearing instrument will not benefit you if it is left on the nightstand. It takes commitment to daily use to make a hearing instrument work for you.

Ayer says others are in the same boat

Wants them to get the same treatment

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A lawyer for embattled homeowner Phil Ayer has asked Building Inspector Bob Egan to rule on at least six houses that apparently violate the same zoning bylaw as Ayer's home at 3 Jerusalem Lane.

Egan could not say Tuesday how he would handle the request, which asks him to strip two homes of their building permits and rescind certificates of occupancy from at least four others, plus act on any additional homes built under circumstances similar to Ayer's in the last six years.

Ayer also took his case to the streets, literally – by staging a "civil rights" rally on the Town Common last Friday.

The Zoning Board of Appeals found two weeks ago that Ayer's home, which is 80 percent complete, should not have been granted a building permit because it's on an undersized

Race takes shape

Three may seek selectman seat

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The race for a single seat on the Board of Selectmen suddenly has all the elements that make for an exciting election.

There's the incumbent, Michael Sullivan, who decided Friday he would run for his fourth term on the board.

There's the challenger, Roger Hill, who lost to two incumbents in the last election by not much more than 100 votes.

And there's the newcomer, Gabriel Gomez, who moved to Cohasset in April of 2001.

Sullivan, who was initially unsure if he would run for another term, said he felt "an obligation to stay involved and not walk away" from the town's fiscal situation.

Voters say no

Wires to stay above ground

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The poles and utility wires in Cohasset Village are here to stay.

A debt exclusion override to pay for burying the wires lost in a special election Saturday by 380 votes. The final vote was 370 in favor, 750 opposed, and 4 blank.

Turnout at the election was 22 percent, with 1,124 of the town's 5158 registered voters making it to the polls. Town Clerk Marion Douglas said she had expected a 25 percent turnout.

Burying the wires was expected to cost $800,000. If donations from business owners had reached the goal of $150,000, the cost of the project for the average taxpayer (owner of a $575,500 home) would have been $49.51 per year for five years.

Selectman Merle Brown, who was opposed to the override, said now was just not the time. "People just can't afford to keep going on overrides," he said. "We've got a big override on the budget coming up. Even though it would have been nice to be done and it's a great opportunity, people just can't afford it."

Burying the wires would have coincided with other improvements to sidewalks and streets in the downtown area. Those projects, set to

School budget is balancing act

Board grapples with cuts, layoffs

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The School Committee began working towards balancing the school budget for fiscal year 2004 last Thursday, but any final decisions on program cuts or potential layoffs remain to be made.

The school budget will rely upon the approval of a $485,000 general override that will go before Town Meeting in March and the voters at the polls April 5.

Because the state will cut local aid by 10 to 20 percent, Town Manager Mark Haddad has asked the School Committee to plan for a 4 percent increase in funding next fiscal year, down from the 6 percent increase that was expected.

The reduced figure means funding will only grow by about $434,000, while possible increases in school expenses amount to about $743,000.

"In essence we would be taking one step forward and two steps backward in what we were doing here in the schools," Supt. Ed Malvey said.

Malvey said schools will have to pay about $31,000 next year in sewer costs that were previously picked up by the town. He is also budgeting for an additional $26,000 in utility costs because schools overran the budgeted amount by that much

Board questions jet noise impact

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Has Massport been lying about how much noise is created by planes flying over Cohasset?

Selectmen aren't sure, but they are going to extra lengths to find out.

Ralph Dormitzer, a Logan runway opponent, gave an update to the Board of Selectmen this week and said that no hard data had been turned over from a town-requested noise monitor on King Street. Moreover, Dormitzer said, the Massport official who verbally reported the data to him had continually changed his story.

The monitor was in place for a six-week period during April and May last year.

Dormitzer said a Massport official told him in late August the monitor picked up a continuous average noise level of 60 decibels. Later, the official said the figure was actually 58 decibels, and in late November, he said it was only 53 decibels.

Selectmen are now going to attempt to acquire a copy of the raw data from the monitor through the Freedom of Information Act. They are also

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Water article would protect Zone A area

The Water Commission has proposed a Warrant Article for the March 29 Annual Town Meeting to protect the Zone A area around the town's water supply.

"This article would protect the Zone A area, the area of land 400 feet from Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir and 200 feet from tributaries such as Peppermint Brook and Brass Kettle Brook," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

"This Article is needed to better protect the public water supply, to comply with state regulations, and is recommended by our recently completed Surface Water Supply Protection Plan," McNabb said. "The article would prohibit a number of known hazardous land uses from the Zone A area, including underground storage tanks, storage of liquid hazardous waste, treatment of hazardous waste, uncovered storage of fertilizers, cemeteries, and solid waste handling facilities."

The Water Commission also has proposed three other Warrant Articles One article would authorize the borrowing of $2.4 million, without raising water rates, to continue the Water Commission's aggressive water system improvements program, McNabb said. The other two would establish the Water Department as an Enterprise Fund and would release easements not needed any more by the Water Department because new water mains that have been installed.

Field Trip approved

Cohasset eighth-graders will take a field trip to New York City on June 5. The one-day trip will focus on the causes and impact of the wave of immigration from Northern Europe to the United States in the mid-19th century. Students will visit the United Nations, Ellis Island and the South Street Seaport. They will examine issue such as settlement and diversity, economic reasoning, principals and practices of American government and citizenship. The School Committee approved the field trip last week.

Library festivities are announced

The Library Building Committee will host a celebration for donors on March 1 at the new library in the old Osgood School. About 450 donors pledged more than $1,100,000 to the library, payable over three years. The opening ceremony for the library, to which the entire town is invited, will be March 2.

Protecting CPC funds

Selectman Tom Callahan, on behalf of the Community Preservation Committee, has asked residents to resist efforts by the state to raid funding from the Community Preservation Act to help balance the budget. Two bills in the state legislature have proposed the idea. One would take directly money from the towns who have adopted the act, and another would tap the matching funds that the state has pledged to those towns.

The Board of Selectmen encouraged residents at its last meeting to write local legislators, particularly state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, who is sponsoring the bill to raid towns' funds. Under the Community Preservation Act, Cohasset residents pay a 1.5 percent real estate tax surcharge, which is matched by the state and then set aside for certain community improvements.

Open burning season begins

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis from through May 1, for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch, Center at 781-383-0260 between the hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact permit issuance. Burning hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Deer Hill name

The School Committee will discuss the idea of changing the name of the Deer Hill School at its meeting, Feb. 6 at 7 p.m. in the High School Library. The committee has received a proposal from Ed Goff of Ledgewood Drive to name the school after William Ripley, the longtime superintendant, teacher, and coach. "We really do think this is important and we encourage people to give us feedback," committee member Mark DeGiacomo said.

One problem with renaming the school is that its current name was scheduled to be painted on the gym floor this Tuesday, then covered with two layers of polyurathane. School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said no name would be painted for now.

Selectmen to name two CPC members

Selectmen will appoint two new members to the Community Preservation Committee at their meeting on Feb. 11. One seat to be filled is the Housing Authority's representative to the committee, and another is the at-large seat that was vacated when David McMorris resigned from the committee.

Richard Silvia, whom the CPC had endorsed for the at-large position, has withdrawn from consideration. For that seat, Selectmen will now decide between a candidate from the Senior Housing Committee, Margy Charles, a candidate newly endorsed by the CPC, Tom Greco, and three additional candidates.

Circulating all building permits

The Planning Board has drafted a warrant article for Town Meeting that would require circulation of all building permits to town officials before they are approved. The idea behind the move, which is seemingly in response to the case at 3 Jerusalem Lane, would be to prevent any potential conflicts seen in the permit.

ZBA zeroes in on Avalon driveway, traffic impacts

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Consultants say vehicular traffic generated from AvalonBay, a 200-unit apartment complex proposed off Route 3A, won't appreciably add to the volume along the congested state highway.

However, it will have an affect on the time it takes for cars entering the highly traveled road from Sohier and lower King streets during peak times. But according to reports presented to the Zoning Board of Appeals, those intersections are already failing by state standards, which rate corners on the time it takes for cars to find an adequate traffic gap to make the turn.

The ZBA asked its consultant and Avalon to look at lower King and Sohier street impacts as part of the ZBA's on-going hearing on plans for the development, which is applying for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law. Under 40B, a developer can skirt most of a municipality's zoning regulations in exchange for providing a percentage of affordable housing.

The good news, according to the traffic consultants, is the MBTA plans to install traffic lights at 3A's intersections with Sohier and King streets, as part of the Greenbush railroad project.

However, the irony was not lost on at least one member of the ZBA, who noted three signals within a short distance — including the existing light at Stop & Shop — would cause traffic delays on 3A.

"Three lights within a short distance?" ZBA member Barbara Power asked.

"Yes," replied Avalon traffic consultant Rick Bryant of Rizzo Associates.

The discussion was part of an overview of traffic flow and impacts — to, from and within the apartment complex — which is being proposed for the 62-acre former Webb-Norfolk Conveyor site across from Atlantic Bagel.

Avalon has offered to widen the driveway entrance-exit, including the addition of a center island. The island would be constructed so large trucks, such as moving vans, could ride over it when negotiating the turn from 3A.

The ZBA asked its consultant and Avalon to look at lower King and Sohier street impacts as part of the ZBA's on-going hearing on plans for the development.

Also of concern to the ZBA is how a proposed 3A left-turning lane into the Avalon driveway would be configured. The three options on the table include: doing nothing, which would force northbound vehicles traveling around a car making a left-turn onto the right shoulder; creating a dedicated left-turn lane; or creating a bypass lane, so vehicles can pass on the right or continue straight ahead if there is no car making a left.

Bryant explained that MassHighway would have the final say on any changes. He said the right-of-way along 3A is 70 feet wide, and the pavement is only about 40 feet wide, so no land takings would be necessary if the road had to be widened some four-to-six feet to accommodate another lane at that location.

But landlord Roger Hill, who owns the popular strip mall directly across the street that includes Atlantic Bagel, Good Sport and Hancock Paint, says regardless of lane configurations — Avalon traffic is going to wreak havoc at that site.

Hill noted the bagel shop does its highest volume during rush hour from 6-9 a.m., when Avalon traffic would be at its peak. He explained existing traffic creates "a constant conflict" at that location during that time of day.

There was also considerable discussion about the importance of having a second access for emergency vehicles only to the Avalon site. Scott Dale, vice president of development, said Avalon was talking to MassHighway about an access through its property off Crocker Lane. He explained while a second access is desirable and Avalon would pursue negotiations with the MassHighway, it is not critical. He cited Avalon Ledges in Weymouth that has 304 units and only one access, as an example.

Avalon is resisting further reducing the grade of the proposed main driveway from 8 to 6 percent, as suggested, because it would involve lengthening and pushing the driveway out to the perimeter of the site. Doing so would involve disturbing woodlands and possibly meadows, depending on the location. It would also involve cutting into the slope and creating a large retaining wall.

The ZBA took the traffic issues under advisement. At Monday's continued hearing with Avalon, the issues relating to wastewater and storm water will be the focus of discussion.

Army Corps to host Feb. 5 train meeting in Hingham

By James Russell
CORRESPONDENT

The Army Corps of Engineers has scheduled a public meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 5 at 11 a.m. in the Hingham Town Hall to discuss with MBTA officials, town leaders and residents of the five Greenbush communities the seven unresolved issues contained in the Section 106 Programmatic Agreement, according to Army Corps spokesman Timothy Dugan.

Section 106, part of the United States Historic Preservation Act, requires the MBTA to "avoid, minimize or mitigate effects of the rail infrastructure and operations" regarding "affected historic properties," according to section I of the Agreement.

The bulk of the meeting is expected to focus on two issues, said Dugan: grade crossings in all five towns, i.e., whether the MBTA will use 2-quadrant gates with median barriers or 4-quardrant gates, and historic, aquatic and archeological resources germane to Weymouth Landing.

The five other unresolved issues noted in section IX of the agreement are: final location of the Greenbush Line terminus and layover in Scituate; design of the Route 3A/Driftway roundabout intersection in Scituate; design of the crossing at Rocky Lane in Cohasset; design of several roadways and crossings in Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate; and measures to resolve adverse effects at the Cohasset Railroad Roundhouse Site

The MBTA cannot build Greenbush without the Section 404/ Section10 permit.

In another matter, Dugan said the comment period has been extended to Feb. 19 regarding the MBTA's December filing with the Corps for a Section 404 and Section 10 federal permit.

"The application for the federal permit was filed with the Corps of Engineers under Section 404 of the Clean Water Act, which regulates the discharge of dredged or fill material in U.S. waters, and Section 10 of the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1899, which provides for federal regulation of any work in, or affecting navigable waters of the United States," said Dugan.

"Total permanent and temporary wetlands and waterway impacts within Corps jurisdiction of the proposed work include 3.41 acres of permanent impact to wetlands, 4.02 acres of temporary impacts to wetlands, 0.082 acres of permanent impact to waterways, and 0.30 acres of temporary impacts to waterways."

The MBTA cannot build Greenbush without the Section 404/Section10 permit.

Written statements referencing this permit application (file # 1997-00680) should be forwarded to Theodore M. Lento, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, New England District, Regulatory Division, 696 Virginia Road, Concord, MA 01742-2751. Questions and additional information are available from Lento via e-mail: Theodore.m.lento@usace.army.mil, according to Dugan.

Community urged to give blood Feb. 5

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Feb. 5. The Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main and Summer streets from 1:30-7:30 p.m. Babysitting will be provided from 3- 5 p.m. Ample parking is available.

The American Red Cross is asking all eligible blood donors in the Cohasset area to give blood when the bloodmobile comes to Cohasset.

"Only five out of every 100 people give blood, and the number of new donors decreased dramatically last year," says Cathy Pray of the Red Cross. "First-time donors are urgently needed to replace donors who have moved away or become ineligible to donate."

The best way to give blood for the first time is to come with a friend who is experienced in the donation process. New donors usually find the procedure easy and painless and most come back regularly to donate.

"The biggest obstacle seems to be overcoming that initial fear," Pray said. "That's why we're counting on our regular donors to help by bringing a friend to this blood drive."

The Red Cross area community of which Cohasset is a part requires more than 1,600 pints of blood per day to meet usual demand for blood and blood products.

This Blood Drive is in honor of Charlotte Karol, a young student at the Hatherly School in Scituate who has shown great courage during treatment and recent surgery for removal of a cancerous tumor at Children's Hospital. Her parents, Franny and Bernie, ask folks to please donate blood so others will have a supply available when needed.

Most people can give blood through the American Red Cross. Potential donors must be at least 17 years of age, in good health and weigh over 110 pounds. In most cases, donors may give if they are on medication, but should know the names of these medications.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, please call Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 781-383-1290. You can also call the Red Cross at 1-800-448-3543.

Salt marsh restoration begins at World's End

The Trustees of Reservations will begin restoration work at Damde Meadows in World's End in late January. The work will restore the 14-acre brackish pond and marsh, located near the reservation's entrance, into a healthy New England salt marsh that will enhance biological diversity, water quality, and scenery at the reservation. A pair of a 4 ft. by 8 ft. box culverts will be installed in each of two dikes located between Martins Cove and Damde Meadows. The culverts will re-establish tidal exchange within Damde Meadows, which will promote the gradual re-establishment of native salt marsh grasses. Work will be constrained by high tides but is expected to last at least one month, though seeding the work area and other tasks will wait until spring. World's End will remain open during construction, but visitor access via the Martins Cove dikes will be limited.

"The project is an exceptional opportunity for visitors to learn about salt marshes, including the long history of human use and today's efforts to restore these highly valuable ecological systems," said Trustees Ecologist Andy Walsh. Efforts by early colonists and subsequent generations to drain Damde Meadows in order to grow hay interrupted the tidal flow and created a shallow, open water body surrounded by stands of non-native common reed (Phragmites) that provide little value for wildlife.

The project is being conducted in association with the Massachusetts Wetlands Restoration Program of the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, the Massachusetts Corporate Wetlands Restoration Partnership, and Coastal America. Financial support for the project comes from public and private sector entities, as well as private donors and grant funding. The Trustees will host fundraising events to raise additional money for the project.

Ground swell votes no on village wires project

begin in early summer, are funded by $2.7 million in grants from the state and the MBTA.

Dean Rizzo, director of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, said he was surprised the override didn't pass. "I knew it was a tough economic climate to put forward an initiative like this but I was hoping folks could look forward to the future," he said. "It's a short term investment and a long term return."

Rizzo said he and Hubert van der Lugt, owner of Hub Shipping, had raised about $120,000 for the project from village business owners, with more donations likely if the override was approved. The majority of the donated money came from Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, who had pledged $100,000.

Rizzo said chances were slim that businesses could now raise enough money to fund the project completely. "I think it's unfair to expect a small group of businesses in the village to raise that type of money," he said, adding that if the town came up with a more realistic, "magic number" amount for them to raise, it may be possible.

Because the utility poles will remain, Rizzo said, the design of village improvements will be affected. "Now you're lighting is dictated by where the current poles are," he said. "It dramatically affects how the lighting will look. You no longer have the option to do the decorative lighting spaced evenly throughout the sidewalk."

Rizzo said the project of burying the wires would be would more than twice as expensive to do in the future.

Three may seek seat on the Board of Selectmen

"I think we have to look closely at the budget and continue to cut where we can," he said. "We'll try and cut it as far as we can without reducing services dramatically."

In his nine years as a selectman, Sullivan has worked on initiatives concerning the sewer system, the town water supply, the library, the DPW, and the schools. One of his strengths, he said, has been "justifying any new expenses we take on."

Sullivan, who runs an executive search business in Hingham, said he wants to monitor the beginning phases of Greenbush construction and make sure the railroad is built with "as little adverse impact to the town as possible." He said developing low-income senior housing and making sure the state follows through on its share of payments for the town's school projects were also important.

Gomez, who took out nomination papers this week, lives on Highland Avenue with his wife and three children. He graduated from the Naval Academy in 1987 and spent eight years in the Navy as a pilot and a SEAL commander. He graduated Harvard Business School in 1997, and now works for a venture capital firm in Boston.

Gomez wouldn't comment on any issues yet, but said he looked forward to the opportunity to participate in town government. "I've got three young kids. We're going to raise them in Cohasset, and I want to be able to make an impact on the town," he said.

Potential candidates for elected town offices have until Feb. 18 to secure 50 signatures from registered voters to make them eligible for the April 5 election.

Seats up for election include:

- Board of Selectmen. Michael Sullivan will seek reelection. Roger Hill and Gabriel Gomez have taken out papers for Sullivan's seat;
- Board of Assessors. Michael Patrolia, who is running for re-election;
- Board of Trustees for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Agnes McCann, Patience Towle and Carol Riley, who will all run for re-election;
- Board of Health. Margaret Chapman will seek re-election;
- Planning Board. Robert H. Sturdy will seek re-election;
- Recreation Commission. Richard Barrow will seek re-election;
- School Committee. Rick Flynn and Chartis Tebbetts will both seek re-election;
- Sewer Commission. Gary Vanderweil will not seek re-election. John Beck is running.
- The Water Commission. John McNabb will seek another term.

Nomination papers available at Town Hall

Nomination papers for the Annual Town Election for 2003 are available at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be available for the 2003 Town Election:

- Selectmen — one for three years
- School Committee — two for three years
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library — three for three years
- Assessor — one for three years
- Board of Health — one for three years
- Planning Board — one for five years
- Recreation Commission — one for five years
- Sewer Commission — one for three years
- Water Commission — one for three years.

Friday, March 7 is the last day to register for the Annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 29, and for the Annual Town Election, Saturday, April 5.

Town Census for 2003

The Town Census for 2003 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain benefits for veterans, and reduced-tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms are on a tear-off portion of the census forms. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31, 2003. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible, although you may have recently renewed your 2002 license.

If you did not receive your census, please contact the Town Clerk's office.

Ayer says others are in the same boat

lot. The board has said Ayer must apply for a special permit to complete the home according to original plans.

While Ayer and his lawyer, Roberta Sawyer, appeal the ZBA's decision and apply for that permit, they are asking that other homes built under similar circumstances are treated equally by the town.

The specific homes in question are at 575 Jerusalem Road, 396 Jerusalem Road, 414 North Main St., 147 Beechwood St., 22 Norfolk Road and 7 Lothrop Lane.

Egan said the homes were the "same cases" as 3 Jerusalem Lane, but added he would need to consult with Town Counsel before issuing a decision on the matter. Sawyer filed the request two weeks ago, and Egan had until today to take action. He said he may simply not rule on the case at all and allow it to go before the Zoning Board of Appeals.

Chairman Woody Chittick said the Zoning Board of Appeals would not consult with Egan on the decision because it would prevent the board from being objective in the event of an appeal.

"I do share his feeling that there's been an injustice and this is all after the fact."

— Chris Ford, owner of 575 Jerusalem Road

The only difference between Ayer's home and others under question may be that Ayer's neighbors have complained more. The building permits for the other homes were never appealed to the Zoning Board.

One of the homes, at 575 Jerusalem Road, is owned by Chris Ford, a member of the Planning Board. "I understand that why (Ayer) would say, 'Gee if you're going to question my home, why not question all the others in town that are like it?,'" Ford said. "I do share his feeling that there's been an injustice and this is all after the fact."

If Ford and other owners are asked to apply for a special permit, it is likely Ayer's home would still receive the most disapproval from neighbors. Ayer's neighbors are prepared to argue that his home is "detrimental to the neighborhood" in a public hearing that would be part of the special permit process.

According to a letter to the Cohasset Mariner, the neighbors say the home, which measures about 5,000 square feet and replaced a 1,800 square-foot ranch, is not "consistent with the character and the scale of the neighborhood" and will result in a devaluation of their properties. Whether that is enough for the Zoning Board to deny Ayer a special permit remains unclear.

Neighbors also say they are skeptical that Ayer has any long-term plans of living in the home. Ayer admits he developed, lived in and then sold three homes on Cedar Street in Cohasset, but says he was originally planning on living in the Jerusalem Lane house for many years. He said he may reconsider that, given the current situation with the neighbors.

Ayer is now involved in a separate battle with John Daly of 322 Jerusalem Road, who is also an opposing neighbor. Ayer's lawyer has asked the building inspector to require Daly to seek a special permit for a roof deck he is allegedly building, but Egan said Tuesday he had not yet looked into the matter.

Aside from seeking legal avenues, Ayer's response to the Zoning Board's decision has been to alert the media and other residents to his situation.

Last Friday morning, Ayer led a rally on Cohasset Common, a day after taking out a full page ad in the Cohasset Mariner claiming his "civil liberties" has been violated and asking residents to call the Selectmen. About 25 friends and co-workers from Scituate, Cohasset and other South Shore towns joined Ayer and his wife, Mary Anne, in protesting the ZBA's decision.

With the wind chill dipping into single digits, demonstrators lined both sides of North Main Street, waving American flags and directing signs at passing cars. "Civil rights violation," one sign warned. "Equal treatment for all," another proclaimed. "3 Jerusalem Lane, We will never forget," a third said.

"Who has their home taken away from them when it's 80 percent built?" asked Mary Anne Ayer. "It's a disturbing thing for the whole family to see this kind of unfair treatment, to have this amount of insecurity. A home is the most secure thing you have. Without a home, what do you have?"

Beth Sobiloff, a friend of the Ayers for 10 years, drove from her home in Hanover to show support. "They did everything by the book," she said. "Some time the only way to bring about change is to make it public."

Chris McKenna of North Main Street was the builder of the home at 147 Beechwood St., constructed under circumstances similar to Ayer's. "Not only do I think it's ridiculous that the ZBA is trying to do this to the Ayers' home this late in the game, but it if they get away with it, it'll hurt my family and it'll hurt my business," he said. "It'll affect a lot of people in town who want to put additions on or make improvements to their homes."

The rally did not attract all the media attention Ayer had hoped for. No television crews arrived. No Boston Herald. Ayer deemed it the "pre-rally rally" and planned for another demonstration this Saturday, but he called it off a day later, citing the cold weather.

Still, Ayer said the rally was a success. "I just want people to look at this town and say 'What are you doing?,'" he said. "They operate behind closed doors and they think nobody is going to find out about it."

Now, Ayer says, he will wait to see how the building inspector and the Zoning Board rule on his requests for equal enforcement and a special permit before planning any more demonstrations.

LAST CALL FOR BRICKS

The South Shore Community Center's pedestrian-only walkway project has been very successful and has raised over $25,000 for a new playground. In anticipation of its opening this summer, engraved brick and paver sales will close on Jan. 31. If you would like to add your brick order to the pathway, please call Trish Hart (781-383-9209) for details. Bricks are$100 and pavers are $500.

STUDENT ATHLETE

Jennifer Meehan of Cohasset achieved a 3.9 GPA at Emmanuel College for the fall semester. She was elected a member of the Emmanuel College Athletic All-Academic Team, an award for student athletes with a GPA for 3.5 or higher. Jennifer is the captain of the varsity tennis and field hockey teams and is a member of the Residence Hall Council and Education Club. Congratulations, Jennifer on all your accomplishments!

DEAN'S LIST AT COLBY

Caitlin E. Slodden has been named to the dean's list for outstanding academic achievement during the fall semester at Colby College. A member of the Class of 2004, Caitlin is majoring in anthropology and minoring in women's studies. She is a graduate of Thayer Academy and the daughter of proud parents, Henry and Karen Slodden. Great work, Caitlin.

DAMA SAYS THANKS

Hey, a special message is being sent out to all families of children who ride on Bus 5 with Dama! Dama was completely overwhelmed during the holidays with gifts of appreciation given to her by so many and wanted to make sure to send a great big thank you to all! She enjoys being the driver for all of you and hopes that the second half of the year goes as well as the first!

HANDMADE VALENTINES

A Family Valentine Workshop will be held by the South Shore Art Center and is bound to be a great time for all. The age old tradition of creating hand-made valentines will be enjoyed during a parent and child workshop at the South Shore Art Center. Children and their parents, grandparents, or caregivers will spend a cozy winter morning making heartwarming valentines to give and to treasure. The workshop will meet Feb. 8 from 10-11:30 a.m.. The cost is $25 for members of the Art Center, $35, for nonmembers and additional children can join for $8 each. Cost includes all valentine materials. To register or for more information call 781-383-ARTS or visit www.ssac.org.

COMMUNITY LOSS

On Jan. 20, the Truglia family suffered a great loss with the sudden death of Mario at age 50. Mario was the owner of Truglia Landscaping. He was a hard working man and a devoted husband and father. Our community would like to do something for the Truglia family in honor of Mario's memory. Donations may be made to the Truglia family at the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank, 48 S. Main St., Cohasset, MA 02025.

VALENTINES FUND DANCE

First Annual Valentines Fund Dance will be celebrated on Saturday, Feb. 15, from 8 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Atlantica Restaurant, 44 Border St. The creative black-tie party will raise money to benefit the homeless of greater Boston and Cambridge. All proceeds will be donated to Bread & Jams, Inc. Self-advocacy Programs.

Bread & Jams is a non-profit day shelter for men, women and youth located in Harvard Square at the Old Cambridge Baptist Church at 1151 Mass. Ave., Cambridge.

Numerous merchants, restaurateurs and local artists and friends from both South Shore communities and Harvard Square have donated gift certificates, tickets to major sporting events and works of art for raffle and silent auction. The Atlantica Restaurant is donating the hall and hors d'oeuvres. There will be a cash bar and dinner reservations can be placed with the Atlantica at 781-383-0900. Featured entertainment by The Joe Micarelli Trio, The Full Moon Revue, and Shaken Not Stirred — all donating their energy to this timely cause. Donations are $25 per person. Tables and blocks of tickets are also available. RSVP by mailed invitation please as a limited number of tickets will be available at the door. In 1953 Dwight Eisenhower was sworn in as president of the United States, "From Here to Eternity" won best picture, a gallon of gasoline cost 21 cents, and the New York Yankees defeated the Brooklyn Dodgers in the World Series.

While the details of 50 years ago may be a distant memory, a Cohasset institution that is marking its Golden Anniversary this year is as relevant as ever.

The Cohasset Consignment Shop, which draws shoppers from across the South Shore and beyond, sells the gamut of items ranging from bric-a-brac, fine china to clothing — all on consignment, meaning the shop sells the items for the owner and gets a percentage of the sale.

The first event to commemorate what will be a memorable year is the Valentines Day drawing for a new, Oscar De la Renta mink coat, valued at $10,000. Entry coupons are available in the Cohasset Mariner.

It's fitting that the prize is a ranch mink coat because the Consignment Shop that supports the good works of the Social Service League of Cohasset is known for its furs.

Andi Merrill of Scituate, who has managed the shop since 1982, has used her expertise over the years to establish a fur department at the shop. She consigns all the furs herself and works with the owners to come up with a selling price.

Money for the sale of furs, other clothing and myriad items ranging from teacups to picture frames are shared with the shop and the Social Service League, a non-profit that supports Meals on Wheels and provides the services of a licensed social worker to surrounding communities, among other programs.

The mission of the League, which was founded in 1912, is to address the areas of the most social need in a community, whether that is a school lunch program to promote nutrition or seminars on issues such as self-defense or end-of-life care.

Merrill says the Consignment Shop opened its doors on Depot Court on July 7, 1953, and relocated to the then brand-new Cushing Plaza on Route 3A 10 years later. To gain more space, the shop relocated to part of the former Woolworth's space in Tedeschi Plaza in the spring of 1999.

She credits the leadership of Jean Cotton, who started managing the store in 1965, and her dedicated volunteers with maintaining high standards and strict consigning guidelines to continue to grow the business.

Cotton, who retired in 1982, asked Merrill to take over the reins. Merrill's sharp retail sense has been a plus at the popular shop for two decades. With 2,000 consignors, the inventory changes daily.

"To date consignors and customers, some third generation, come from a geographic area of about 75 miles," Merrill says. "A staff of more than 115 volunteers from surrounding communities continues to dedicate their time and effort for a worthy cause."

Merrill says each day is a surprise and notes the interesting items that have passed through the shops doors including a collection of 30 Hermes scarves, a Fendi mink coat, a collection of Mont Blanc pens, and a hand-carved model of the Titanic — to name just a few.

She fondly recalls the customer who came from Newton in a chauffeured limousine, the customer who returned a diamond pin found in the pocket of a garment, and a mother-of-the bride who found just the right dress at the shop after looking all over Boston.

Merrill says an offshoot of all this is the camaraderie that has grown among the volunteers.

"They have lived through their marriages, their children's marriages, the births of their children, grandchildren and great grandchildren," Merrill says. "They console each other at times of grave illness, accidents and deaths.

"They've exchanged recipes, photos, discussed current events, personal matters and political views."

Merrill says this interaction has made the customers feel at home in the shop and wish to share their life experiences.

"The shop has a big heart and fills a void in the community near and far," she says. "Without the volunteers, the shop would not be celebrating its 50th anniversary this year."

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Precedent setting

The line Cohasset is drawing in the sand regarding "mansionization" with the dispute over 3 Jerusalem Lane may ultimately clarify an issue that has been brewing for some time.

Houses that are out of step with their neighborhood are nothing new in town. As reporters we've sat through a number of hearings before the Zoning Board of Appeals that were packed with neighbors upset about the size and design of a house going up next door or across the street. Those hearings were triggered however, not by the volume of the house, but by some encroachment into a setback or height issue.

Thanks to the economic boom of the '90s, it seemed as though the reasonable expectation of having the houses around yours remain about the same size as when you moved in, with the exception of the addition of a deck or dormer, have become a thing of the past.

That being said, however, it has become clear to us the drafters of the zoning bylaw didn't anticipate land values would become so costly in Cohassct that it would become economically beneficial to raze an existing house and replace it with a much larger structure.

Couple that with a neighborhood of million-dollar views and you ratchet up the debate because when views disappear, property values can drop.

In the case of 3 Jerusalem Lane, on one side are the neighbors, who were frozen out of the public process because the Building Inspector has been consistent in his interpretation of the bylaw. The house in question meets all the setback and height requirements, and therefore, the Building Inspector said it didn't trigger the need for a special permit and subsequent hearing before the ZBA that would have required notification of abutters. The ZBA agrees that the bylaw is vague regarding reconstruction of homes on undersized lots. We hope the hearing for a special permit for 3 Jerusalem Lane clears up that issue.

On the other side is the new homeowner, who obtained a building permit fair and square, and went ahead to raze an older home and construct a new one.

The neighbors have subsequently appealed the issuance of the building permit and the ZBA upheld their appeal. What happens next is anybody's guess. The legal ramifications of this case relating to the finer nuances of the zoning bylaw are for sharper minds than ours.

However, we do agree there has been a grave injustice here on both sides. Phil Ayer, the builder, is understandably upset. And in addition to not liking the new house that dwarfs theirs and blocks their views, the neighbors are also angered for having had no say in the process.

In times like these, we wish Town Counsel were not a large firm that communicates by fax and has dozens of other communities to contend with. We remember the days when a local lawyer, who knew the bylaw better than the ZBA, could be called and appear at a board meeting at a moment's notice.

The silver lining in all of this may be that this situation will likely clarify the bylaw so future "mansions" replacing smaller homes on small lots will automatically trigger a review. The sad part is the neighbors and Mr. Ayer have to be the test case.

Abutters speak out on 3 Jerusalem Lane

TO THE EDITOR:

We are writing in reaction to the efforts of the developer of 3 Jerusalem Lane to conjure the image of the down-trodden civil liberties of a professional Real Estate speculator through a media and PR campaign. At issue is Civil Rights. But it is the Civil Right of a neighborhood and community to public process and protection from property loss that is at stake. If the inalienable rights are as important to the developer as he represents (and if he recognizes that neighbors have them too) why is the public review of a Special Permit Hearing so untenable?

We welcome the Ayer family to Cohasset and Jerusalem Lane. We ask that any replacement of the original structure comply with the Cohasset Zoning By-Laws, be responsible and considerate of the neighborhood and community and that the Ayers' "dream house" isn't a continuing nightmare for those who have made their homes here before them. 3 Jerusalem Lane as it has been constructed is an imposing scar on Cohasset's coast-scape, is invasive, out of scale and reflects brazen disregard for the property values and aesthetic amenities of an entire neighborhood. The detriment to the abutting properties and scenic quality of the area is so substantial as to defy understanding of either the project's scope or design. The Cohasset Zoning Bylaws, by their intent "...preserve and protect the outstanding characteristics and natural beauty of the town..." and insure that one property cannot become a detriment to another. It is this protection which the ZBA courageously defended for the Jerusalem Lane neighborhood with the decision to uphold the appeal and require the developer to justify the project and the impact of his action on his neighborhood, through a Special Permit Hearing.

The neighbors' concern rose in July '02 with a search for understanding of the scope and direction of the project. By that time the original house had been voluntarily razed and blasting of ledge began. Since no hearings had been required it was assumed construction would be on the original footprint of the prior structure and existing character of the neighborhood. As varying statements and representations of the developer's intent proved less than accurate, credibility came into question. By August neighbors began to stop at Town Hall and first found no plans, then plans of a house that was not being built and by September viewed plans resembling what was actually being built and began to understand the invasive scale and detriment to the neighborhood and their own property values. To date no single, comprehensive plan reflects the original site or the site that the developer proposes to become part of this neighborhood. Height and coverage calculations, however suspect, were only provided in response to questions raised by the neighbors.

The developer's response was not honest communication but the acceleration of construction. Requests for review were ignored. Construction accelerated. In early October the developer and his lawyer met with the Town Counsel and the Building Inspector and was then fully aware of the potential implications of the neighbors request for a Special Permit Hearing and enforcement of the Bylaws. Construction continued to accelerate and neighbors began to receive notice of legal action against them personally. Since that time, at his own peril and aware of the potential for a decision upholding the neighbors request for cessation of construction and right to a Special Permit Hearing, the developer continued to fast-track the construction. The exposure the developer had in September vs. the exposure he laments of now are of his own knowledge and creation, appear tactical and seem a sad challenge to the resolve of the Town, the neighbors, the community and the courts to enforce a seemingly basic, obvious measure of community responsibility in the face of arrogant self-interest at the expense of the same community that is the reason and source of the developer's profit.

The neighbor's effort to protect the investments in their own homes through the Bylaw enforcement action is intended to require the developer to exercise civic responsibility and build as allowed by the Bylaws in a manner consistent with the character and scale of the neighborhood. It has become increasingly apparent that the developer was not grasping these concepts on his own. We remain in shock (and are supported by what we believe to be the vast majority of citizens of Cohasset and admirers of its coast) that anyone could conceive, then defend, a project so out of context and so willfully injurious to the neighbors. From the intentional, self-serving, unnecessary, nearly total disruption of the network of vistas of the Jerusalem Lane neighborhood to the affront of the shear scale of the project as viewed by joggers and sightseers alike, to the nightmarish, peering, "control tower" domination now seen across Cohasset's skyline; we can only repeat the refrain we have heard so often, "what was he thinking"?

The issue remains whether a developer is entitled to impact a neighborhood in the manner of 3 Jerusalem Lane and if the abutters will receive the protection they thought their tax dollars afforded them. The "heart-string" tugging of the Ayer's dream house media blitz seems disingenuous relative to the developer's prior, stated intention of offering this "family home" for sale ($2,700,000). In the light of the developer's other speculative Cohasset ventures and recent activities relating to other "non-conforming" Cohasset lots (dream house opportunities, also rumored to be in litigation w/the town) it seems more factual that 3 Jerusalem Lane is an investment whose profit is generated at the expense of the property values of the neighbors. The neighbors are now facing retaliatory claims and threats of litigation from the "aggrieved" developer/neighbor. It is not neighborly to misrepresent intentions to the abutters, not neighborly to inflict such blatant detriment to abutters and community for a self-serving gain, and it is not neighborly to dupe the citizens to fulfill some arrogant, self-entitlement.

We live in a time and community where the economic incentives of development encourage and easily afford the litigious path to economic advantage and a lawyer's loose, incredulously vehement, manipulation of a Bylaw's intent or project impact (ie.Avalon Bay). A Town Budget is no match for a project that can allocate tens of thousands of dollars to challenge regulation and interpretation (ie. define reconstruction) and coerce concessions and advantage. Litigation is said to be a rich man's game. A municipality, by its nature and funding limitations, can not compete. The travails of 3 Jerusalem Lane have prompted the formation of the Cohasset Defense Fund (P.O. Box 122, Cohasset) as a means of assisting the town boards and/or neighborhoods with taking a stand, when it has to be taken, to preserve the community we owe to those who came before us for those who will follow. It is the intent of the Cohasset Defense Fund that the Cohasset community serve crystal clear notice to the litigious developer-types that the letter and intent of the Town's regulations will be enforced, that the preservation of the uniqueness of this community and landscape has an unwavering aesthetic and financial resolve.

Referencing the ZBA 3 Jerusalem Lane decision the recent Ayer paid Mariner advertisement forebodes "Half of the houses in Cohasset may be affected...". Wrong. All of our homes & community are affected, protected and have benefited from the vision of the ZBA decision and the Cohasset it preserves.

HEALTH NOTES

Community blood drive, winter walking

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Mark your calendar; Cohasset's winter blood drive is coming to the Second Congregational Church at 43 Highland Ave. on Feb. 5, from 1:30-7:30 p.m.. No matter how you feel about the Red Cross, they are responsible in large part for getting the blood needed by our healthcare system. By and large, considering the threats to our blood supply posed by ever increasingly threatening pathogens, such as AIDS and hepatitis, they are doing a good job. And there is no question that those who volunteer their time through the Social Service League, and others such as the VNA are never paid as much as they deserve, except by the fact that they are helping people — payment enough. So, if you can, give blood; others may be giving much more.

Walking program at CMHS

After enduring one of the coldest periods in recent memory, it's appropriate for us to consider how to get some exercise in such weather. Accordingly, the Board of Health, is sponsoring a Winter Walking program at the Cohasset High School from 3-6 p.m. weekdays. Walking will be available in selected sections (during construction) until renovations are complete. The program, coordinated by Kathy Bryanton of Cohasset Elder Affairs at the Community Center is similar to that at Hanover Mall, except that it's closer and we will not be giving gift certificates. Everyone is invited, and it's free, but donations to Elder Affairs or the Community Center are welcome. We hope to have student community service volunteers available during the walking periods, and also to provide maps of the various parts of the building which will be open. This is a developing concept, so please give us your ideas about what the walking program should involve. It'll be better for your input.

Contact the Board of Health about beginning dates and specific particulars, and Kathy Bryanton at Cohasset Elder affairs (781 383-9112) to sign up.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Town got it wrong

To the Zoning Board of Appeals
Town of Cohasset

Somehow, the Town got it wrong! I do not know how or why this has happened. I do not know or care who was responsible. I just know that the Town got it wrong.

Construction of the massive new mansion at 3 Jerusalem Lane should never have been allowed. And it certainly should not have been allowed without at least prior notification to the abutters and an opportunity for them to review the plans and comment.

For half a century or more, Jerusalem Lane has been a quiet community of simple frame houses resting on the undisturbed granite ledge that is so characteristic of Cohasset. Indeed, it is almost a signature of the original builder that one finds an outcrop of the ledge incorporated within each house.

Now, one of these has been plucked summarily by its roots and carted away. More than 2,700 tons of granite ledge has been blasted to fragments and trucked off-site. The resultant, gaping, unsightly cavity is now occupied by an oversized garage of heroic proportions, surmounted by a towering new structure that is totally out of scale with its surrounding neighbors.

These are all relatively small lots, more or less pieshaped, that seem to crowd together at their apex on Jerusalem Lane. Over the years, this has brought us a unique sense of neighborhood, less likely to be achieved in any other setting. We respect one another's privacy, but we are supportive of one another in times of stress or need. Until the present, it has always been our custom to welcome newcomers with a small informal party .

From time to time, we have patiently sat through the endless hours of debate over amendments to the Zoning By-Law at various Town Meetings in the expectation that we would be protected from unreasonable encroachment at some future day. We do not really understand what has gone amiss, bout something certainly has. We would not want to see a similar event occur elsewhere in this town.

I think that the Town has got it wrong in this instance, and I think that the Town should find a way to make it right. I believe that this is primarily the responsibility of your august Board, and I trust that you will soon find an appropriate solution.

James R. Hooper

Permit problems loom for Greenbush

TO THE EDITOR:

Many people are wondering where things stand with the Greenbush project. Despite the proliferation of Jersey barriers, and the statements emerging from the design/build contractor that construction is "about to begin," the major permits have not yet been issued. The Greenbush project is still in the design stage. The MBTA stated at its Board of Directors meeting last year, when the contract was awarded, that a Notice to Proceed on construction will not be issued until all the permits are in hand.

Our group, Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA), continues our challenge to force proper evaluation of impacts, and consideration of realistic and cost-effective transit alternatives to Greenbush. AfTA has been briefing members of the new Romney team since before the election, as well as legislative leadership, on these issues. The Commonwealth faces a crisis, not only in state funding, but also in transit funding. As Mass. Taxpayers has noted, if Greenbush is built, there is not enough money to fund adequate maintenance of the badly out of repair MBTA system, nor any other transit expansion project for the next 10 years. If Governor Romney applies the "Fix It First" principle to transit as well as to roads and bridges, as well as a set of objective criteria, then Greenbush will be cancelled.

Here are the major environmental permits that the MBTA still needs to build Greenbush. Each one of them is complex, and there are various challenges by AfTA, by town Conservation Commissions, by the Town of Hingham, with support from the Mass. Association of Conservation Commissions, among others:

- Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) Variance to Wetlands Act for Wetlands permits in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

Only Hingham has been granted a variance by DEP, but the Hingham Selectmen, Hingham Conservation Commission, and AfTA have each requested an Adjudicatory Hearing. A pre-hearing has been scheduled for March 26. Similar appeals on DEP variances for Cohasset and Scituate can be expected.

- DEP Water Quality Certification (401 Certificate).

This certificate deals with impacts to Outstanding Resource Waters. The permit has not yet been issued. Once it has been issued and reviewed, it can be appealed, in light of the significant issues. There are local, state and federal problems here.

- Natural Heritage Conservation permit for impacts to endangered species and vernal pool habitat.

"Takings" of endangered species are not allowed under the Endangered Species Act, yet are acknowledged by MBTA. It is a unique issue that can only be resolved in the courts.

- DEP Waterways permit for impacts to waterways (Ch. 91).

The impact to Home Meadows, including flooding which will be caused by the construction of a new access road across the Meadows, is an example of the permits required in this category. The hearing on Home Meadows impacts is scheduled for Feb. 4 at Hingham Town Hall.

- Army Corps of Engineers (ACOE) 404 permit for impacts to federally regulated wetlands.

The Corps has asked for comments from the public, that are due by Feb. 19. If a local hearing is requested and held, this schedule will be delayed. The Corps could require a full Federal Environmental Impact Statement if they deem that there are significant impacts to wetlands, and the anadromous fishways caused by the Greenbush project. Numerous issues must be evaluated by the ACOE in making its decisions, all of which are challengeable.

In addition, on Feb. 5, the ACOE will hold a hearing in Hingham Town Hall on the issue of four quadrant gates, the crossing gate system, that were included in the Section 106 agreement on Historic Preservation. The MBTA now claims that these are unsafe, at a time when not only the federal rail system (Amtrak), but other states are installing such gates systems. The alternative MBTA approach, 60 ft. median barriers, are incompatible with the historic roadways, and will create greater traffic and aesthetic problems.

I believe these issues could take years to resolve. Stay tuned.

Don't rename the Deer Hill School

SCHOOL COMMITTEE
DEAR MEMBERS:

In our town there seems to be a great desire to attach a person's name to every building, park, field and structure.

Scores of dedicated residents and non-residents contribute hundreds of hours of their time and expertise, at times money, to accomplish these projects. All are deserving of recognition.

Why not name places for what they are? As examples, the Hagerty Property Project Mariners Park, The Swim Center, The Sailing Club, the Aaron River Dam and Reservoir, the Lily Pond Treatment Plant, the Lightkeepers House. An appropriate name for the new field on North Main Street could be "Cohasset Youth Athletic Complex."

Forty-eight years ago the elementary school on Sohier Street was built, appropriately named, The Deer Hill School. This three-year project was accomplished through the efforts of many including the members of the School Building Committee, the Superintendent, principal and teachers, architects, engineers and contractors.

Many fine superintendents have served the Cohasset Schools, including Mr. Ripley. During my years as student in the Cohasset School system two outstanding gentlemen held that position, with Mr. Ripley as a teacher and assistant principal of the high school.

In fairness to all mentioned above, in my opinion, it would be ludicrous to single out any one person's name over all others. What criterion would be used to make such a judgment?

It appears to me some confusion would occur if the state and local records and files were not also renamed. Stationery, report cards, etc. would need to be reprinted at considerable cost to the School Department.

I would highly recommend the placement of a bronze plaque conspicuously located in the buildings to memorialize any deserving person. We certainly have many in this town.

Edwin H. Pratt

Mr. Pratt provided the Mariner with a copy of his letter.

Joined runway fight

TO THE EDITOR:

What does the Runway Expansion at Logan Airport mean to Hull, Hingham and Cohasset? I just recently joined the South Shore Jet Pollution Council and was shocked at the horrible reality of the impact. Air traffic at low altitudes over these towns could conceivably double. The amount of jet emissions would severely impact the quality of life here. The noise would affect many parts of these towns that are not affected now. The South Shore would be blanketed in air traffic.

Massport is arguing that the new runway is necessary due to increase of delays from northwest winds. We think that the study Massport's consultants did on this issue is flawed. The new runway with its reconfiguring of the jet traffic over the South Shore will greatly hurt the environment of the South Shore and it's real estate values.

If Massport's plans are implemented, for example, airplanes flying below 10,000 feet will burn more than 8,000 tons of aviation fuel per year just within Cohasset's borders. These figures came from a careful study of Massport's impact documents and of published jet fuel combustion rates, funded by South Shore donated money and South Shore volunteer hours.

Runway expansion and very degraded air quality on the South Shore will happen unless the South Shore fights Massport on this issue. Volunteers and lots of money are needed immediately to pay legal fees and to keep pressure on Massport. Budget constraints this year will make it hard for towns to help. Strong personal pressure is needed to get help from the Romney Administration.

TOM HENSHAW

I see where folks in the American Library Association have their noses out of joint over the USA Patriot Act, which was passed by Congress to protect us when the hordes of Iraqis and other Arabs come storming ashore on our beaches.

The section of the act that upsets them the most is the one that gives the FBI permission to check and see who's taking out books on how to make a bomb or who's downloading computer files instructing them how to fly a Boeing 707.

"Some of this stuff is pretty scary and we are very concerned that people's privacy is being violated," said Maurice J. Freedman, president of the ALA. "What's next, installing cameras in libraries so we can see what books people are reading?"

I'm certainly glad there weren't any cameras around when I started using libraries. Once I had passed through the Teletubbies stage, I whiled away the time by looking up dirty words in Websters' Unabridged Dictionary. I'm sure that the FBI wouldn't be interested in that but I'm equally sure that someone would.

I'm certainly glad there weren't any cameras around when I started using libraries.

After all, wasn't someone interested enough in the televiewing habits of future Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas to check the tapes he rented from the local video store? And weren't they titillated and aghast to discover one of them was entitled "Long Dong Silver?'

In spite of his viewing habits, Thomas was confirmed as a justice. But what is the FBI going to do when someone named Mohammed is detected reading "Jane's Modern Weapons" open to the page dealing with nuclear powered ballistic missiles and how to pass them off as farm implements when the inspectors from the UN come to call?

Or a guy named Abdul, whose last known address was a cave in the Bora Bora Hills of Afghanistan, is caught downloading a schematic plan of the city of Washington, with special concentration on the White House grounds, on the library computer?

FBI Director Robert S. Mueller III denies that his agency will use its newly granted surveillance powers to investigate anybody but "agents of a foreign power" and will not be used for fishing expeditions.

Didn't they explain to agent John Connolly and his friends in the Boston FBI office that they were sworn to serve the American public and not the Winter Hill crime family? How long did the judge say that Connolly had to stay in jail?

The librarians had better . . .

Oops, the Super Bowl is on. Where do the FBI and terrorism and Iraq stand with the American public when the competition is the Super Bawl.

See ya next week, folks!

Democrats to hold caucus in Cohasset

A caucus will be held for all registered Democrats in Cohasset at Town Hall on Saturday, Feb. 8 at 10 a.m. to elect five delegates and five alternates to the 2003 Massachusetts Democratic Convention. In each case, two male, two female and one either will be elected.

The Convention will be held on Saturday, June 7 at the Paul E. Tsongas Arena in Lowell. The caucus is open to all registered Democrats in Cohasset.

Candidates for delegate and alternate must consent to nomination in writing.

All candidates may make a two-minute statement and may distribute materials on their behalf. All ballots will be written and secret. Those not elected as delegate and alternate, who meet the qualifications, may apply to be add-on delegates in the following categories: youth, minority and disabled.

Discrimination on the basis of sex, age, color, creed, national origin, religion, ethnic identity, sexual orientation or economic status in the conduct of the caucus is strictly prohibited. Challenges to the delegate selection process can be filed with the Massachusetts Democratic Party, 10 Granite St Quincy MA 02169 not later than 10 days after the caucus date.

What's New

"Land's End" by Michael Cunningham (New Nonfiction: 917.44 / CUN)

Cunningham, Pulitzer Prize winning author of "The Hours," first came to Provincetown more than 20 years ago and promptly fell in love with its beauty and charm. This is his very personal celebration of one of the most idiosyncratic and extraordinary towns in America — "the Morocco of North America, the New Orleans of the north."

"Chasing Tiger" by Curt Sampson (New Nonfiction: 796.352 / Sampson)

The author of six books on golf, Curt Sampson understands the game and the impact Tiger Woods has had on it — but what about the other guys? In Chasing Tiger, Sampson charts the state of golf as the new century unfolds and takes a look at its rising stars.

"The Genealogy Handbook" by Ellen Galford (New Nonfiction: 929/Galford)

Ever want to track the adventures of your ancestors and discover long-lost relatives? This is the book to get you started - a comprehensive guide that provides the tools for both traditional and contemporary research methods as well as "expert advice on how to use the internet to further your research on-line.

"In the Devil's Snare" by Mary Beth Norton (New Nonfiction: 133.4/Norton)

The Salem Witchcraft crisis of 1692 is one of the most perennially fascinating and horrifying events in our history. In this thorough, meticulously researched account, historian Norton gives us as clear a picture of what happened during that brutal winter as we are ever likely to have.

"Divided Loyalties" by Richard M. Ketchum (New Nonfiction: 974.7/Ketchum)

Subtitled "How the American Revolution Came to New York," Ketchum's new book (he has authored four others on the Revolution) focuses on the many ways the conflict tore apart this already deeply-divided city. At the center of the narrative are two families, the Livingstons and the Delanceys, whose divided loyalties reveal how individuals with similar life experiences chose different sides as the war erupted.

Hedlund hopeful dire fiscal climate will force real reform

Also looks to 40B changes

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

State Sen. Bob Hedlund has been around long enough to understand the workings on Beacon Hill. Although throughout his six terms there's always been a fellow Republican in the governor's office, more often than not, it has been "politics as usual" at the Statehouse.

But the Weymouth resident — who was first elected to represent the Plymouth-Norfolk District during the last recession in 1990 — says the current budget crisis this time around is of such proportions that it would spark real reform.

"I'm hopeful that the silver lining is we could see some meaningful reforms," Hedlund says. "The Democratic leadership has resisted numerous reforms since I've been in office.

"Now they may finally go along," he says.

Case in point should be the consolidation of oftentimes overlapping state agencies, which have separate, administration, staff and equipment.

"If we don't do those things and cut human services again, the people won't take us seriously," Hedlund says.

First on the list should be the consolidation of the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) and the Department of Environmental Management (DEM). For example, the MDC oversees Abigail Adams Park and the DEM, has jurisdiction over Webb Memorial Park, which are both off Rte. 3A in Weymouth near the Hingham line.

"My district is the poster child for that case to be made," Hedlund says. "In Weymouth there are two parks side by side run by different agencies." To make the point at the state level, Hedlund has filed a bill to transfer management and oversight functions of Abigail Adams Park, Nantasket Beach and the facilities at Fort Revere in Hull and Stodder's Neck in Hingham from the MDC to the DEM, effective July 1.

Savings could also be realized by combining MassHighway and the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority; and restructuring within human services such as consolidating the administration of the Department of Mental Health and Department of Mental Retardation, Hedlund says.

With deficit projections of as much as $3 billion in fiscal year 2004, which starts July 1, the state budget is going to continue to make headlines.

"The budget will be unlike any time in the last 10 years," Hedlund says. "Anything we do will be with an eye to the bottom line."

That being said, however, there are still other issues – lots of them. Hedlund points to the record number of bills that reached the governor's desk last year, and expectations are that number will increase by the end of this legislative session.

Residents in Hedlund's district that spans from Weymouth to Duxbury, can expect reforms to "40B" – the state's affordable housing law – to be back on the Statehouse agenda.

The senator, who is the lead sponsor on three bills that affect "40B", is optimistic changes to the 30-year-old law will be enacted this year. The bills that Hedlund filed in the senate include placing a moratorium on the approval of comprehensive permits [which allow developers to skirt most local zoning regulations in exchange for providing affordable housing] until the legislature passes a reform bill; providing local zoning appeals boards with more authority over comprehensive permits; and having the affordable units developed under 40B remain affordable in perpetuity. The nature of the issue is so contentious in the various senatorial districts, that Hedlund sees a real potential for progress on 40B reform..

Hedlund, who is the lead sponsor on about 30 bills and co-sponsor on dozens of others, sits on the senate committees on post audit & oversight, and steering & policy. He also sits on several joint committees, including transportation (where he continues to be the ranking minority member), criminal justice, banks & banking, and counties & insurance.

On the healthcare front, Hedlund is sponsoring a bill that would deregulate certain MRIs [magnetic resonance imagers] from the Department of Public Health's "determination of need process." The new legislation would allow orthopedists and smaller clinics to purchase smaller imagers that cost less than $450,000 and are used for knees, ankles, shoulders, arms, and so on. Under current state law, only hospitals or companies holding certain documentation can offer MRI services through a process called "determination of need." Therefore, MRI operators currently have what amounts to a monopoly on these services, he said. Hedlund said the bill has the support of orthopedic surgeons and doctors.

Hedlund has also filed a bill, which would increase the cap on fines for permit violations to $5,000 per violation per day, and the maximum civil penalty to $1 million, that the Department of Telecommunications and Energy (DTE) Siting Board can levy against companies that violate the terms of their construction permits. The bill also broadens the DTE's power to revoke those permits. This bill is in response to work at the Sithe power plant site on the Fore River where round-the-clock construction seven days a week caused an outcry among residents in North Weymouth.

Hedlund has also filed a bill in the senate directed at curbing delays in School Building Assistance Bureau funding that state representatives Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, and Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, are the lead sponsors of in the House. The bill would move SBAB funding from the state's operating budget, which has no wiggle room, to the state's capital spending account where there is some room under the state's bonding cap. In the Plymouth-Norfolk District the towns of Cohasset, Norwell, Duxbury and Scituate are currently being adversely affected by delays in state reimbursement for school building projects.

"This is a problem I face as a legislator representing towns whose projects are far down the [reimbursement] list," Hedlund says. In Cohasset, for example, delays in school building reimbursement could add as much as $800 a year to the average tax bill, until the state payments kick in.

Hedlund has also filed a constitutional amendment that would eliminate the automatic pay raises legislators are guaranteed in the state constitution. The issue recently raised a ruckus when legislators stood to receive 6-1/2 percent pay raises while cutting human services to balance the budget. A majority of legislators, including Hedlund, declined the pay hikes.

As assistant minority whip and one of only six Republicans in that chamber, Hedlund is part of a group that meets weekly with newly elected Gov. Mitt Romney, also a Republican.

Despite embarking on his fifth consecutive term (sixth overall), the 41-year-old Hingham native says he has been more energized since having assumed a leadership position at the start of his last term.

"That gives me a seat at the table weekly with the governor and has made the job more exciting and more challenging," he says.

Hedlund describes Romney as likeable, relaxed and having a quick wit.

"He's not as straight-laced and businesslike as people think," he says.

Fiscal crisis forces a new cooperative era on Beacon Hill

STAEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL P. NORTON

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Casual comments and mundane occurrences are often telling.

For several years, discord between the House and Senate overwhelmed issues large and small, from state budgets being five months late in two different years to legislative leaders playing petty games to tweak the other branch. The era of the Two Toms — House Speaker Finneran and Senate President Birmingham — goes down as a tense one.

"You're not going to see that now," new Senate Ways and Means Chairwoman Therese Murray, D-Plymouth, told the News Service, promising to break the grip of inter-branch rivalry and backbiting.

Others signs of a new cooperative era, forced entirely by the state's fiscal crisis, are popping up like spring flowers.

During a rules debate last week, House Majority Leader Salvatore DiMasi, D-Boston, announced the House and Senate have agreed to stop doing something many people might consider childish. For years, unbeknownst to most taxpayers, the branches were burying new legislative proposals for one pretty arbitrary reason — the lack of an official sponsor in each branch. To legislators, little things — like getting their bills heard — mean a lot sometimes. Also, Democratic legislative leaders joined Republican Gov. Mitt Romney's budget point person, Eric Kriss, to announce they plan to do something that most household managers consider a basic necessity — agree on how much money they have to spend. Republicans and Democrats in recent years have been unable to do so. The result has been lots of finger pointing and accusations and less leadership than the public would like.

Murray and House budget chief John Rogers, D-Norwood, said they'd work with Kriss to reach consensus on a revenue number by early February. If they can, that will diminish the likelihood that the traditional circular catcalling over phony numbers will once again dominate this spring's critical budget debate and deliberations. That's still a big if.

Other early signs of cooperation probably made the freezing week even more insufferable for diehard partisans.

Romney spent the week meeting with aides, seeking to nail down a plan to unilaterally slash state spending by up to $600 million. How can he do that? He's governor, not king, right? Well, the Democrat-controlled Legislature, in its first big move of the new session, handed him the authority just days after he asked for it. More accommodation.

The Senate, under new President Robert Travaglini, D-East Boston, voted on the bill the day after it passed the House. It's hard to imagine that happening under former Senate President and Democratic gubernatorial candidate Thomas Birmingham. Legislators want Romney to make the cuts they don't want to make. Sometimes a budget crisis can make you do the strangest things.

And the House was quick to appease new Senate Majority Leader Frederick Berry, D-Peabody. The Senate approved a bill to help new Essex County District Attorney Jonathan Blodgett overcome a fiscal crisis in his office. The bill would allow him to pay $201,000 in accrued sick leave and vacation benefits to five employees over three years, rather than immediately. The House advanced the bill, even though the Legislature has not yet established committees to review bills. It's the type of bill that would have languished in recent years.

The big question is how long will the cooperation and compromise last. The answer will determine whether the state will honestly and quickly solve its fiscal problems or whether business as usual will return. The first signs of conflict between the Legislature and Romney emerged when lawmakers suggested new tax hikes are under consideration as well as changes to the voter-approved ballot question abolishing bilingual education.

• Legislators desperate for a dose of positive economic news didn't get any last week. Economists trying to help lawmakers determine how much tax revenue the state can expect to collect in the next fiscal year said the slow economic times are here to stay. A miniscule level of growth was the best-case scenario and even that came with a host of caveats, not least the uncertain economic impact of war with Iraq. The information prompted House budget chief John Rogers to raise the specter of new tax hikes, which many on Beacon Hill have ruled out. Rogers believes there are no signs of an economic rebound and budget imbalances are worse than stated by most.

• The most interesting part of the Senate rules debate came when Minority Leader Brian Lees explained why so many Democrats were unhappy under Senate President Thomas Birmingham. Lees said senators were frequently unaware of the details of major policy proposals that often popped out of the Senate Ways and Means Committee without warning. And the Republican from Longmeadow said he was shocked that new Senate President Robert Travaglini, after promising to make committee chairmen more relevant, would push a rules change to allow another new committee, Long-Term Debt and Capital Expenditures, to also initiate bills. Travaglini deputies, like Birmingham's, promised that committee chairmen would also be consulted on key matters.

• Calling childhood obesity a dangerous and expensive problem, advocates described initiatives aimed at educating children and their parents to the threats posed by overeating, poor nutrition, and lack of exercise. "Obesity is indeed a crisis," said Dr. Gerald Hass, who is the physician-in-chief at the South End Community Health Center, a professor of pediatrics at Harvard Medical School, and a senior associate in medicine at Children's Hospital. "We need to wage a campaign like the anti-smoking efforts, if we really believe that healthy futures belong to our children." Obesity-related health care costs approach $117 billion a year. The condition is often related to other chronic diseases such as type 2 diabetes, cardiovascular disease, and certain types of cancer and arthritis.

• Massport attorneys claimed in court that air travel will rebound strongly in the wake of September 11, 2001 and there's still a pressing need for a new runway at Logan Airport to reduce storied delays. Opponents of the push to lift a longstanding injunction banning the runway said the demand is not as strong as it was and argued that regional airports and peak pricing strategies can reduce congestion. The trial is expected to run for two weeks. Suffolk County Superior Court Judge Margot Botsford is presiding.

• Darrell Crate is the next great hope to tackle a critical task that has overmatched a string of Republican Party chairmen: recruiting candidates to run for public office. Republicans have a lock on the Corner Office but don't hold any of the four major constitutional offices and possess 23 seats in the 160-member House and six in the 40-member Senate. In other words, Gov. Mitt Romney doesn't have much help. Crate, of Beverly, is chief financial officer of Affiliated Managers Group and served as finance chairman for former party chairwoman and now Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey. Crate quickly used a suggestion by House budget chief John Rogers, D-Norwood, regarding his personal support for higher taxes to claim that "once again, Tom Finneran and his allies are beating the drums for more tax hikes." Rogers had also said that there's no appetite for new taxes among most of his colleagues.

• Once hailed by public health advocates as the best in the nation, Massachusetts has fallen to 38th in the United States at funding programs that discourage smoking, according to a report released by health organizations. Tobacco prevention funds have been slashed from $48 million a year to $4.8 million, despite a major increase in the cigarette tax. Massachusetts now spends 14 percent of the minimum amount that the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recommends for state spending on tobacco prevention.

• As the deep freeze continued, homeless shelter monitors reported the highest monthly demand since January 1992. The Massachusetts Housing and Shelter Alliance said demand across Massachusetts for the first two weeks of January – before the cold snap took hold - was at 126 percent of shelter capacity.

• With hundreds of millions of dollars worth of disputed Big Dig contract claims still pending, the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority announced retired judge Edward Ginsburg will lead a comprehensive review designed to recover costs on past and present contracts. Ginsburg will work in consultation with Inspector General Gregory Sullivan, external engineers and the turnpike's legal team. At the end of their review, officials at the turnpike and inspector general's office will consult with Attorney General Thomas Reilly.

Jet noise impact questioned looking into setting up their own independent noise study.

The information could potentially be used against Massport to prove Cohasset and the rest of the South Shore are unfairly bearing the brunt of plane routes to and from Logan Airport.

"Obviously people are being unfair here," Selectman Michael Sullivan said to Dormitzer. "Isn't that person that keeps calling you just a little embarrassed by this? It just seems so obvious."

Dormitzer said recent attempts to reduce the number of flights over Cohasset have failed. In the past three years, flights have actually flown over the South Shore more and more, whereas before the patterns were spread out and shared with Boston and the North Shore.

"They literally have moved flights specifically over Cohasset," he said, adding that several officials in the control tower seemed to be behind the changes.

Dormitzer also reported that an FAA-funded study by the Mitre Corporation found that delays at Logan Airport had been exaggerated by as much as 10 times. Originally suppressed, the information was obtained through the Freedom of Information Act, but it was unclear if it would be admissible in the current Suffolk County trial where Massport is attempting to lift an injunction that prevents the addition of new runways at Logan.

Dormitzer said the information could call into question the credibility of an entire environmental impact report that supported the necessity of a new runway. He also said that as part of the mitigation for supporting the new runway, the FAA planned to conduct a noise study to determine whether flight routes at Logan could be better organized.

"It's a positive sign that at least something may happen from all of this," he said.

Schools may start charging for recreational use

Fees would affect profitable programs and adult activities

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Before any talk of the school budget had even surfaced at last Thursday's School Committee meeting, it was clear to all who attended that every cent would count in fiscal year 2004.

That's because the budget discussion was preceded by an hour-long debate over who should shoulder the costs of utilities and upkeep when school facilities are used for outside recreational activities.

Usually, those costs are covered by the school budget. In the future, they could be paid for by user fees.

The School Committee is considering aiming the fees at profit-oriented programs like sports camps and perhaps even adult activities such as men's basketball groups. The committee agreed that non-profit programs for students would not be subject to the fees.

The committee discussed the matter with Recreation Department Director Jack Worley and members of the Recreation Commission.

Worley explained the Recreation Department charges a 10 percent gross revenue fee to groups and individuals contracted to run recreational programs. That fee will increase to 15 percent this year because the town is asking the Recreation Department in fiscal year 2004 to pay back 75 percent of its $121,000 budget, which has been sliced $10,000 due to state cuts in local aid.

The School Committee seemed to agree that in cases where school facilities are used to run recreational programs for a profit, some of the revenue should come back to the schools to pay for utilities and maintenance. Members of the committee suggested taxing the programs for up to 5 percent of their revenue.

Worley said the additional fee would only result in higher prices for those who attend the programs. "It's a user fee. The parents of the children using the programs will have to pay more," he said.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo argued that if the users didn't pay, then any utility and maintenance costs incurred by the programs would be shared by taxpayers town-wide because the school budget would have to pay for them. "If we don't charge (the users), then everybody's paying," said DeGiacomo.

Worley said the fee may actually decrease the amount of money the Recreation Department receives from the programs. "At some point, it's going to have an effect on how many kids sign up if you increase the fee," he said.

Last year, the Recreation Department returned about 50 percent of its budget to the town's general fund. Because the department is being asked to pay back 75 percent of its budget in fiscal year 2004, it is doubling fees for the Summer Playground Program and probably increasing fees for the Youth Tennis Program. That's on top of increasing the gross revenue fee for other programs from 10 to 15 percent.

"We don't want to put you out of business. A lot of your customers are our kids. What we're trying to do is protect our investment."
— School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn

"We basically have gone from being a town-budget supported program to being asked to be self sufficient," said Lillian Murray Curley of the Recreation Commission.

School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn was sympathetic to the Recreation Commission's cause. "We don't want to put you out of business. A lot of your customers are our kids. What we're trying to do is protect our investment," he said.

Committee member Pat Martin said money was the main issue. "We're tight (in terms of our budget) too," she said. "It's not just protecting an investment. It's looking at who's paying the costs. Because ultimately some of those costs are going to be paid by the school budget at the end of the year."

Like the Recreation Commission, the School Committee is feeling the press of budget cuts. Town Manager Mark Haddad has asked the committee to live with a 4 percent increase in the school budget this year, down from the 6 percent annual increase which was originally anticipated.

Profitable programs contracted by the Recreation Department aren't the only ones who may be hit with a fee. Adult activities like men's basketball groups may also be charged for their use of school facilities.

Worley said if the School Committee decided to go through with the fees, the Recreation Department may be forced to reconsider allowing the schools to use the fields and facilities under its jurisdiction for free.

One issue the School Committee wants to examine is how much the schools incur in utility and maintenance costs as a result of hosting recreational activities. Flynn said he would meet with Worley to discuss the fees in greater depth before any final decisions are made.

School budget is a balancing act last year, and the cost is expected to increase due to the two school building projects.

Malvey said other district-wide additions to the school budget for fiscal year 2004 come from salaries, a $420,000 increase, and from special education costs, a $206,000 increase.

Schools may also be asked to account for more than half of an expected 5 percent cut in local aid for the remainder of the current fiscal year, Malvey said. As a result, Malvey has frozen any further spending on supplies this school year.

Members of the School Committee stressed that maintaining the current level of education was their top priority in deciding what should be cut.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo provided the following overview of how the committee could begin to balance the budget for fiscal year 2004:

- A position vacated by a retirement at the Osgood School would not be filled, and three retiring teachers at the Middle-High School would be replaced by teachers at starting salary. The two moves would save the schools about $170,000.
- A state-mandated pest management plan would essentially be ignored, saving $18,000.
- Two part-time health positions previously funded by a federal grant that was cut two years ago would be dropped, saving $32,000.
- An adjustment counselor at the Middle-High School would be laid off, with the position's duties absorbed by guidance councilors, saving $60,000.
- A special education teacher would be reduced to a special education aide, saving $32,000.
- A 10 percent district-wide reduction in supplies would free up about $25,000 for the hiring of a special education clerk, a position suggested by the state because of an apparent "paper logjam" in the town's special education program.

With the proposed budget balanced, members of the School Committee began debating any issues they saw with it.

Committee member Patricia Martin opposed the idea of eliminating an adjustment counselor. Middle-High School principal Michael Jones said he proposed the reduction reluctantly, but anticipated the need for hiring an additional counselor in a few years.

Committee Member Jane Pescatore suggested the need for an additional math teacher at the High School. She said enrollment will increase by 10 percent next year, possibly bringing the size of math classes in the ninth and tenth grades to more than 30 students.

No one disagreed with the need for the additional teacher, but finding an area where cuts could be made to pay for the position proved difficult. Eliminating the reading program or cutting the athletics program at the Middle School were suggested, as was cutting a teacher at Deer Hill School, but none of the proposals received overwhelming support.

Charging a fee for busing was also considered, but the School Committee opposed the idea. Committee member DeGiacomo said he didn't think anything that would add fees was a good solution. "At what point do you draw the line and say, 'Listen, these are public schools'?," he asked. "$50 for that thing, $70 for that thing. Where does it end?"

Committee Chairman Rick Flynn said that 80 percent of the proposed budget paid for personnel. "When I sit here and I look at everything that we could possibly cut, I don't see a lot of fat," he said.

Flynn said the approval of the $485,000 general override would be crucial to preventing any additional, devastating cuts. "The bottom line is that if the override doesn't pass, we're going to be back here in April and we're going to have to do some serious math," he said.

The committee agreed to discuss the budget further at its next meeting, Thursday, Jan. 30 at 7 p.m. in the High School Library. Flynn said that possible cuts for the current fiscal year would be discussed if by then the state had released the final amount of local aid it will withhold.

Peace forum raises questions about possible war with Iraq

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

The South Shore Peace Forum has been spreading its message of peace since the 1991 Gulf War.

Now, with the prospect of an attack on Iraq, the group is stepping up its efforts to encourage peaceful solutions instead of war as well as provide an opportunity for individuals to share their thoughts about the potential conflict.

"Talk to your neighbors! Let them know you think peace is possible," is the message delivered by Forum members.

At last week's Forum-sponsored event at the library, Jack Hajj of Hingham questioned the rationale for a war with Iraq: "One question to ask of anybody who talks about war is, What did Iraq do to the United States to justify war? Where's the Pearl Harbor? The United States is going after the oil."

The Whiton Room at the Hingham Public Library was packed last week for the first in a series of films and talks on the prospect of war sponsored by the Peace Forum.

The Whiton Room at the Hingham Public Library was packed last week for the first in a series of films and talks on the prospect of war sponsored by the Peace Forum. It started with the film, "Hidden Wars of Desert Storm," which provided an in-depth analysis of the history of United States-Iraq-Iran relations before and after the Gulf War and included interviews with Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, Ramsey Clark, Scott Ritter, and others. Ritter served as chief of the United Nations Arms Inspection Team from 1991-1998.

Forum member Mary Thomas noted that the film represented different points of view, ranging from those of a Gulf War veterans' advocate and a French journalist to "mothers and children suffering from the effects of war."

The film combined a view of the history of the United States' off and on relationship with Saddam Hussein unfamiliar to many. It also depicted the resulting human tragedy following the destruction of the country's water, sewer, and other infrastructure. Also shown were the impacts on many veterans and civilians in war-torn areas and the continuing effects of depleted uranium shells and shortages of food and medicine due to post-Gulf War sanctions.

Korean War Veteran Peter Flynn of Braintree voiced criticism of the film.

"Why should we consider this anything but slick propaganda?" he asked. "I don't think many of the things in the film would hold up under close scrutiny."

His opinion was challenged by a woman who said she has seen "photos of the atrocities of war" firsthand.

"How dare you say it's a lie?" she asked.

Nonetheless, Flynn has some reservations, not about a potential war, but about considering the aftermath considering the complex political situation in Iraq.

"I have no doubt we could win a war in six days," Flynn said, "but (it would be difficult to) juggle all the religious factions in the country."

Old Ship Church Minister Kenneth Read-Brown led a lively discussion following the film. Concerns that war is imminent were mixed with hope that it can be averted.

"It's important to hear all points of view," he said, "in order to confirm our opinion or transform it because someone offers an argument that changes our mind."

Many were concerned about the prospect of war.

A small group of concerned Cohasset citizens conduct a peace vigil on the Town Common on Monday night.

"The President is bound and determined to have a war – how can we stop him?" asked one concerned citizen. "We need a candidate to run on an anti-war platform."

One gentleman said it's important to think outside the box. "I always questioned things in my history class. I think our forefathers would roll over in their graves if we gave up our ability to think," he said. "The press and Wall Street are talking like this is inevitable. But there's a question – all of Europe is saying, 'What the hell are you doing?' If one neighbor doesn't respond to other neighbors on this planet, we have a challenge."

Read-Brown noted that meetings such as the ones sponsored by the Peace Forum are a way of reaching out.

"Not even the experts know everything and we certainly don't," he told the Hingham Journal following the meeting. "Democracy is about conversation and debate about the most important issues we face. Our founding fathers' viewpoint was that out of such debate, we might come to better decisions."

Read-Brown suggested citizens contact their senators and congressmen.

"They need to know what people are thinking, whatever their views," he said.

Peace Forum member Laura Burns encouraged those who are against a war with Iraq to participate in upcoming peace events, either locally or nationally.

"Talk to your neighbors," she said. "The anti-war movement is growing at an international level. There sure is a range of opinions in this room, but we are all called upon to hold discussions and inform our government."

Some thought signing anti-war petitions was a good way to render an opinion while others suggested calling morning talk radio stations.

"We need to continue standing up for what we believe strongly in," said Read-Brown.

One gentleman was angered at what he sees as television stations "touting the upcoming war as if it were the Superbowl. It's frightening beyond belief."

Not everyone thinks war is inevitable.

"I, like some others, am also optimistic about the way things are going," said Shirley Brown, co-founder of the South Shore Peace Forum. "I think people working for peace all over the world are making a difference."

Despite some heated discussion, a sense of peace prevailed as people of differing viewpoints chatted informally after the meeting in an effort to understand each other better.

The South Shore Peace Forum has a long history. When talk about a possible Gulf War broke out in 1990, Hingham residents Katharine Sangree and Shirley Brown formed the group, which was active throughout that conflict.

"We had quite a following," Brown recalls. "We hosted several forums and held vigils, one at Hingham Rotary. Then things got better and there wasn't any reason for us to continue – until the present talk about a war with Iraq."

Group reactivated

The group was reactivated last March and has been holding weekly peace vigils in front of the North Street Post Office Tuesdays from 11:30 a.m. to noon.

An honorarium Brown recently received when she talked about the South Shore Peace Forum as guest worship leader at All Soul's Church in Braintree, "really got us going again," she said, providing funds to rent films and pay other expenses, including informational flyers about the group's activities.

Members of the Forum were pleased at the overflow turnout for their first event.

"This was a real community meeting, with both young and older people attending," Thomas said. "People are starved to talk to each other – one's neighbors and other interested parties – about these issues."

Further opportunities for discussion are planned. The second program, co-sponsored by Old Ship Church, will be held at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 4, in the Parish House of Old Ship, 107 Main St. Guest speaker The Rev. John Beuhrens, former president of the Unitarian Universalist Association and a member of an interfaith delegation's Christmas-time trip to Iraq, will talk about his experiences there. A question and answer period will follow his talk.

The final program, scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 18, at 7 p.m. in the Whiton Room of the library, will feature two films, "Domestic Blowback: The Domestic Impacts of the Bush Administration's War," and "Steps to Peace: The Journey of September Eleventh Families for Peaceful Tomorrows."

Fit to be tied

Dramatic comeback effort pushed CHS grapplers into tie with Wayland

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High wrestling team has an 11-3-1 record. Can you guess the number the Skippers like best? You guessed it, the one.

Of course it's the one. The 11 is for wins and the three is for losses, but the one, the one is for a tie. Not just any old tie, it was a tie against Wayland High, 32-32, a team Cohasset has never tied or defeated before.

"We are extremely pleased with the results of the event," said Cohasset wrestling coach Torin Sweeney. "We have never beaten a Wayland team. Now we have the tie, and next year we're looking for the win."

Sounds like fighting words and, well, they should be, after the fantastic fight the Skippers put on to battle back for the tie.

Before we return to exciting event number one, it has to be noted Cohasset had an earlier wrestling event against Whitman-Hanson, defeating the Panthers, 48-12.

With an overall record of 11-3-1, and a South Shore League record of 2-0, Cohasset is looking to win the SSL championship Wednesday night against Carver. Cohasset is the defending champion, defeating Rockland for the crown last year. The Skippers also won the title in 1999.

Back to the exciting Wayland meet, and it was indeed exciting, Cohasset was down by nine points with two matches to go.

Matt Casey (152 pounds) closed the gap with a win. Chris McKenna (160 pounds) then

Indians sack gymnasts title hopes

Cohasset-Norwell squad falls for second time to Hanover

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Winning the league title is one thing. Defending it is something else.

After taking the South Shore League crown last year on the strength of one of the best gymnastics teams Cohasset has ever had, Hanover showed the Cohasset/Norwell joint team how difficult the repeat can be. The Lady Indians ousted their hosts this past Saturday at Cohasset's Community Center by a score of 131.5-128.6.

Hanover has emerged as the strongest team on the South Shore, having handed Coh-Nor their only two league losses this season. Led by senior Kerry-Ann Hart, who won the All-Around competition, the Lady Indians appear to have locked up the SSL title for 2003.

A level 10 gymnast (the highest level a USA gymnast can attain), Hart won the all-around competition, featuring an impressive 8.7 score on the bars.

"They always have gymnasts that are very talented," said senior captain Meredith Bixby, who noted an improvement in her team from the first time the Clipper-Skippers faced Hanover. "I think we were less nervous. The atmosphere was more upbeat. I thought we were more prepared."

Bixby, of Cohasset, took second All-Around in the meet, with a score of 33.7. She placed second in all four events behind Hart, scoring 8.5 on the beam, while recording an 8.4 on the bars, floor and vault.

Senior Katherine Coyne put in an impressive showing, taking third place in the beam, with a score of 8.1. The Coh-Nor side also received big help from young team members Nancy Durkin (Cohasset sophomore) and Jen Guiney (Norwell sophomore), who put in a gutsy showing despite a nagging back injury.

"They help us out a lot," mentioned Bixby of the underclass talent abundant on the squad.

Rising to the challenge

Cohasset skaters respond to 'call out' from coach

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There are nothing but firsts for Cohasset High's rookie head hockey coach John Blake these days. Some he'll remember, most he'll probably forget. The first time he "called his players out," though: that will likely fall in the former category – thanks in large part to the way his team responded.

After a listless opening period, this past Saturday afternoon at Hingham's Pilgrim Arena, that found his Skippers trailing 1-0 at the break to a struggling Hanover team (3-9), the 29-year old coach trailed his players into the locker room and, mincing no words, flat out challenged them to play harder and better.

"I challenged them all to step up, but our leaders in particular," reported the coach following the game. "I didn't think our intensity was where it needed to be the last two or three games, and I told them that. I was hoping to get them fired up and maybe a little mad, and I guess it worked."

Indeed.

Each one of the Skippers three captains – seniors Tom Anderson, John Durkin and Matt Davis — scored in second period. In fact, these were the only three goals of the middle frame. And Davis set up another tally less than a minute into the third, digging a puck out from along the left boards and delivering a beautiful centering feed to linemate Mark Bouchard, who quickly one-timed it by the Hanover netminder to make it 4-1, essentially icing the game.

Anderson — the 6-foot-1, 205 pound defenseman – set the tone early in the second, putting a purposeful shoulder into virtually anyone wearing a white shirt that came anywhere near the Cohasset's net, firing up his teammates and hometown fans alike.

"Tom got us going, no doubt about that," said Blake. "There's nothing wrong with physical

An uplifting loss

Cohasset boys give powerhouse Norwell all it can handle

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

One coach's glee is usually another coach's discontent. Friday's South Shore League boys hoop showdown between Norwell and Cohasset followed the rule rather than the exception, but with one interesting twist.

The gleeful coach was the one sitting on the losing bench.

"I'm extremely pleased with the character our team showed tonight," said Cohasset coach Ron Ford, following the 68-49 loss for his team on Norwell's home turf. That's right: we said LOSS.

"Other than the first six minutes or so of the game, where I thought we were a little intimidated, we stayed right with Norwell, and that's something we can be proud of, and something to build on," Ford continued.

The fact that Ford, whose team fell to 3-10 with the loss, could sound so delighted after his team lost going away by 18 is, of course, a testament to just how good a team Norwell (11-0) is.

"In all of my years of coaching I've never seen a team so dominant in this league," said the 11th year CHS head coach. "I've had some very good teams, Norwell has had some very good teams and so have a few of the other schools, but I've never seen anything like this. (Norwell) is blowing people out by 30 points just about anytime they want. They're just so talented. They're scary good."

And Norwell coach John Willis' expressed consternation following the game is another testament to that level of dominance.

"I honestly wasn't happy with any part of our game tonight," said Willis. "We didn't run well, we didn't react well, and we only pressed well only in spots. There were too many letdowns by the press. If Cohasset had hit a few more shots down the stretch, we could have been in big trouble. That's the thing I've got to make these kids understand. We can't afford letdowns like that."

Of course, they are just kids

With his eight points in the last two games (five goals, three assists), Cohasset senior captain John Durkin moved into first place in the SSL scoring race. The gifted centerman now has 32 points on the season (20 goals, 12 assists).

— kids who've now outscored their opponents on average this season by nearly 25 points per game (73.3-48.9). The Clippers were also coming off two big emotional wins: the first way down on the cape over Harwich, their alleged main competition for the SSL crown, 69-57, and the second, on Wednesday, over perennial state Div. 4 contender North Cambridge Catholic, 78-57. Neither game was as close as the score might indicate, and Willis acknowledged Friday's "klunker" was not entirely a surprise.

"When you're on a roll like we've been, nights like this aren't necessarily unexpected," the veteran coach conceded. "But I need these kids to look at the second half of the season now as a challenge. A lot of teams could make their season now by beating us, or getting revenge against us. Cohasset nearly got their revenge tonight. We're a good team, but no so good that we can just put it on auto pilot and win."

Which, he intimated, is precisely what he felt happened after the aforementioned six minute opening Friday night, a stretch that saw the host Clippers jump out to quick 18-3 edge, with Craig Sutherland scoring six and league leading scorer Gerry Corcoran seven.

The Norwell bulge reached 24, at 35-11, with three minutes left in the half, but the feisty Skippers closed with an 11-4 run, with Chris Bilodeau (16 points), Ian Kidder (11) and Sean Connolly scoring the last six points before the break to send Cohasset into the locker room on an emotional high.

A relentless man-to-man defense allowed the Skippers to go virtually point-for-point with the high powered Clippers in the second half, the home team's lead never topping 20 points the remainder of the way.

"You obviously can't play a zone against (Norwell), because they just have too many great scorers and passers," said Ford. "But our guys dug deep and played some great man-to-man defense in the second half."

Cohasset senior captains Kidder and Jared Krupczak (nine points) each hit a pair of big 3-pointers that helped keep the game close, and Bilodeau kept finding ways inside the Norwell defense to either finish or draw fouls.

Cohasset junior center Sean Connolly (#4) looks to drive baseline in recent South Shore League showdown with Abington.

In the end for the Skippers, though , there was simply too much John Mohan (game high 20 points), Corcoran (17 points), Sutherland (12 points, 14 rebounds), Joe Doyle (eight points) and Marc Bowman (10 blocks, 13 boards, six points).

"That might be the best starting five this league has ever seen," concluded Ford. "But our guys made them work for everything they got tonight, that's for sure. We can build on this one."

Hoop notes

Alas, it appears whatever the Skippers may be building will go more toward the 2003-'04 campaign than the current one. The next loss will be number 11 for the Skippers, and will officially eliminate them from the postseason hunt. With the remaining slate including rematches with Abington and Harwich, teams the Skippers lost to in lopsided fashion the first time around, the likelihood of a late run appears pretty remote.

The Skippers will return starters Bilodeau and Connolly for their senior years next winter, along with current varsity reserves John Andrade, Dan Tarpey and D.J. Silvia. Lost to the caps and gowns will be senior tri-captains Krupczak, Kidder and Ben Lynner, as well as Scott Faber and Ross Lieb-Lappen.

One loss that hurt deeply was Thursday's 70-68 loss at home to Cape Cod Tech, a spirited Cohasset comeback going for naught when Justin Sullivan hit a last second basket for the visiting Crusaders.

Cohasset's next scheduled game is this coming Tuesday's rematch with Abington on the road (6:30 p.m. start).

The boys did keep their slim hopes for this season alive, though, with a 57-36 win at home Tuesday night over SSL rival Mashpee.

The Skippers jumped out quick in their own gym, taking a 15-point lead into the halftime break, 34-19, and they were never seriously threatened after the break.

Bilodeau poured in a game high 17 points, and Ben Lynner came up huge inside, grabbing 11 boards and tossing down 15 points. Ian Kidder chipped in with 10 points, including a pair of 3-pointers.

MAXLAX REPORT

Game of the Week:

U12 Spartans top TomCats, 6-4

As we saw in the Super Bowl (YEAH BUC's), a great defense is often times all you need to come out on top and this MaxLax game was a true example of that as these two physically aggressive teams got together to "tough out" a super contest.

This one started like most of the other SPARTANS contests, with these past division champions scoring the first tallies to set things in motion. Jake Kasianowicz (Kaz) took a nice feed from Gordon Porter to set up the first score, which was quickly followed by a no look "heat seeker" from Porter that found the back of the net in a hurry to put them up by two. Dean Kennedy then snuck in behind the TOMCATS defense and caught a perfect pass in full stride from Porter (again) to make a convincing argument that this was going to be another dominant SPARTANS win. However, something happened on the way to the victory lap in that the TOMCATS put together a defensive stand that would close down the SPARTANS for most of the remaining minutes in the first half. Passing lanes that were once open were quickly shut down by the fast paced team defense of the TOMCATS led by Brad Hughes and Derek Katarivas. Relentless stick pressure by Anthony Lambiase also stymied the SPARTANS offense and while they did manage to put another tally in right at the end of the half on a nice slide move by Greg Reynolds with an assist from Kennedy, this game was a lot closer than the score indicated.

The TOMCATS had kept it close throughout the first half through their energetic defensive play, but the SPARTANS knew they needed to come out hard in the second half. They did this by demonstrating their extraordinary passing skills to move the defense all over the field until Kaz whipped one past the TOMCATS goalie to take a 5 - 0 lead. The TC's knew they would need more than just defense to stay in the game and they turned their sites to the offensive end and took full advantage of a free possession when James Oberle dodged several SPARTANS and took it home for the TC's first score of the game. Todd Galvin then showed some great ball movement of their own to get another one back with a quick shot from the top of the box off of a Lambiase feed from behind. The game then went through a full quarter without any scoring, but with plenty of hard hitting action and near misses that resulted in more than just a few penalty situations. The TOMCATS took advantage of one of the man-up's when Brad Hughes notched his first of the night off of another Oberle pass, bringing the game to 5 - 3. With the momentum shifting for a moment, Oberle got his 3rd point of the night off of a broken play and a quick stick from about 15 feet to bring it to within one. The minutes were sliding off the clock and a flurry of TOMCATS shots were deflected by some excellent goaltending by the SPARTANS that the crowd thought for sure would yield the tying goal (one was called back for a crease violation). However, the "Champs" controlled the last minute of play and ended the game with a score from Derek St. Peter that secured the victory with a 6 - 4 final.

PLAYER(s) of the GAME: Both defenses of the TOMCATS and SPARTANS

PLAY OF THE WEEK: BLADES v PANTHERS - Did you see this one?

While the BLADES might be the "smallest" team in the U14 Division, they're certainly not short on lacrosse skills as demonstrated by a "4-Point Give and Go" was a coach's dream come true! The scoring combination of Chris Mills (right wing) to Matt Burgess (goal behind) to Mark Flibotte (left wing) to Mike Grimm (cutting down the center) for the finisher was a feast for the eyes. You don't see this one very often . . .

Indoor Spring Training & Battery Club at SSBC

HINGHAM- The best way to prepare for the 2003 baseball season is to work hard during the off-season. The first of three Indoor Spring Training Camp sessions for players 8 to 12, as well the second Battery Club session for the same age group, starts January 25 at the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham.

Two-hour STC sessions from 10 a.m. to 12-noon are scheduled each Saturday morning Jan. 25 through February 15. Two additional STC sessions for 8-12 year olds are slated for Feb. 22-March 15 and Mar. 22-April 13 at SSBC.

STC features defensive instruction for infielders and outfielders, one solid hour of batting, hitting lectures by SSBC's experienced staff, two live batting cages, and five individual hitting stations. Advanced registration is required. STC is open to SSBC members as well as non-members.

"Our coaching staff is one of the best in New England in terms of assisting players in their development," SSBC president/director Frank Niles said. "Before you know it the baseball season will be here. Our indoor spring training camp is geared toward players that want to be in mid-season form on opening day."

SSBC will also host two Spring Training Camp sessions for players 13 to 18 - Feb. 22-Mar. 15 and Mar. 22-Apr. 12.

Battery Club

SSBC's second Battery Club session, specifically designed for pitchers and catchers, will be held four consecutive Saturday mornings (8 a.m.-10 a.m.), Jan. 25-Feb. 15, for players 8-12 at Hingham.

The Battery Club is for pitchers and catchers who want to learn and work on the finer points of baseball's most important positions. Pitching focuses on mechanics from the wind-up and stretch, strategy and pitch selection, different grips and its effects, pick-off moves, fielding, and attitude.

Catching concentrates on proper receiving and throwing techniques, pitch selection, blocking low pitches, and overall strategy.

The staff includes Niles and Rick DelVecchio.

The third and final Battery Club for players 8-12 will be Mar. 22-Apr. 12.

Players 13 to 18 will be able to attend a special SSBC Battery Club session Feb. 22-Mar. 15.

SSBC is a year-round, full service club and training facility for baseball and softball players, boys and girls (5 and older), in Hingham. For more information about SSBC or any of its programs call 1-888-749-6466/(781) 749-6466, or visit its Web site at www.ssbc.com play as long as it's clean and with a purpose, and that's the way Tom plays."

Hanover's Jesse Ferraro made it 4-2 with just over five minutes left on the game clock after he stole a pass near the Cohasset blue line and walked in all alone on Skipper goalie Stefan Parnell (23 saves), but Skippers leading scorer Durkin responded with tallies number 19 and 20 on the season in the next 2:30 — the first after collecting the rebound of a Mike Rasmussen shot and circling out from behind the net for the quick wrister top shelf before the Hanover goalie could get back on his skates, the second off a beautiful rush up the right boards that saw him move toward the middle to use the lone defender back as a screen and then fire off a perfectly placed wrister from the right circle that beat the Indians' goalie high farside.

"Obviously, I was happy with the way they responded, especially our big guns " said Blake, a former assistant coach at Thayer Academy and Blue Hills. "This was a huge win for us. Hanover has always been a big rival for Cohasset, and this finally got the monkey off our backs in non-league games."

The Skippers are now 7-5-1 overall – leading the South Shore League with a 6-0 record, but just 1-5-1 outside of league play. Of course, all of those losses (with the exception of a 2-1 heartbreaker to Rockland) and the tie are to top six ranked Div. 3 teams in Eastern Mass..

Saturday's win would also seem to all but assure a spot in the postseason. The Skippers need just three more wins to lock up a .500 record. With games still remaining against SSL rivals Hull, Mashpee and Carver – teams the Skippers lambasted by a combined score of 24-3 the first time around – that feat would seem all but a foregone conclusion.

The Skippers quest for a second straight league title could be wrapped up this week, with closest chasers Norwell (yesterday) and Abington (Saturday, 2:50 p.m. at Rockland Rink) on the schedule. Cohasset beat both of these teams the first time around by the score of 4-1.

Cohasset senior captain Tom Anderson (#2) helped set the tone for a big turnaround in the second period of Saturday's 6-2 win over Hanover with a goal and lots of physical play.

Hockey Notes

Saturday's game was preceded by the expected shellacking of Carver, a first year varsity program. Parnell and sophomore Brendan Michaud combined for 18 saves in the 7-0 shutout.

Davis led the way with five points (one goal, four assists), while Durkin added four (two goals, 2 assists). Junior defenseman Mike Devine added a goal and an assist.

Scoring Leaders

With his eight point week (five goals, three assists), Durkin moved ahead of Harwich's Ryan Maguire in the SSL scoring race. Cohasset's gifted senior centerman now has 32 points on the season (20 goals, 12 assists). Davis, with eight points of his own this week, is now within two points of Maguire (27 points) with 25 points (10-15).

Junior Mike Rasmussen, who coach Blake made a point of lauding for his play of late, is now up to 12 points (4-8) on the season, followed by sophomore Ted Straughn (3-8—11) and defensemen Devine (5-5—10) and Anderson (3-7—10).

"Jen steps up huge for the big meets, and Nancy is definitely very consistent."

With the end of the regular season drawing near, the Skipper-Clippers do have a definite shot of repeating at least one thing: a return to the team sectionals. With only three losses on the year, two to Hanover and one non-league loss to Marshfield, and a strong team average score, they may earn a berth.

Cohasset's La'Raine Langford (#23 in white) tries to steal this rebound from Scituate's Cheryl Fraser in Saturday's tough luck 47-43 loss for the Lady Skippers.

Swimmers not up to Hoyle against Coyle

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Scituate-Cohasset swim team had things going their way. After season opening losses to juggernaut opponents, the Sci-Cohs reversed their luck with a huge win over "friendly rival" Cardinal Spellman, giving the squad some momentum heading into the remaining Old Colony League matches.

Then they ran into Coyle-Cassidy.

The Tigers took the meet handily, 110-60, on the strength of some accomplished female swimmers. They won the majority of the races, but really ran away with the score by utilizing their depth to pick up the essential second and third place points.

"Bigger teams are always going to have the advantage," observed third year coach Jamie Kearney. "Granted, they had some terrific swimmers leading the way, but it was their supporting cast that really carried them to victory."

Scituate junior Coral Yang supplied Coh-Sci's top race of the day, winning the 200-yard Individual Medley, leading the whole way. Though the 200 IM is not Yang's typical race, her time of 2:36.84 made the event her second in which she has qualified for Sectionals. Yang has also qualified in the 100 yard butterfly, and in this meet took third with a time of 1:18.65.

Another first year swimmer who is having a terrific rookie season, freshman Mamie Daley, notched two second places in her two individuals. Daley swam a 1:17.17 in the 100 fly to edge Yang, while beating out Coyle's Jessie Pike in the 100 yard backstroke for five points.

"Mamie has really emerged as a leader even though she's just a freshman," lauded Kearney. "Her experience with some outside teams has really been valuable, and her times are really showing it."

Cohasset senior Bryan Bilton had a solid day, recording second and third place finishes in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle races. With a time of 25.40 in the 50, Bilton pulled within a second of Sectional qualification.

Despite losing some key swimmers (James Smith to absence and Kathryn Noonan to a shoulder injury) prior to the meet, the team put together some impressive relay times, with teams recording second place in all three non-individual events.

The team of Bilton, Maran Monaco, Delia Regan and Ingber swam a 2:03 in the 200 Medley Relay. Yang, Regan, Liz Tierney and Elise Jerome recorded a 2:01 in the 200 free relay, while the squad of Regan, Monaco, Daley and Becky Keys swam to a 4:21 in the 400 yard free relay, the final event of the day.

"We knew they were going to be very strong coming in," conceded Kearney. "Coyle-Cassidy has a great program working over there, and some of their girls will put in a serious bid at Sectionals and States.

"As for us, we still have a few meets left in the schedule and then a few more we have to make up due to snow. With our remaining meets, I think this team is capable of a late season run. We can surprise some people."

Girls jump to it

Lady hoopsters net back-to-back wins

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

The Cohasset girls basketball team won its second game in a row Tuesday night, defeating Mashpee on the road 55-41, to improve their overall record to 5-9 (2-5 in the South Shore League).

Juniors Jenn Buckley and Danielle Pinkus led the way against Mashpee. Buckley had 10 points and six steals, while Pinkus had 10 points and seven rebounds.

Against Sturgis Charter, on Monday, the girls won 51-29. In that game, 17 girls got to play, and the team was led by Lindsay Grossman and Casey Anderson, who each had 11 points.

For Cohasset the two wins this week are a sign the team is moving in a positive direction, and head coach Ellen Carr likes what she is seeing.

"The team has really been playing very well, " said coach Carr. "They are playing great together and they are truly focused on playing good smart basketball."

The girls will play next against non-league opponent Hanover.

"Hanover has two very good guards we are going to have to contain," noted coach Carr. "We are also going to have to really get after it on the rebounding as well. Controlling the boards will be a key factor in the game."

With only five games left on the schedule, Cohasset is playing with a revived passion after the two game winning streak.

"We really have been showing a lot of emotion and intensity on the court," said coach Carr. "The girls are starting to see the success of what happens when you play with that fire night in and night out."

Cohasset's next game will be at Home against Hanover at 6:30 tonight, and they will play again next Tuesday at home against league foe Abington.

Dramatic comeback effort pushed grapplers into tie pinned his opponent in the third round to earn the tie.

Other Cohasset winners included: David Kupsc (103), a pin; Joe Kehoe (125), a pin; Terry Baroudi (135), a 16-1 win; Phil Strazzulla (140), a win; and Cosmo Cambi (189), a 4-3 win.

The Cohasset runaway against Whitman-Hanson featured eight wins by pins. The following are the pin wins: Kupsc (103), Jonathan Littauer (112), Kehoe (125), Bill Carbone (130), Terry Baroudi (135), Matt Casey (152), a senior captain, Mike Casey (171), a senior captain, and Jake Berge (215). Dave McKenna (119) won his event by 10.

"We have several more events to go this season and the team is gearing up for the South Sectionals," declared coach Sweeney. "We have some very good prospects for the Sectionals, and ,of course, we're also involved with the State tournament."

Terry Baroudi was a fifth place finisher in the state tournament last year, missing out on a trip to All-States by one place.

The rest of last week's wrestling story

Due to an editing error, the second half of the Jan. 23 Cohasset High wrestling report by Mike Spellman, covering the team's encouraging win of the annual Cohasset High Tourney, did not appear in that paper. Here, is the remainder of that story.

The best storyline of the Cohasset winners belongs to Mike Casey. A week removed from an embarrassing 21-5 loss to Duxbury's Steve Celino, the Cohasset senior got another shot at him Saturday, and turned the tables 180 degrees, coming out on top, 15-7. This dramatic turnaround was a testament to both Casey's versatility and Sweeney's coaching acumen.

"Let's just say we came up with a few adjustments to block Celino's best takedown move," said Sweeney, careful not to give away too much. "I think that frustrated (Celino) and forced him into mistakes, and Mike did a nice job of taking advantage of those. Even with those adjustments, though, that kind of point swing in a one week period is just amazing. Mike did a great job."

Cohasset's three second place finishers were senior Dave Kupsc (105 pounds), sophomore Jonathan Littauer (114) and sophomore Joe Kehoe (127). Each of these three lost in the finals, respectively, to established Rockland standouts Paul Robinson, Leo Mahoney and Zach Gorman.

Seniors Phil Strazzulla (132) and freshman Dave McKenna (121) each lost in the semifinals, but were praised by Sweeney for hanging tough and winning their consolation matches to grab big third place points.

In that consolation match, Dave McKenna, Chris' little brother, got a little measure of revenge against Marshfield's Mark Olsen, who'd beaten him pretty good Christmas vacation week at the Marshfield Tourney.

Strazzula, meanwhile was wrestling in one of the toughest weight divisions in the tourney. He lost to eventual champion Stephen Barry, of Scituate in the semis, Barry himself avenging an early season loss to Phil at Marshfield, but then held off another strong wrestler in the consolation match, Lynnfield's Scott Banos.

The fourth place finishes were notched for Cohasset by sophomore Matt Casey (154), who lost a 1-0 heartbreaker to Scituate's Jared Barilaro in the consolation match, and Drew Musto (162), who wrestled through an injury in gutsy fashion to reach the semifinals.

"I think this is a great momentum builder for us going down the stretch run," concluded Sweeney. "The regular season is about getting ready for the Sectionals and States, and I feel like we're in good shape heading that way with just four weeks or so to go until Sectionals."

Meetings for parents of middle-schoolers

Attention all Middle School parents! You are invited to take part in discussions about parenting the unique being that your middle schooler is. This is a time for parents to share, laugh and learn, as well as support one another as our children become more independent.

Ann McCarthy-Egan, LICSW who is the School Adjustment Counselor at the Middle High School will facilitate these conversations. She will also provide information and expertise about parenting your adolescent. These conversations are scheduled by the grade of your child due to the different developmental needs of each group. Parents of the seventh-graders will meet on Feb. 5 at 9:30 a.m. in the Middle School Library and parents of eighth-graders will meet on Tuesday, March 4 in the Library as well. An evening meeting will be held on Monday, March 10 from 7-8:30 p.m. for parents who are unable to attend during the day. The evening meeting is by reservation only and will not be held for less than 10 registrants. Please call 781-383-4210.

PAC meeting Feb. 5

Cohasset PAC (Parents Advisory Council) will meet at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 5 in the Osgood School music room. The Federation for Children with Special Needs will speak on your "Basic Rights". Learn your rights as a parent of a special needs student. The meeting is open to parents and interested citizens. For information call, Wendy Kennedy 781-383-6008 or Bev Koswick 781-383-2751.

Send in your school news

The Cohasset Mariner wants to develop a school news page to run every week. Short news items from teachers and school organizations are welcome. Photographs of events, accompanied with a short article or longer story are also sought. If you have "Stars of the Month", an interesting program or student volunteer effort, artwork, student writings, interesting field trip, or special projects, please share them with us.

Also, if you would like to request a photographer for your school event, please let us know. Contact editor Mary Ford at 781-741-2933. News items my be sent by email to mford@cnc.com or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street in the village.

Arrest made in break-in

On Friday evening, Jan. 24, 2003, Cohasset Police, with the assistance of the Hingham and Rockland Police Departments, executed a search warrant at 11 Stanton St., Rockland.

The warrant was executed as a result of an investigation into the breaking and entering that occurred at Buttonwood Books located in Shaw's Plaza in Cohasset on Dec. 17, 2002. On that date, two masked subjects broke into the rear office of Buttonwood Books and were discovered by an employee who called police. After a police chase, both subjects fled and were not captured.

During the execution of the warrant, Cohasset Police arrested Erik P. Flynn, 26, of the same address on charges of breaking and entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony, malicious destruction of property over $250 and possession of burglarious tools related to the Buttonwood Books break in. Police also seized evidence related to the break in. Flynn was released on cash bail on Jan. 25, and was arraigned in Quincy District Court on Monday, Jan. 27.

According to Cohasset Det. Sergeant Gregory Lennon, "the successful conclusion of this investigation was a great example of the results of interagency cooperation. We were glad to be able to make this arrest and provide some level of satisfaction to the victim in this case."

Cohasset Police expect to make other arrests in this investigation shortly. Lennon and Det. Garrett Hunt investigated the case. Hingham Police Officer Steven Dearth and Lt. John Norkaitis assisted with the investigation.

Questions may be directed to Chief Robert W. Jackson at 781-383-1212 or Det. Sgt. Gregory Lennon at the same number.

OBITUARY

Margaret F. Sylvester

Margaret "Marge" Frances (Flaherty) Egan Sylvester, 89, of Hingham, a former first-grade teacher in Boston, passed away Jan. 18, 2003 at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Mrs. Sylvester was a teacher for 40 years until she retired in 1975.

Born in Everett, she was raised in Charlestown and also lived in West Roxbury. She spent summers in Scituate for 50 years and lived in Hingham for the past seven years.

She was a 1930 graduate of Girls' Latin School in Boston and a 1934 graduate of Boston Teachers' School.

She was a member of the Sandlettes in Scituate.

Wife of the late Richard Egan and the late Ray Sylvester, she leaves her two sons, Richard Egan of Wakefield and Robert Egan of Hingham, who is the Cohasset building inspector; her three grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Paul's Church in Hingham. Interment was in Calvary Cemetery, Woburn.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made to The Jimmy Fund, 10 Brookline Place West, Brookline 02445.

Sunday concerts at St. Stephen's

As part of its Sunday Concert Series, St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset is presenting violinist Sargis Karapetyan in a recital Sunday, Feb. 2 at 3:30 p.m.

Karapetyan is a native of Armenia and holds both a master's degree and artist's diploma from the Komitas State Conservatory in Yerevan. He was also director of pedagogy and lecturer at the conservatory. Karapetyan has worked in the U.S. with the Bangor Symphony, Plymouth Symphony and the Central Massachusetts Symphony. The February program will include works of Vivaldi, Bach, and various Armenian composers. Half of the program will contain works for solo violin and the remainder of the concert will be accompanied by Dr. G. Fredrick Guzasky on the church's 58-rank Aeolian-Skinner organ.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave., is handicap accessible, and ample parking is available at the village car park. There is no charge for the concert, although donations will gladly be accepted. For more information, please call the church office at 781-383-1083.

First Parish celebrates renovated Parish House

First Parish in Cohasset celebrated the renovation of its 1722 Parish House at an open house on Sunday.. Local clergy, town officials and the membership were regaled with music by the choir and by First Parish member, Howie Altholtz accompanied by his daughter Cally and local artist Anne Czerkawski, who shares his passion for meaningful songs. Young and old listened to singer/songwriter Reed Dickinson's sweet melodies and superb lyrics, and many danced to Dawna Hammer's new age spiritual music.

The children enjoyed the excitement of drawing with caricaturist Jim Hamilton and the storytelling of Betsy Detwiler from Buttonwood Books.

The children enjoyed the excitement of drawing with caricaturist Jim Hamilton and the storytelling of Betsy Detwiler from Buttonwood Books. A tour of the entire building included the "home-share" apartment, the new kitchen, Trueblood Hall, the children's facilities and childcare center and the beautifully refurbished living room. Parish members provided a host of mouth-watering finger foods and hot and cold drinks.

The community had a special opportunity to view the Carriage House Nursery School located in its own wing of this beautiful building. First Parish's Sunday School for pre-K, kindergarten, and grades one through eight are housed under this roof as well. Displayed were artistic works by each class representing Bible stories and the seven Unitarian Universalist principals.

First Parish is delighted to offer to the community use of this facility for adult and children's activities. First Parish currently offers many adult courses in spirituality, writing, and church history. Plans are underway for many new study groups, pot luck suppers, afternoon teas, quilting bees, book and discussion groups, dancing and singing events, and much more to share fellowship.

The Rev. Patricia Hart, interim minister of First Parish, invites the community to call the First Parish office for further information between Monday and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sunday services, including Nursery and Sunday School, begin at 10:30 a.m. in the Meeting House on the Common in Cohasset.

Playground benefit dinner dance Feb. 8

"Love Around the World," a benefit dinner dance, will be held at the Red Lion Barn, 71 S. Main St., Cohasset, February 8 from 7 p.m. 'til midnight.

Proceeds will benefit the playground at Our World Children's Global Discovery Museum, which will open later this year. The museum will occupy a two-story wing at the back of the new Paul Pratt Library at the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road.

The playground is currently being designed under the aegis of the same non-profit group that is raising money for the children's museum.

"Love Around the World" will feature a buffet dinner and dancing to the sounds of the Mike Dumas Band with Platform Soul. The evening will also include a live auction.

Tickets are $75 each. For reservations or further information, call Logan Bernstein at 781-383-6165.

First annual Valentines Fund Dance slated

First Annual Valentines Fund Dance will be celebrated on Saturday, Feb. 15, from 8 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Atlantica Restaurant, 44 Border St.

The creative black-tie party will raise money to benefit the homeless of greater Boston and Cambridge.

All proceeds will be donated to Bread & Jams, Inc. Self-advocacy Programs.

Bread & Jams is a 501(C)3 non-profit day shelter for men, women and youth located in Harvard Square at the Old Cambridge Baptist Church at 1151 Mass. Ave., Cambridge. The web site is at www.breadandjams.org

Since 1989 Bread & Jams has been providing shelter from the cold and rain, food, shower facilities, clean clothing, health care, job and housing counseling in a caring environment for those who find themselves homeless or in transition. With this year's crippling State and Federal cutbacks, this event will allow those who do not think of themselves as wealthy philanthropists to make a collective difference that will keep the shelter alive. Dress creatively, come and have compassion and fun at the same time.

Numerous merchants, restaurateurs and local artists and friends from both South Shore communities and Harvard Square have donated gift certificates, tickets to major sporting events and works of art for raffle and silent auction. The Atlantica Restaurant is donating the hall and hors d'oeuvres. There will be a cash bar and dinner reservations can be placed with the Atlantica at 781-383-0900. Featured entertainment by The Joe Micarelli Trio, The Full Moon Revue, and Shaken Not Stirred - all donating their energy to this timely cause. Donations are $25 per person. Tables and blocks of tickets are also available. RSVP by mailed invitation please as a limited number of tickets will be available at the door. Drowned Hogs to take a dip

On Saturday, Feb. 1 at noon, the Drowned Hogs will again attempt to predict spring's arrival at the M.J. Murray Bath House, Nantasket Ave. (on Nantasket Beach) in Hull. This is their Eighth Annual Swim for Charity and their record for "predicting spring" is flawless. More than 250 swimmers will leave the heated Murray Bath House and dive into the Atlantic at 12 noon.

The Drowned Hogs will again "do a cool thing for charity!" — the lore goes: "If the Drowned Hogs 'frolic' in the ocean's brine, Spring arrives right on time. But if they scream and run back out, Winter will be a six-week bout."

All proceeds from the swim will benefit the non-profit organization "Wellspring" in Hull with its many services, including food pantry, domestic violence program, crisis counseling, adult learning program, thrift shop and much more.

For more information on how to contribute to this charity event — or for the more adventurous, actually participate in the icy swim — please logon to www.drowned-hogs.com or call 781-773-1961.

Cabaret on stage Jan 30, 31, Feb. 1

In just one week from today, this year's exciting Cabaret Show entitled "On Our Own" will be on stage at the Hingham Armory. You won't want to miss the fast paced dances and songs that will make you sing along. On Thursday, Jan. 30, the show begins at 7 p.m. and tickets are $10 for seniors, $12 for the general public.

The Friday and Saturday shows on Jan. 31, and Feb. 1, begin at 8 p.m.

Poetic license

Scituate lawyer brings story of slave poet Phillis Wheatly to stage

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

They share a last name, but Ronald B.Wheatley isn't positive that there is any family connection between him and Phillis Wheatley, a slave in colonial Boston whose poetry is so well-respected that it has appeared in virtually every anthology of American poetry ever published. There is one thing, however, of which the Scituate attorney is certain. He wants to help current and future generations to learn about the unique life of Phillis Wheatley.

"I first got interested in her life, because of our shared last name. I was further inspired by the attestation of her poems that was signed by John Hancock and other eminent men in Boston in 1772," explained Wheatley by telephone from his home last week. "If Phillis had not been able to convince those men that she had written the poetry, her poems might never have been published. There is so much that Phillis accomplished considering her beginnings. I just wanted to bring Phillis alive to people, especially young people today."

Wheatley will do just that with his play, "The Trial of Phillis Wheatley," which will have its world premiere next week at Bridgewater State College as part of Black History Month.

Phillis's personal history can be traced to the mid-1700's when she was kidnapped in West Africa and sold into the slave trade. She arrived in Boston as a sickly eight year old and was soon purchased by the Wheatley family of Boston whose last name, by custom, she took. Her first name came from the name of her slave ship. The Wheatleys were devout Christians and treated Phillis with kindness and compassion. The twin Wheatley children, Mary and Nathaniel, assisted their mother in teaching Phillis to read and write. They quickly realized that their student was an exceptionally intelligent girl. By the time she was 13, Phillis had written her first poem.

"Susanna Wheatley is known as America's first stage mother," according to Ron Wheatley. "She really loved Phillis and treated her almost like a daughter."

Mrs.Wheatley is said to have given Phillis her own room in the mansion, complete with a fireplace and plenty of candlelight. Susanna also presented Phillis at social events at which the young woman would recite poems on religious and classical themes. Before long, Susanna had put together a manuscript of about 20 poems and began shopping it around to publishers.

The style of the work was compared favorably to England's then poet laureate Alexander Pope, whom Phillis emulated, but few colonists would believe that a black girl could write such remarkable poetry.

Shannon Stanton as Phillis Wheatley (center) Petra Glanopoulos as Mary Wheatley (left) and Sharyn Waters as Susannah Wheatley (right) star in The Trial of Phillis Wheatley on stage at Bridgewater State College Feb. 7 and 8.

Susanna's husband, John, came up with idea that a group of prominent Boston men question Phillis on her work and then sign and publish an attestation of her truthfulness. Phillis Wheatley was only 18 when she appeared before a gathering men including the then Massachusetts Governor Thomas Hutchinson, Lieutenant Governor Andrew Oliver, John Hancock and others.

Phillis Wheatley

"The Trial of Phillis Wheatley" imagines what it must have been like for Phillis to stand before such an intimidating panel of white men. "How does a young black girl convince 18 older white men, among the most eminent men in New England at the time, that she is indeed the author of the poems?" is the question Wheatley decided his work should seek to answer.

All 18 men ultimately attested to the fact that they believed that Phillis had written the poems. Even with the attestation, Boston publishers were reluctant to work with Phillis. Undaunted, Phillis journeyed to England in late 1772 with Nathaniel Wheatley. That July, a London court ruling had freed some 20,000 black slaves. Phillis was welcomed in London by statesmen including Benjamin Franklin. In 1773, Phillis became the first black American to have a book published with the British release of her "Poems on Various Subjects, Religious and Moral."

"Phillis was scheduled to be presented to the King and Queen, but that never happened," says Wheatley. "Instead, she was summoned back to Boston where Susanna Wheatley was dying."

After the deaths of both Susanna and John Wheatley, Phillis was a free woman. She married another free black man, but it was not a good union. The couple had three children who died as babies. Phillis herself died at age 31.

Wheatley's decision that a play would be the best way to tell people about Phillis seemed like a natural one even for the first time playwright. "I've always seen things in dramatic terms," he says.

In early 1999, Wheatley began his own journey with the purchase of two books, one on how to write for the stage and the other, "The Collected Works of Phillis Wheatley," edited by John C. Shields.

It was on more routine journeys in 1999, however, that Wheatley actually worked on the play. "I did a great deal of the writing on my laptop while on the Hingham commuter

Doing time, doesn't always mean doing the crime

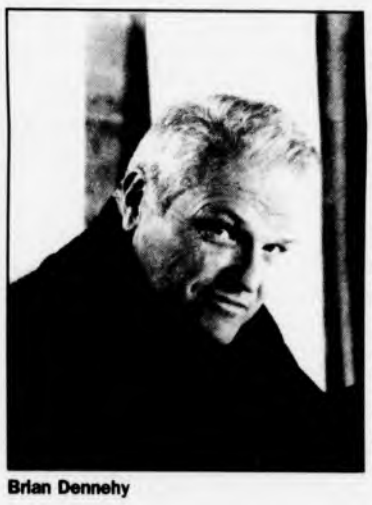
It doesn't get much more dramatic than the death penalty. Authors Jessica Blank and Erik Jensen prove that and more with the new play, "The Exonerated," a chronicle of the true stories of six death row inmates who were wrongly convicted of crimes, ultimately found innocent, and released from prison. Directed by Bob Balaban —producer and costar of the Academy Award-winning feature film "Gosford Park — "The Exonerated" has been produced in Los Angeles and New York and is now on a limited national tour.

Marlo Thomas

The ripped-from-the-headlines nature of the piece has attracted rotating casts of high profile actors and celebrities like Richard Dreyfuss, Jill Clayburgh, Gabriel Byrne, Judy Collins, Mia Farrow and Andrew McCarthy. The Boston company is no exception and is led by Brian Dennehy and Marlo Thomas. Dennehy, brilliant just a few seasons back in "Death of a Salesman" at the Shubert, conveys quiet dignity as an organic farmer convicted of murdering his parents.



Brian Dennehy

Thomas, perhaps best-known as the star of the 1960s sitcom "That Girl," is exquisitely naturalistic as a woman whose hard life has led she and her husband to be found guilty of killing two police officers. In character, Thomas hauntingly sums up the plight of the wrongly convicted when she describes her time in prison. "From 1976 to 1992, just remove that chunk from your life. That's what happened to me." Marlo

Thomas and Brian Dennehy head a 10-person cast in "The Exonerated," at the Wilbur Theatre, 246 Tremont Street, Boston through Feb. 2. For tickets, call 617/931-2787.

Day of wine and chocolates

Hull fundraiser helps kids with cancer and their families

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

In February, fancies turn to love and chocolate — not necessarily in that order.

Which makes the First Annual Chocolate Lovers and Wine Tasting the perfect place to be just week before Valentine's Day.

"We were trying to think of something we could do close to Valentine's Day to interest the public and the business community and let them do some outreach," explained event organizer Susan Oberg Jacobvitz. "We thought we'd mix the two things that people like the most — chocolate and wine."

More than simply an afternoon of delicious indulgence, Jacobvitz said this benefit event has a heart, with all proceeds going to Why Me, Inc. — a non-profit organization dedicated to caring for children with cancer and their families.

Jacobvitz, a member of the group's board of directors has been involved in fundraising for the Worcester-based Why Me, Inc. for 15 years.

"We started out by selling hot dogs at Jiffy Lube for $1 and brownies at the mall," Jacobvitz said recalling the organization's early fundraising efforts. Why Me, Inc. has become more well known and more successful in raising money over the years and events like the Chocolate Lovers and Wine Tasting help the organization care for more than 200 local families.

"We help provide every day needs for a sick child and their family," said Jacobvitz, noting that the money raised is not put into research or looking for a cure. Instead it pays for the more mundane expenses families face, including parking fees at city hospitals, or the phone and television service in hospital rooms, wigs for children who have lost their hair due to treatment, or games they can play while receiving treatment. Jacobvitz is especially pleased about the house the organization has purchased in Worcester where children with cancer can stay with their families between hospital visits or for a respite.

She hopes to sell 500 tickets for the Feb. 8 Chocolate Lovers and Wine Tasting which will take place from 1 to 4 p.m. in two of the Clarion Nantasket Beach Hotel's ballrooms. Local candy stores including "A Matter of Taste in Scituate, and Puopolo's Candies in Hingham, and Z Chef will offer the confectionery delights while restaurants like Bridgeman's Jakes Seafood and La Calypso will serve up scrumptious chocolate desserts. Shaw-Ross International Importers, Portside Wines and A Street Liquors will offer a wide range and selection of wines.

"We see it as a wonderful way for the community to come together to support children around the state," Jacobvitz said.

In addition to truffles and cabernet, there will be door prizes, a silent auction and raffle for those who attend the Chocolate Lovers and Wine Tasting. Tickets are $25 and may be purchased in advance or at the door, said Jacobvitz, who hopes to make the event an annual one. For ticket information call 781-925-9793.

A simple chocolate cake

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

I was looking for a one-layer chocolate cake that was rich enough to be served on its own with perhaps a dollop of whipped cream. I didn't want to have to frost it or soak it in sugar syrup and, most of all, I didn't want two layers. I was searching for a luxurious chocolate taste and texture but well short of a damp, thick over-the-top flourless chocolate cake that I find hard to stomach.

I started with a recipe that I had developed for The Dessert Bible that was an "almost" fallen chocolate cake. First of all, a real "fallen" chocolate cake is that ubiquitous dessert found at thousands of restaurants which is basically an undercooked chocolate cake, often served in a ramekin or small bowl. Chocolate tends to lose its flavor the more it is cooked and therefore an undercooked chocolate cake has a lot of flavor. The problem with this type of dessert is that it has little structure, has to be served warm, and tends to be quite gooey in the middle. My "almost" fallen chocolate cake recipe was a big step in the right direction, but it still falls during cooling and the center is very soft and hard to manage. I wanted something a bit more cake-like without losing the great flavor and texture.

The basic recipe calls for a stick of butter melted with 8 ounces of semisweet chocolate, 1/4 cup flour, 6 whole eggs, 1/2 cup sugar, 1 teaspoon vanilla, and 3/4 teaspoon salt. The eggs and sugar are beaten for 5 minutes, the flour and salt are folded in, the butter/chocolate mixture is folded in along with the vanilla, and then the mixture is baked in a springform pan. Simple enough. But I still wanted a bit more structure so I increased the flour to 1/2 cup. This created a higher, more cake-like dessert, but it needed a bit more chocolate flavor so I upped the chocolate to 10 ounces. Voila! Now I had a cake that fell very little during cooling and had a light, chocolate-cake texture around the perimeter with a rich, thick chocolate texture in the center. This cake does not have to be served warm out of the oven, although it is at its peak about 20 minutes after baking. Best of all, it is rich enough to be served on its own without frosting and yet it has the structure and feel of a real chocolate cake, not a warm pudding.

SIMPLE CHOCOLATE CAKE

The center of this cake will appear seamed and mottled when it is done, not smooth and high-rise like a regular chocolate cake. (This is due to the low proportion of flour to butter and chocolate.) Remove it from the oven when the center is just set (it doesn't shimmy and shake). Just shake the pan a bit from side to side to gauge whether the center is set. Don't press down on the center as you would with a regular cake to see if it bounces back. The cake will continue to set up out of the oven. Note that the center of the cake will be very rich and creamy whereas the perimeter will be more cake-like.

8 tablespoons (1 stick) unsalted butter, plus softened butter for greasing pan

10 ounces semisweet chocolate, chopped into small pieces

6 large eggs, at room temperature

1/2 cup sugar

1 teaspoon vanilla extract

1/2 cup all-purpose flour, plus extra for dusting pan

1/2 teaspoon salt

Confectioners' sugar for dusting cake, optional

Whipped cream or vanilla ice cream for serving, optional

1. Adjust an oven rack to center position and heat the oven to 350 degrees. Butter and flour (or dust with cocoa) an 8 or 9-inch springform pan.

2. Heat the butter and chocolate together in a heavy-bottomed saucepan over very low heat until the chocolate is just about melted. (This can be done in a microwave oven. Heat the chocolate for 2 minutes at 50% power. Add the butter and heat another 2 minutes or so at 50% or until melted. Stir every minute.) Set aside to cool almost to room temperature.

3. Beat the eggs, slowly adding the sugar, until very light and thick, about 5 minutes with a paddle attachment of a standing mixer, about 12 minutes with a hand mixer or whisk. (They should be the texture of underwhipped cream. The mixture should mound when drizzled back onto itself. Do not underbeat this mixture – give it the time it needs.) While the eggs are beating, add the vanilla to the chocolate/butter mixture and stir until smooth. When the egg mixture is ready, fold about 1 cup of it into the melted chocolate. Sift the flour and salt onto the remaining egg/sugar mixture and fold it in. (If using a standing mixer, sift the flour onto the egg mixture and mix at low speed for 10 seconds. Add the chocolate and also mix on low for 10 seconds. Then fold the mixture together with a rubber spatula.) Add the lightened chocolate mixture to the bowl with the egg/sugar mixture and fold until fully incorporated. Pour the batter into the prepared pan. (The batter will now be about half the volume it was at the outset and will fill about two-thirds of a 2 1/2-inch high springform pan.)

4. Bake about 30 to 35 minutes for the 8-inch pan, and 25 to 30 minutes for the 9-inch pan. (Baking times will vary depending on the calibration of your oven. Use the visual cues given at the beginning of the recipe as a guide to when the cake is ready.) The cake should be just set in the center (jiggle the pan back and forth to check). Don't press on the top of the cake to judge whether it is done. Let cool for 10 minutes. Run a thin knife around the edge of the pan and release the sides.

5. Dust with confectioners' sugar and serve with whipped cream or vanilla ice cream. This cake is best served warm but can also be served at room temperature.

Mail order gardening

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A momentary reprieve from this winter's relentless arctic blast afforded South Shore residents a brief opportunity to escape the warm, stuffy confines of our indoor sanctuaries and venture out into our frosty landscapes. Most of the gardens remain blanketed by an icy coating of snow with the promise of a fluffy new covering on the way. Armed with a teakettle of boiling water, I made my way across the crusty surface to the edge of my frozen frog pond hoping to melt a hole in ice that would favor the survival of the fish and frogs hibernating below. In recent years, a bubbling pump furnished a nearly perpetual opening in the frozen surface of the water garden enabling gases from decomposing debris to escape and providing a constant source of water for wildlife all winter long. Due to this season's bitter cold temperatures, the pond has been continuously frozen, the gurgling, miniature fountain creating unique ice sculptures whose forms change throughout the day as sun, wind, and shadows continually influence nature's artwork.

As I gazed upon the dormant, lifeless garden surrounding the frozen pond, I struggled to visualize its large clumps of handsome hostas, airy astilbes, feathery ferns, and the scores of lush shade-loving perennials that overflow these borders during the growing season. I am grateful for the books, magazines, catalogs and Internet offerings that remind me of the beauty that resting beneath the frozen earth.

I spent several hours earlier in the day sitting at my computer browsing through a sea of web sites related to plant material. When I entered the key word "perennial plants", 273,000 offerings were indicated. Overwhelmed by the potential listings, I became more selective in my designations resorting to specific catalog sources I have used and enjoyed in the past. Although many of these mail order businesses offered impressive web sites, I prefer hard copies and enjoy flipping through the pages of colorful catalogs so I requested quite an assortment on-line. Should I decide to place any orders, I may return to the convenience of my computer in the weeks to come.

Gardening magazines are another resource for locating new suppliers. Horticulture magazine and Fine Gardening provide postcard forms at the back of their publications during the winter months that enable you to order many catalogs all at once through the magazine. Some businesses charge a nominal fee to cover printing and mailing costs, often deductible with a first order, but I consider the majority of these brochures inexpensive alternatives to costly gardening books and save them from year to year. Many catalogs provide beautiful photographs and information on the growth habits and culture of the newest cultivars. I have saved numerous Wayside Gardens and White Flower Farm catalogs as reference material. The catalog format enables a supplier to present more varieties than those typically listed in a standard reference book and since these are updated and expanded yearly, the gardening enthusiast has access to descriptions and cultural information about the latest introductions.

As you scan the pages of these glorious photographic journals, be aware that some of the photos can be misleading. Insignificant tiny flowers may be substantially enlarged and the true colors of the flowers may be extremely difficult to reproduce accurately leading to the use of filters that may enhance or exaggerate the actual tints. Blue flowers are especially challenging to capture accurately on film. Glowing descriptions of a plant's attributes tend to accompany these photos and catalogs rarely mention any negative characteristics. You may want to consult additional references before you place your order noting the size of the flowers and the mature plant in addition to any mention of its being a vigorous grower, which is often an indication of an invasive aggressor.

One of the most economical ways to produce a garden full of beautiful flowers is to grow from seed. Quantities of annuals, perennials and vegetables can be raised from seed packets at a fraction of the cost of buying six-packs or individual plants. There is also a sense of accomplishment when you successfully grow plants from seed.

The purchase of perennials or woody plants through the mail may be more of a gamble. Depending on the source, you are likely to spend more for plants acquired through the mail than at your local nursery especially when the costs of shipping are figured into the final expense. The majority of local garden centers carry quite a variety of plant materials including many newer offerings but few could provide the diversity found among the pages of specialty catalogs. For those seeking rare and unusual plants including the newest introductions of daylilies, hosta, peonies, and iris, mail order catalogs can obviously list a wider selection and are practically a necessity for the serious collector. Unique species of trees and shrubs pose even a greater challenge. Mail order woody plants are often diminutive, dormant twigs while local nurseries stock larger specimens that tend to be more reasonably priced for a comparable size ordered through the mail. The factors of cost, your time to wander from nursery to nursery during the growing season, and your need for instant gratification in terms of mature specimens should all be factored into your decision to order through the mail.

As dusk approached, tiny snowflakes filled the air. Only the soothing sounds of bubbling water from my little fishpond broke the silence as darkness fell over the dormant winter landscape.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 29

The moon enters Capricorn at 2:30 a.m. setting the stage for a 'get things done' kind of day. Roll up your sleeves and take on a big work project. It is okay to initiate new activities. However, it is best to postpone launching major ventures until next week, after the new moon occurs. Zero in on responsibilities you have taken on or promises you have made and follow through.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30

At 5:34 a.m. the Capricorn moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. Tackle jobs you have been putting off and get them out of the way. Don't be a procrastinator. You can be most productive, if you have a clear plan of action and stick to it. An alignment of the sun and Neptune also affects this day. It prompts you to take quiet time out for yourself. Instead of numbing out with escapes through the path of least resistance, do some serious soul-searching. Reflect on and learn from past experiences. Let go of recent hurts, traumas. Explore your options and set new goals.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 31

The final stage toward a new moon begins at 7:44 a.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. This is a day to finish projects already begun, clean and reorganize, clear the way for new activities. On a personal level, the dark side of a new moon brings an opportunity to shed emotional baggage, free yourself from self-defeating ideas, behaviors, patterns. Important insights and inspirations will come, if you have quiet space and time to listen.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1

A new moon culminates at 5:48 a.m., 12-degrees Aquarius. It sets the stage for a month that is ideal for new starts of all kinds. If you have a plan or new idea you want to pursue, now is the time to get it off the ground. This new moon opposes the giant planet Jupiter, generating feelings of optimism and hope. The evening is great for partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 2

Above-average planetary influences continue. The Aquarius moon aligns with Venus and Uranus until 11:02 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Venus forms a 60-degree contact to Uranus at 12:25 p.m., and Mars interacts with Neptune at 4:40 p.m. A mellow Pisces moon arrives at 2:54 p.m. This day is prime for meeting people, developing new alliances or renewing old relationships. All social activities get the green light. Gather with friends and enjoy the good things in life.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 3

It may be difficult to get motivated and be productive today and tomorrow. A Pisces moon forms challenging contacts to Mars today, Pluto and Saturn tomorrow. Postpone making important decisions or initiating new ventures until Wednesday. This is a period to clean up, get rid of the clutter and make way for new starts. The rough spot today is in effect between 10:22 a.m.-1:22 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars. Slow down. Give greater attention to accuracy, details.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 4

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. Avoid morning hassles or the blues. The Pisces moon forms potentially stressful contacts to Pluto and Saturn until 9:52 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Allow extra time to get where you are going. There are likely to be delays, unexpected obstacles. The planet Venus moves into Capricorn at 8:27 a.m., remaining there until March 2. The moon travels at the tail end of the zodiac, inactive for the remainder of the day. That means that you should finish old projects rather than starting anything new. Get extra rest tonight.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 5

Planetary action turns around completely today. At 12:44 a.m. the moon enters fiery Aries, setting a fast pace today and tomorrow. In addition, Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, interacts with expansive Jupiter at 2:25 p.m. Be sure to have a clear plan of action, so that you can take advantage of today's high potential. You can be extremely productive. The green light is on for new starts across the board. Go for the gold.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6

Yesterday's planetary patterns continue. The Aries moon promises another high-energy day. It forms easy contacts to Jupiter, Mars, the sun, Pluto and Saturn. You will be surprised how much you can accomplish, if you are well-organized and stick to your game plan. Zero in on projects that require physical labor and exertion. Get back on track with exercise and physical fitness programs.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 7

Step out of your usual routine; be more adventurous this morning. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 9:21 a.m. makes it prime for new experiences. Keep an open mind. At 9:21 a.m. the Aries moon becomes inactive until 12:59 p.m., when it enters Taurus. The green light goes on, particularly for selling or purchasing land or property. A lunar alignment to Venus generates a romantic mood this evening.

boat to Boston each day. Most of my research was done at the Boston Athenaeum, while I was on my lunch hour," recalls the counsel to the Massachusetts Department of Telecommunications and Energy who also has his own law practice in Scituate.

Completing the play in six months, Wheatley sent it around to various people for their review and consideration. Not long after, he heard from Stephen Levine of Hingham, a professor of theater at Bridgewater State College. Levine was excited about what he had read and told Wheatley he was interested in mounting a production of the new play at Bridgewater State.

"Stephen Levine is really the shepherd of the project," says Wheatley. "He liked the play and he took on the challenge. Steven told me that it is the dream of anyone who teaches theater to one day have the chance to use of all of his best students - past and present - in one play. Steven says this is the play that is giving him that opportunity."

The part of Phillis Wheatley will be played by 20-year-old Shannon Stanton, a junior at the college. Levine's wife, professional actress Sharyn Waters, will portray Susanna Wheatley. In a bit of typecasting, the role of John Hancock will be played by State Representative Peter Koutoujian of Waltham, a graduate of Bridgewater State.

("The Trial of Phillis Wheatley," written by Ronald B. Wheatley and directed by Stephen Levine, will be presented at the Horace Mann Auditorium at Bridgewater State College, 131 Summer Street, Bridgewater at 8 PM on February 7 and 8. For tickets and information, call 508/531-1321 or visit www.bridgew.edu.)

WAXING PHILOSOPHIC

Swabbing the wax out of your ears can irritate or injure the delicate lining of the ear canal, causing itchiness or bleeding and increasing the risk of ear infection. If there is a lot of wax present, cotton swabs can push it deeper into the ear canal, where it compacts and hardens. That can cause hearing loss, dizziness or pain. Moreover, poking anything into your ear canal can potentially damage your eardrum. The fact is that most people do not have to clean the wax out of their ears because it gradually works its way out of the ear on its own. If it does become necessary to remove it, use eardrops such as carbamide peroxide, available over-the-counter.

When you feel that things don't sound right or the way they used to but you don't know why, come to FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER for a complete, painless hearing evaluation by a board certified hearing instrument specialist. We'll be glad to explain to you the mechanics of hearing loss, and share with you the wonderful possibilities available in the hearing industry. Let us demonstrate the superior results today's hearing instruments bring. Visit us at our new, bigger and better offices at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), easy to find across from the Stetson Building in Weymouth and expanded to further meet our clients' needs. Phone 781-337-1144.

P.S. If you own a hearing instrument, discuss with your dispenser the methods by which you can remove earwax from it.

A lifelong commitment to Cohasset

Arthur Lehr is Citizen of Year

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Arthur Lehr hasn't stopped smiling lately. Not only is he feeling better than ever after bouncing back from a recent quadruple bypass – but he's just been named Cohasset's Citizen of the Year.

Although the honor is being announced in today's edition, some friends and neighbors figured it out when they saw Lehr having his photograph taken by the Mariner photographer on Tuesday.

"He is the citizen of a lot of years."
— Joe Buckley, Linden Drive

"Some came up to give me a hug," says the 83-year-old North Main Street resident.

This is the 10th consecutive year for the annual recognition and Lehr, who is undoubtedly one of the most beloved figures in town, has been nominated every year.

The selection committee, which pored over the 20 nomi-

More funds hope fades

Schools may cope with 4 percent

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The School Committee introduced its preliminary budget for fiscal year 2004 to the Board of Selectmen Tuesday night, clinging to the hope that additional funds would somehow be made available to prevent any further cuts in personnel.

Town Manager Mark Haddad had asked the committee to live with a 4 percent increase in funding. The budget it has tentatively approved would require a 4.7 percent increase.

A last-minute appropriation of $75,000 for janitorial staff that Supt. Ed Malvey said was needed "to get to the minimal staffing that was professionally recommended" was what ultimately put the committee over-budget.

Lawyer finds more homes on small lots

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Homeowner Phil Ayer isn't getting any satisfaction in his crusade for equal treatment under the zoning bylaw.

But his lawyer, Roberta Sawyer, is wreaking paperwork havoc at the office of Building Inspector Bob Egan.

Sawyer filed another complaint with Egan on Monday, alleging eight more homes — all on undersized lots —underwent or are undergoing "extensions, alterations or enlargements" without the special permit that would apparently be required under the Zoning Board of Appeals' interpretation of the bylaw.

"My review will be ongoing."
— Roberta Sawyer, attorney

"I know that there are many more similar projects. I have not yet had time to completely review your files to identify all of them. My review will be ongoing," Sawyer wrote to Egan in the complaint.

The move represents the second attempt by Sawyer to get Egan to enforce across the board the ZBA's decision regarding Ayer's home at 3 Jerusalem Lane. The Zoning Board ruled on Jan. 16 that Ayer, who razed an 1,800 square foot ranch to make way for a mansion of about 5,000 square feet, never should have been issued a building permit because his lot is considered "undersized." It said Egan had erred in his interpretation of the zoning bylaws and Ayer would need to apply for a special permit to complete his home according to original plans.

Sawyer applied for that special permit on behalf of Ayer last Friday, and the public hearing that is part of the permit process has been set for March 17. At that hearing, angered neighbors will likely argue that Ayer's home should not be granted the permit on the basis it has ruined the character of the neighborhood and devalued their property.

According to the original decision of the ZBA, now that Ayer has met the 20-day deadline for the special permit application, no "cease and desist order" can be enforced on 3 Jerusalem Lane unless and until Ayer is denied that permit. Still, any work on the home is considered "at the owner's risk."

Sawyer also filed suit in superior court Monday, claiming that the initial decision of the building inspector to grant a building permit was correct all along.

Meanwhile, Egan has yet to make a decision on the first complaint Sawyer filed several weeks ago, claiming that six Cohasset homes violate the same zoning bylaw as Ayer's home. The 14-day deadline accorded to Egan by the town's bylaws expired last Thursday.

Sawyer had requested that

Ellen Roy Herzfelder of Cohasset is the new state Secretary of Environmental Affairs.

Cohasset woman in cabinet post

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Ellen Roy Herzfelder isn't getting home a lot these days.

The new state Secretary of Environmental Affairs is the first to admit she has a "tall order" in terms of the responsibilities she'll face in the cabinet position. And although her office on the ninth floor of 251 Causeway St. in Boston's North End seems a long way from the rocky coastline of her adopted hometown, her thoughts are never far from Cohasset.

"I come with a history of knowledge about the South Shore and I'm going to maintain that connection."
— Ellen Roy Herzfelder

"I come with a history of knowledge about the South Shore and I'm going to maintain that connection," she says, pointing out the unique qualities of the region with its coastline, woodlands, waterways and topography.

The mother of Julia, 4, and Desmond, 2, is also quick to say she's blessed with a supportive husband, Bruce Herzfelder.

"Bruce is a great person and a wonderful father," says Roy Herzfelder, 43, about the college sweetheart she met while looking at the moons of Jupiter in astronomy class at Harvard. "He is so supportive, so gung-ho for me to do this."

Her first month on the job has been so hectic, she quickly realized that leaving home before her children got up in the morning and returning after they were in bed made no sense. So until things settle down, she's been staying in Boston and making it home on the weekends.

Roy Herzfelder's involvement with Gov. Mitt Romney's administration started when, on the recommendation of an associate, she was appointed to serve on the governor-elect's 97-member transition team back in November.

Romney, who touts his private sector experience as an asset, was no doubt impressed by Roy Herzfelder's résumé that includes a mix of private sector and non-profit experience.

He subsequently appointed her to the Secretary post in a reorganized cabinet that includes newly created super cabinet secretaries: the Chief of Commonwealth Development and the Chief of Commerce and Labor. As Commonwealth Development Chief, Douglas Foy, former head of the Conservation Law Foundation, a environmental advocacy group, coordinates the departments of housing, transportation and environmental affairs.

A Harvard graduate, Roy Herzfelder holds master's degrees from the Kennedy School of Government at Public hearing on water articles

The Water Commission will hold a Public Hearing on Wednesday, Feb. 26 to review the four Warrant Articles proposed by the Water Commission for the March 29 Town Meeting. The Public Hearing will be held at 8 pm in the Selectmen's Office at Town Hall, 41 Highland Ave.

"This Public Hearing will give all Cohasset residents an opportunity to review our four Warrant Articles and to ask any questions they may have," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. The Water Commission has four Warrant Articles which would.

- Authorize borrowing $2.4 million, without raising water rates, to continue the Water Commission's aggressive water system improvements program. This Article will fund improvements to the distribution system on South Main Street, North Main Street, Bancroft Road, Hill Street, and Parker Ave. The Article will also allow the Water Commission to build a new pumphouse for the Ellms Meadow Wellfield to reactivate that wellfield, to perform engineering to continue improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant, and to design and implement storm-water management controls to protect the Lily Pond watershed.
- Establish the Water Department as an Enterprise Fund, to better allow the Water Commission to account for and to replace depreciated capital assets.
- Release easements not needed any more by the Water Department on Lothrop Lane and Atlantic Avenue because new water mains that have been installed to improve fire protection and water service in those areas..
- Protect Zone A of the water supply, the area of land 400 feet from Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir and 200 feet from tributaries such as Peppermint Brook and Brass Kettle Brook, by prohibiting adverse land uses that could contaminate the water supply,.

Health board raises its fees

The Board of Health is raising some of its permit fees. Most fees were increased by $5. However, fees for septic system construction permits were increased more. For both homes and commercial buildings, permits for new septic systems rose from $110 to $150 and for system repairs from $75 to $150. Fees for innovative or alternative septic systems, both for new systems and repairs, rose from $150 to $175.

Chimney fire at Red Lion Inn

A small chimney fire Friday night at the Red Lion Inn resulted in no structural damage but sent several bar customers home early, Cohasset Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said.

Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn, said the fire resulted when patrons put too much wood in the fireplace.

Lincoln said the cause of the fire was still under investigation, but firefighters were looking into the possibility of a mechanical problem with the damper or a buildup of creosote, the product that results from combustion and collects on a chimney's walls.

Ordelheide said the inn's chimneys were cleaned regularly.

At least 12 firefighters from both Cohasset and Scituate responded to the scene at about 10:50 p.m., Lincoln said. The fire was doused with a fine spray of water and the chimney was cleaned of all creosote, he said.

Lincoln said the Hull Fire Department covered for Cohasset until about 12:30, when firefighters returned from the scene. He said cleaning the chimney was a good idea for anyone who uses the fireplace regularly. "It's a good idea to have it checked and cleaned if necessary every season," he said.

Sewer Commission may increase fees

The Sewer Commission is considering increasing fees by 40 percent in the Central Cohasset Sewer District, but Selectmen are questioning such a large increase.

The commission introduced the plan to Selectmen Tuesday night, saying the cost of sewer service would rise from $5 per 100 cubic feet to $7 per 100 cubic feet in the central district. The increased fee, said commissioner Ray Kasperowicz, would help pay for stabilizing flows and increasing hydraulic capacity at the Wastewater Treatment Plant during peak hours.

Selectmen Fred Koed questioned the move, saying in a worst-case scenario, it could result in a revenue decrease. "I'm just worried it's going to create a rate shock and everyone's going to jump back," said Koed.

Since the fall, overflows in the central sewer system have happened when high tides coincide with storms, and the town has received warnings from the state on the matter. The Sewer Commission believes water is infiltrating the pipes during extreme high tides and it plans on doing a smoke test to locate the faulty piping in the spring.

Selectmen encouraged the commission to revisit its budget to see if fees could be increased by a lesser amount to cover their costs. At the request of the town, the Sewer Commission has become a self-sustaining operation over the past year, which has resulted in costs previously picked up by the town being transferred to sewer users.

Sites added to National Register

The Capt. John Wilson House, the Bates Ship Chandlery and the Central Cohasset Cemetery have all been accepted by the National Park Service for listing on the National Register of Historic Places. The sites were added more than a month ago, but certificates and congratulations were sent to the Historical Society from the Massachusetts Historical Commission in late January.

Health board wants to make smoking history

Would prohibit it in all public places

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Cohasset could soon join the ranks of Hingham, Weymouth, Braintree, Duxbury and Plymouth by making smoking illegal in all public places.

A warrant article drafted by the Board of Health will need two-thirds approval at spring Town Meeting to change the current bylaw, which allows smoking in designated, enclosed areas at workplaces and enables restaurants to apply for variances if they can prove that banning smoking is "financially impractical."

The new bylaw would end the issuing of variances, ban smoking inside workplaces, and require smokers to stand at least 20 feet from the doorway when smoking outside of a workplace.

Three Cohasset restaurants – Atlantica, KoKo Island and Red Lion Inn — have variances that allow for smoking in their bar areas. Under the new bylaw, those restaurants would be able to keep their smoking sections until the variances expire in 2005.

The variances were granted three years ago, after eating and drinking establishments were made smoke-free in the last string of changes to the town's smoking bylaw. To be eligible — aside from arguing the bylaw could have a negative impact on business — the restaurants had to show they had working air filtration devices and sufficient barriers between smoking and non-smoking areas.

The Board of Health's effort to ban smoking in all public places comes several months after the City of Boston decided to enact similar legislation beginning in May.

Health Agent Dr. Robert Godzik said the proposed changes would not be revolutionary, given that five other South Shore towns that have already adopted similar laws. "It's not like this is some giant leap forward. We're just catching up to where everyone else is," he said.

The suggested changes were prompted in part, Godzik said, by the fact that the anti-smoking movement is becoming nationwide. "Were trying to bring (the bylaw) up to speed with the rest of the United States," he said. "Boston, New York City, those places are outlawing smoking in public places. We felt that it was important to go along with it."

"It's not like this is some giant leap forward. We're just catching up to where everyone else is."

— Dr. Joseph Godzik, health agent

Godzik said employees were the main concern when the Board of Health drafted the changes. "What we're really trying to do is protect the workers," he said. "Somebody who works eight hours a day in a smoke filled environment, they're much more prone to have health problems."

Smoking would not be banned outdoors under the new article, which defines a public place as "an enclosed, indoor area when open to and used by the public."

Godzik said a person walking down the street smoking a cigarette within 20 feet of a workplace would not necessarily be in violation of the law. "That's not the intent," he said. "The intent is that if someone's coming out of their building to take a smoke break, they shouldn't be standing right by the doorway."

Joe Campbell, director of operations at Atlantica, said he was not surprised to learn of the proposed changes. "(Banning smoking) has been a hot topic in the industry for about 15 years," he said. "I knew it was coming. I certainly expected it."

Campbell said a statewide ban would create a level playing field for restaurants, but problems can arise when neighboring towns have different laws. "If everybody has to (ban smoking) that's fine," he said. "But from a competition standpoint, if one town does it and another town doesn't, you lose business."

Campbell noted when Norwell banned smoking several years ago, the restaurant "T.G.I.F." on Route 53 lost 40 percent of its business, mostly to Joe's American Bar and Grill just down the road in Hanover, where smoking was still allowed.

Campbell said many smokers were regulars at Atlantica's bar, which is enclosed and has two "smoke-eaters" to help to filter the air. While smokers may not represent a giant portion of the restaurant's business, he said, they do generate a significant amount of money for bartenders and wait staff who work in the bar.

As for the theory that eliminating smoking will encourage new, non-smoking patrons to frequent the bar, Campbell said he was not convinced. "There's probably some truth to that, but I don't think that group outweighs the group that might leave because you can no longer smoke," he said.

Godzik said if the warrant article was approved, he would not be surprised to see a statewide ban on smoking before the town's three variances expire in 2005.

Wastewater woes still dog AvalonBay project

May seek pipe on 3A

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Treated wastewater that would be discharged into a surface system is prohibited if it drains to a drinking water supply.

From the town's perspective it may not quite be "game, set, match" as a Zoning Board of Appeals consultant said Tuesday about Avalon's proposed sewer treatment plant, but it's definitely not deuce.

In an impressive Power Point presentation Water Commission consultants made a compelling case to the ZBA that the proposed wastewater treatment facility for the 200-unit apartment complex drains, at least in part, toward Lily Pond, the town's water supply.

That's a "no-no" to put it the simplest terms under both state and federal environmental regulations.

Treated wastewater that would be discharged into a surface system is prohibited if it drains to a drinking water supply.

Avalon and its consultants argued they don't believe the water flows toward Lily Pond but toward the Weir River, which would be allowed. But the Water Commission employed the help of a consultant that traced silt from Cohasset Heights Landfill, which is in the proposed Avalon Cohasset neighborhood, to bolster the argument the wetlands near the site are all contiguous, and at least some of the surface water would flow from the proposed wastewater treatment plant toward Lily Pond.

Avalon proposes construction of a plant that would handle 40,400 gallons per day of wastewater from the 200 units with 364 bedrooms with surface water discharge to an on-site wetlands system.

Norfolk Ram, consultants for the Water Commission, said control of discharges to the Lily Pond watershed is required to protect public health and ensure a safe drinking water supply.

The discussion was part of the continued hearing on Avalon's application for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law. Under 40B, a developer can skirt most of a town's zoning regulations in exchange for providing a percentage of affordable housing. Cohasset is vulnerable to comprehensive permits because it has so little housing deemed affordable by state standards.

Despite what the Water Commission thinks, however, Avalon believes the final determination about which way the surface water flows should be left up the state Department of Environmental Protection and the federal Environmental Protection Agency. Avalon would like the ZBA to condition the comprehensive permit on its being able to obtain the surface water discharge permit from the DEP. In other words, it doesn't think the ZBA should play the role of hydrologist and scientist and should let the state and federal environmental agencies wear that hat.

However, while trying to resolve this issue, Avalon would also like to pursue a "parallel path", according to project proponent Scott Dale. That path would send the treated wastewater via a pipe to the front of the site and about 500 feet down Route 3A where there would be no question that it would discharge into the Weir River watershed, which is not a drinking water supply.

Dale went so far as to say Avalon hoped to seek the support of the town before the Sewer Commission that could accept the force main for the town because MassHighway — that owns 3A — doesn't want to be in the surface water disposal business.

He explained Avalon would pay for the installation of the pipe and maintenance of the system.

ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick described the surface water permit as a "key issue — a make it or break it" issue for the project. The board took the matter under advisement. The next Avalon hearing is slated for Feb. 24.

Group eyes landfill for platform tennis facility

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Unlike tennis, however, the ball is allowed to be played after it rebounds off the screen.

Platform tennis could soon be coming to Cohasset.

Pam Wilson of the South Shore Platform Tennis Association has proposed a plan to build two platform tennis courts on the site of the old landfill behind the Recycling and Transfer Station.

Wilson, a Cohasset resident, put the idea before Selectmen Tuesday night and was met with a warm response. Selectman Merle Brown was particularly surprised how much he learned about the sport from Wilson's proposal. "I didn't know anything about it before, now I think I'm an expert," he said.

Platform tennis, Wilson told the Selectmen, is a worldwide sport played in Canada, Europe and across the United States. The sport was invented as a winter substitute for tennis and is primarily a doubles game, played on a 30 ft. by 60 ft. court that is enclosed by 12 ft. high chicken wire screens.

Unlike tennis, however, the ball is allowed to be played after it rebounds off the screen.

The result is a fast-paced game that makes for some interesting shots and requires superior teamwork.

"It has been described as the 'chess game of racquet sports'" and "requires the patience of a tortoise combined with the speed of a hare," Wilson wrote in the proposal.

Wilson said construction of the two courts, to be connected by a deck and a warming hut, would be funded by the more than 40 members of the South Shore Platform Tennis Association, who have been planning to build a facility for more that a year. Utilities and maintenance would be funded by membership dues.

Since the town-owned land would be used for a recreational benefit to the town, the association would lease the land at a cost of $1 per year. The structures are removable and would not be permanent, Wilson said.

Selectmen asked Wilson contact the Board of Health about a plan to connect underground utility wires to the courts. They are also looking for more details regarding parking and insurance policies.

Wilson is preparing a draft of a licensing agreement with the town for her next meeting with Selectmen.

Many fine citizens nominated for annual award

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Mariner received 20 nominations from 47 individuals and groups for the annual Citizen of the Year Award. A selection committee consisting of Jody Butman of Spring Street; Roger Whitley of Cedar Lane; Peter Whittemore of Elm Court; and editor Mary Ford pored over the nominees at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square on Saturday and selected Arthur Lehr of North Main Street for the annual award.

The other nominees were:

• Steve Bobo, who as chairman of the Board of Health, is providing guidance and useful information on so many health-related issues; and for providing careful, meaningful and intelligent answers to health questions;

• R. Murray Campbell for his regular letters to the editor that keep others informed and often provide the catalyst for others to write; and for his leadership of the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation;

• John Coe for his volunteer work at the Senior Center, St. Anthony's, South Shore Hospital, to name a few; and for being a good neighbor and friend;

• Jack DeLorenzo for his dedication to youth as a school administrator at CMHS; and for his involvement with the Second Congregational Church; Lightkeeper's Corp. and more.

• Dr. Steve Golden for unselfishly coming to the aid of anyone who needs medical attention; and for always being there for the children and young adults for sports physicals and at sports events;

• June Hubbard for saving a man in Little Harbor by rowing against the current and towing him to shore; and for all her volunteer work at the library, lifesaving museum, and more.

• Harold W. Litchfield for his many years of dedication to the town as head of the DPW; and for going above and beyond the call of duty in so many ways;

• Polly Logan for her continued generosity, volunteerism and leadership to her town, state and country, including as vice chairman of the state Republican Party encouraging more women to run for office and to get involved in government;

• John McNabb for the countless hours he has put in working tirelessly to protect and save the town's most valuable asset, its water supply;

• Kathy O'Malley, for her leadership as co-president of the Cohasset Historical Society providing the inspiration and encouragement for the society's purchase of the Paul Pratt building;

• Wigmore Pierson and Jacqueline Dormitzer for putting the new volume of the history of Cohasset on the local best seller list.

• Nelson C. Pratt, Jr. for his lifetime of support for the Boys Scouts, Rainbow Girls and more;

• Rich Silvia for his tireless and dedicated effort to acquire the Barnes property for the benefit of the citizens of Cohasset; and for his service to the town on a range of committees over the years;

• Rob Spofford for his leadership on the School Building Committee that brought the school projects in on time and on budget;

• Joyce "Jeff" Steele for volunteering with the scouts, at the Village Fair, Meals on Wheels, and at the Social Service League.

• Marjorie Steele for giving hope and positive nourishment to those in need through steadfastly managing the Cohasset Food Pantry;

• Ham Tewksbury for his hard work as a member of the Government Island Study Committee, Hagerty Committee, and Historic Commission for driving the Senior Shuttle, and for his wonderful sense of humor.

• Patience Towle for her nonstop work for the library, first as member and then President of the Friends; as a member of the Board of Trustees; and as chairwoman of the Library Building Committee;

• David Wadsworth, Town Archivist and member of the Cohasset Historical Commission, board of Cohasset Central Cemetery, and Cohasset Historical Society for his care and love of the town's history over the years, including gaining recognition for various properties on the National Register.

Lehr has a lifelong commitment to Cohasset

nees Saturday, decided the time had come to honor Lehr, who has dedicated his life to his "adopted" hometown.

"I can't call myself a native," he chuckles. "I moved here from Maine when I was three."

Apart from service in the Navy during World War II, Lehr hasn't spent much time away from Cohasset. In fact, right after being called up Lehr's ship anchored briefly off the coast and he could see the piles of Irish moss on Sandy Beach.

"I thought, 'I'll get back here as soon as I can,'" he recalls, "but I was away 4-1/2 years." However, during that time, he met a beautiful redhead while on leave in San Diego, and married her 1-1/2 years later.

Lehr and his wife, Roberta, who passed away about two years ago, have three sons and four grandchildren.

Over the years, the retired insurance businessman has been involved in myriad good works, and always as a volunteer — whether that be mowing the "cap" of the town landfill with his red tractor or serving as the town's Civil Defense Director.

The common denominator has been Lehr's dogged determination to see things through and to serve others, a lesson he says he learned from his parents.

The Citizen of the Year selection committee consisting of Jody Butman of Spring Street; Peter Whittemore of Elm Court; Roger Whitley of Cedar Lane and editor Mary Ford reviewed the 20 candidates nominated by 42 individuals and groups at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square on Saturday.

Although not reached without considerable discussion about all the nominees, the committee's decision to honor Lehr was unanimous.

Joe Buckley of Linden Drive put it best in his nomination of Lehr.

"Arthur is a kind, loveable man, a very nice gentleman. He is the citizen of a lot of years," Buckley wrote.

Here's are some of Lehr's contributions to the town he loves:

• Scoutmaster of Boy Scout Troop 28 for 25 years, and Explorer Adviser of Post 28 for another 25 years; he is still active as the Troop's Eagle Scout advancement chairman;

• Served on the Zoning Board of Appeals;

• Served as a Registrar of Voters for many years;

• Clerk of the Works for the new DPW garage at no cost to the town;

• Has served on the Recycling Committee for 20 years;

• Is the Civil Defense Director for the town;

• Served on the Gravel Pit Reuse Committee, and as volunteer Clerk of the Works for the new Little League Complex;

• Clerk of the Works at Mariners Park, again at no cost to the town;

• Appalachia Service Project volunteer

• Active member of the Second Congregational Church and served on the building committee for the church addition.

Jane Long of Cedar Street says Lehr has been on so many committees that she couldn't name them all. But she said he exemplifies volunteerism.

"He is always giving his time and energy to the town," she wrote in her nomination. "When you drive by Wheelwright Park, you will often see him clearing the wooded area in front of the park. Often he can be seen at the RTF working in one of the areas or placing bottle recyclables in his or another vehicle to take to a bottle recycling center."

Allan MacDonald, who has served alongside Lehr on the Recycling Committee, says Lehr epitomizes the quiet and humble but deeply dedicated commitment to public service.

"Arthur Lehr is a Cohasset native son who from the goodness of his heart has instinctively and unstintingly toiled to better the character of Cohasset's people and to better the woods, fields and byways of our rare town," MacDonald stated.

In an interview in the home he helped build back in 1945, Lehr isn't far from family. His three sons live in town and one son, Phil, now runs the insurance business out of the home office at 200 N. Main St.

Phil Lehr is keeping an cautious eye on his father, whose heart surgery took place in December. But despite having to get a little more rest – even Phil admits his dad has "a new lease on life."

And Arthur Lehr says he has no plans to stop making a contribution in any way he can.

"I'm 83 and counting," he says.

On top of the environmental soapbox

Harvard and MIT's Sloan School of Management, where she is also a senior lecturer. She has served on the boards of several non-profit organizations including MASSInc., a non-partisan political group whose mission is to develop a public agenda to promote a growing middle class; Harvard's Environment and Natural Resources Program housed at the Kennedy School of Government; and the Kennedy's School Environment Council. She is also a member of the Kennedy School's Women's Leadership Board, that advises the dean on policy issues.

Roy Herzfelder was also a founder, owner and senior manager of International Energy Company that owned and operated electric power plants. Her family sold the business to Florida Power and Light in 1998. She is proud of IEC's environmental conscience, which was the cornerstone of the business.

"We started one of the cleanest, most environmentally friendly energy companies in the state," she says.

The Newton native who moved to Cohasset with her family in 1978 shares Romney's vision of "smart growth" – a catch phrase that means business and the environment can co-exist and benefit one another.

So while advocating for the environment, Roy Herzfelder says she also understands business has to be part of the solution in protecting air quality, waterways, coastlines and more.

As head of Environmental Affairs, Roy Herzfelder oversees 3,000 people in five agencies, including the state Department of Environmental Protection, the Department of Environmental Management, the Department of Fisheries and Wildlife, the Metropolitan District Commission and the Department of Food and Agriculture. She also sits on the board of the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA).

As the governor looks to consolidating and trimming agencies in order to handle the budget crisis, Roy Herzfelder says environmental issues won't be compromised.

"The core missions of the agencies will remain in tact," she says.

Although a cabinet position is appointed, Roy Herzfelder is politically savvy and knows how to lobby for causes. She was one of the forces behind her husband Bruce Herzfelder's strong campaign to win the Sept. 17 Republican primary for state treasurer. Although Herzfelder lost to Dan Grabauskas [now the new Sec. of Transportation], the close race was one of the last ones to be called that night.

The Roy name may be synonymous with great personal wealth, but the family is also known for contributing to the public good. As examples, Roy Herzfelder's brother Peter Roy is the driving force behind a private organization that has worked with the town to secure grant money to revitalize Cohasset Village and harbor. His wife, Leah Taylor Roy, is active in the Gems of Hope organization that helps women in the poorest countries and is also helping lead the effort to build a children's museum in Cohasset that would be open to all.

Roy Herzfelder said both her parents lived through difficult times during the Great Depression and handed down to their five children an appreciation of what America has to offer. Their father grew up in foster care and their mother, a first-generation American, was a school teacher.

"They had a feeling of excitement and gratitude of being part of this place and passed that down to me," Roy Herzfelder says.

Part of her new duties include working with other governors on concerns about air quality. She explains while Massachusetts may be doing great cleaning up its air – prevailing winds send the problems from the "old coal plant" environment of other states to our region.

Roy Herzfelder — who loves to kayak , hike, collect seashells and is a self-professed amateur "birder in her "free" time — has air quality initiatives, land conservation, and water resources protection, all on her agenda. She will try to coordinate those efforts with sound economic development. As she says, it's a "tall order" but one that she is ready to accept.

"It's a grand opportunity for me to contribute in a way that is so exciting," she says. "Being Secretary of Environmental Affairs in Massachusetts is really a big deal."

Lawyer finds more homes on small lots

Egan strip building permits from two homes and rescind certificates of occupancy from at least four others. Like Ayer's home, all of the cases allegedly involved instances on undersized lots where homes were razed and replaced with bigger structures.

Egan said last week the six homes in question were the "same cases" as 3 Jerusalem Lane but he would need to discuss the matter with Town Counsel before issuing a decision.

If Sawyer's request is granted, the affected homeowners would be required to go through the same special permit process that Ayer will now undergo.

When asked why he had not been able to issue a decision on the matter, Egan said Town Counsel advised him "it's not a strict deadline." He also said he would decide on the matter within a week.

Egan has said before that he may not rule on the matter at all. Town Counsel Paul DeRensis said it is unclear whether the Zoning Board intended its initial decision regarding Ayer's home to be retroactive, which could be why Egan is undecided.

Sawyer said she will appeal any non-decision to the Zoning Board of Appeals.

GIMME SHELTER

Mitzi is a young Calico/Torty mix who is big on affection and very cuddly.

If you can help Mitzi, or another cat find a home, please contact the Hull Seaside Animal Rescue, a non-profit organization staffed entirely by volunteers, at 781-925-8584. Hope for more funds fades

At their meeting last Thursday, School Committee members were not ready to agree that the need for janitorial staff warranted making additional cuts in teaching staff or supplies just yet. Instead, they hoped the town would make up the difference, either by allowing the schools to tap the stabilization fund or by promising to make more funding available by fall Town Meeting.

Neither of those options seemed likely at the Board of Selectmen's meeting Tuesday. With the town already cash-strapped in its own right, no suggestions were made by Selectmen to increase the school budget. Any hopes of tapping the $3 million stabilization fund, set aside for paying the debt service on the town's two new school projects, were also temporarily squashed.

"The one big problem with the stabilization fund is that you're only getting those funds for one year," said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan.

"It multiplies the problem," said Maureen Jerz, a member of the Advisory Committee.

At this point, any further increase in the school budget would raise the amount of the general override, pegged at $486,000.

Rick Flynn, chairman of the School Committee, has said repeatedly that raising the override number too much could jeopardize its chances of passing. "Realistically, we know we want to hit $485,000 for an override number," Flynn told the Selectmen. "We voted on a 4.7 percent increase, but we're here to tell you that we're prepared to go to 4 percent."

In the coming weeks, the School Committee will have to revisit its budget to prepare for more cuts to get within the $434,000 increase in funding that Haddad originally proposed.

The School Committee arrived at its current budget after a series of cuts to allow for new, mostly mandatory expenses totaling $833,000. While janitorial staff will cost $75,000, salaries will cost an additional $420,000 next year. Sewer use, a cost that was previously picked up by the town, will cost about $31,000. Unemployment will cost an additional $10,500, and utilities are expected to cost an additional $26,000. Special education will be an additional $206,000.

In the coming weeks, the School Committee will have to revisit its budget to prepare for more cuts to get within the $434,000 increase in funding that Haddad originally proposed.

Also, a new math teacher at the high school will cost about $40,000, and a special education clerk, a position suggested by the state because of an apparent "paper logjam" in the town's special education program, will cost $25,000.

The School Committee has made cuts totaling about $325,000.

A position vacated by a retirement at the Osgood School will not be filled, and three retiring teachers at the Middle-High School will be replaced by teachers at or around starting salary. The two moves will save the schools about $171,000.

An adjustment councilor at the Middle-High School will be laid off, with the position's duties absorbed by guidance councilors, saving $60,000. A Middle School special education teacher will be laid off, saving $32,000, and supplies will be reduced district-wide, by about 10 percent on most line items, saving about $61,000.

Two part-time health positions, one at the Osgood School and one at the Deer Hill School, will be also be dropped. The positions were previously funded by a federal grant that was cut last year. This year, money was taken from other areas of the budget to accommodate for the lack of the grant. Cutting the positions will save an additional $32,000 from showing up on the fiscal year 2004 budget.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo warned Tuesday that if the override did not pass, "there will be many teachers removed from our school system. It will be absolutely disastrous. Our school system will be worse off as a result."

Flynn said that if additional expenses in special education came up, the committee would be forced to seek the town's help. "Special education — the way the rules work and the way the law is set up — we don't have a choice," he said. "It falls under the education budget but it's a town-wide issue."

Haddad told the School Committee to prepare for another meeting soon after the governor's version of the budget for fiscal year 2004 becomes available on Feb. 26.

Haddad is budgeting for a $232,000 cut in local aid for fiscal year 2004, but a 20 percent cut, which is considered the "worst-case scenario," would amount to a loss of $436,000. Sullivan was doubtful the cuts will be that large because schools statewide would bear the brunt of the cost.

Haddad said the $58,000 cut in local aid for fiscal year 2003 will be absorbed by the town's free cash, which totals about $300,000. "We're four months away from the end of the fiscal year. It's too late to make cuts," he said.

Wires vote may have pulled plug on new village lighting

Parking layout also questioned

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Craig Miller of the Waterfield Design Group said the overall design of the village had been complicated by the fact that the $800,000 debt exclusion override to pay for burying utility wires did not pass.

Representatives from Waterfield — which was hired by the town to design the village revitalization project — met to discuss streetscape improvements at Town Hall Tuesday night with village merchants, abutters and other interested residents.

Miller said it is unclear whether Victorian-style lighting will still be feasible because sidewalk space will be taken up by utility poles. He said he was unsure how much it would cost to install smaller conduits to allow burying wires only for lampposts.

"The question comes down to do we really want two sets of poles, and we really don't have an answer yet," he said.

Tom Hamilton of Dean and Hamilton Realtors said he is considering raising money for burying larger conduits and constructing manholes so utility wires could be buried in the future.

That plan, according to Miller, would cost about $400,000. "That makes a lot of sense because you want this to be the last time you dig up the downtown," he said.

Miller said construction on the project would probably begin in mid-April and would last eight to nine months. The likely plan, he said, was that construction would be limited to one side of the street at a time.

On the stretch of South Main Street from Brook Street to Elm Street, for example, the road would essentially be divided into four equal sections. While construction took place on one section, the other section on the same side of the street would be used for parking, and the opposite side of the road would be open to two-way traffic.

The same method would be used on Elm Street and on South Main Street between Elm Street and Depot Court. Both are stretches of road where merchants feel maintaining parking spots during construction will be crucial for business.

Miller said nighttime construction and a plan that would limit South Main Street to only pedestrian traffic would allow work to go faster. However, he said, those methods were all but ruled out due to concerns from abutters and merchants.

Cliff Chase, owner of Village Wine and Spirits, said construction shouldn't start until the fall. "Cohasset is very busy in the summer. I know my business is going to be devastated by this," he said.

"The question comes down to do we really want two sets of poles, and we really don't have an answer yet."

— Craig Miller of the Waterfield Design Group

Miller said waiting until the fall would mean the project would need to be delayed through the winter and would probably cost more, though he did not know by how much.

Tensions rose at the meeting when discussion moved to parking. Miller said a new, curbed sidewalk on Elm Street will prevent people from parking on the curb as happens now, resulting in a reduction of parking spots from about 20 to 10.

Merchants and residents seemed to feel the loss of spots would not be compensated by the fact that parking would increase in the town parking lot by about 30 spots.

"Functionally, it's a step backwards," said William Donovan, an employee at Hingham Institution for Savings. "Pedestrian access is a little bit improved, but at what price?"

Miller said making Elm Street one-way would have allowed for more parking spots, but the plan already met with disapproval from most residents.

A planned crosswalk that would link a path from the town parking lot to the opposite side of South Main Street was also not looked highly upon by most who attended the meeting. The crosswalk would eliminate three potential parking spots, although the total number of spots on South Main Street would remain at 18.

Again, merchants and residents agreed additional parking would be far more valuable than what would be the third crosswalk within a block.

"If that row (of parking spots) is full, people do not stop there," said Wayne Sawchuk.

"Basically what they're doing is eliminating parking space when all we need is more," said Roger Hill.

Hill, who is running for a seat on the Board of Selectmen, said the current plans would not go over well with the DPW because sidewalk extensions at crosswalks and corners would make parking spots difficult to plow.

"Every DPW director in the state" would be against the plan, Miller said, "but it's really a lot safer for the pedestrian."

Hill also said the enlarged corners would make turning dangerous for larger vehicles like fire trucks.

Miller said that's an exaggeration — in his view, the extensions actually force people to drive more carefully by narrowing the road and making cars slow down.

Despite their differences, Miller said he would take suggestions from merchants, abutters and residents to the Board of Selectmen, but several people attending the meeting wanted to deliver the message themselves.

"You've got to get used to the fact that you cannot do some of this," said Jim Watson, owner of Cohasset Hardware.

"You're not representing us," said Sawchuk.

Miller said the Board of Selectmen will likely vote on a final version of village streetscape improvement plans by the end of February.

Nomination papers deadline looms

Time is running out for those who wish to run for elected town offices. No new candidates sought nomination papers this week.

Potential candidates have until Feb. 18 to secure 50 signatures from registered voters to make them eligible for the April 5 election. Seats up for election include:

- Board of Selectmen. Michael Sullivan will seek reelection. Roger Hill and Gabriel Gomez have taken out papers for Sullivan's seat;
- Board of Assessors. Michael Patrolia, who is running for re-election;
- Board of Trustees for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Agnes McCann, Patience Towle and Carol Riley, who will all run for re-election;
- Board of Health. Margaret Chapman will seek re-election;
- Planning Board. Robert H. Sturdy will seek re-election;
- Recreation Commission. Richard Barrow will seek re-election;
- School Committee. Rick Flynn and Chartis Tebbetts will both seek re-election;
- Sewer Commission. Gary Vanderweil will not seek re-election, but John Beck is running;
- Water Commission. John McNabb will seek another term.

Series on Alzheimer's care

The Norwell Visiting Nurse Association (NVNA), through a generous grant from South Shore Elder Services, is pleased to present a six-part, free public series called Caring Connections: Alzheimer's Caregiver Education and Support Program.

This program was launched on Jan. 16 and will continue until Feb. 20. Sessions are held every Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Sunrise Assisted Living facility, located at 125 King St. (Rte. 3A). Participants are given the opportunity to ask questions to further their understanding of key topics. Thus far, attendees have learned more about such topics as "Challenges and Activities of Daily Living" and Care for the Caregiver."

Upcoming topics for the remaining three weeks of the series are:

• Feb. 6: "Adapting the Home Environment" with guest speakers Laurie Galvin, RPT and Kris Leary, RPT.

• Feb. 13: "Maintaining Family Relationships" with facilitator Barbara Tortorella, LICSW.

Sessions are held every Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Sunrise Assisted Living facility, located at 125 King St. (Rte. 3A).

• Feb. 20: "Legal and Financial Issues" with guest speakers Mary Cedrone, Protective Services and Elder At Risk Supervisor at South Shore Elder Services and Attorney Thomas F. Williams, who specializes in wills and estate planning.

The NVNA Alzheimer's team includes: Barbara Tortorella, LICSW; Gerry Sanderson, BSN; Janet Sennett, MEd, RN; Kris Leary, RPT; and Meg Doherty, NVNA Executive Director and Adult Nurse Practitioner. The team is presenting this program to help caregivers and families understand the nature of the disease and provide them with the ability to meet the needs of their loved ones or friends.

The public is invited to attend any or all of the sessions in this series. All sessions will take place at Cohasset's Sunrise Assisted Living facility. For directions, please call 781-383-6300. For more information about the Caring Connections series, please call Barbara Tortorella at 781-659-2342 ext. 357.

All proceeds will be donated to Bread & Jams, Inc. Self-advocacy Programs.

Bread & Jams is a 501(C)3 non-profit day shelter for men, women and youth located in Harvard Square at the Old Cambridge Baptist Church at 1151 Mass. Ave., Cambridge. The web site is at www.breadandjams.org

Since 1989 Bread & Jams has been providing shelter from the cold and rain, food, shower facilities, clean clothing, health care, job and housing counseling in a caring environment for those who find themselves homeless or in transition. With this year's crippling State and Federal cutbacks, this event will allow those who do not think of themselves as wealthy philanthropists to make a collective difference that will keep the shelter alive. Dress creatively, come and have compassion and fun at the same time.

Numerous merchants, restaurateurs and local artists and friends from both South Shore communities and Harvard Square have donated gift certificates, tickets to major sporting events and works of art for raffle and silent auction. The Atlantica Restaurant is donating the hall and hors d'oeuvres. There will be a cash bar and dinner reservations can be placed with the Atlantica at 781-383-0900. Featured entertainment by The Joe Micarelli Trio, The Full Moon Revue, and Shaken Not Stirred - all donating their energy to this timely cause. Donations are $25 per person. Tables and blocks of tickets are also available. RSVP by mailed invitation please as a limited number of tickets will be available at the door. ENGAGEMENTS

Amy Kathleen Brown and Joshua Kenneth Roth

Brown - Roth

John Brown Jr. and Huguette Brown formerly of Scituate, announce the engagement of their daughter, Amy Kathleen Brown to Joshua Kenneth Roth. Joshua is the son of Kenneth and Colleen Roth of Cohasset.

Miss Brown graduated from Boston College in 2000 and is currently the Tasting Room Manager at Jonathan Edwards Winery in North Stonington, Conn.

Mr. Roth, a UMASS Boston graduate is currently employed by Pfizer, Groton as a research scientist while also pursuing his masters in chemistry at The University of Rhode Island.

An Autumn 2003 wedding is planned.

African dance band at Coffeehouse should not be missed

On Saturday, Feb. 15, at 8 p.m., the Old Ship Church's Coffeehouse off the Square presents Boston's premier African dance band, Rumbafrica. Congo's Tshibangu Kadima and his exotically costumed international musicians, singers, and dancers draw on contemporary and traditional Congolese, Cuban, and other styles and rhythms towards one end — great dance music. They include the sweet vocal harmonies and lilting dance rhythms of classic Congolese Rumba, as well as guitar theatrics, percussion breakdowns, and traditional dancing.

The coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham Square.

Tickets are $10 at the door and coffees, teas, cider, and homemade desserts are 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian/Universalist Service Committee. For more information, contact: Jim Watson, 781-749-1767 or John Leonard, 781-749-2852.

Where rowing is a year-round sport

Buckley crew readies for indoor competition

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

At 5 ft.10 ins., his height is less than ideal for the sport. He was never on the crew team in college, and he looks more like a coxswain than a powerhouse rower.

Still, Jack Buckley is making the sport of rowing accessible and enjoyable for anyone in Cohasset who wants to take part.

As director of the Cohasset Maritime Institute, Buckley supervises rowing programs for kids and adults throughout the year. In the summer, he coaches them in open water races like the Head of the Weir and the Minot's Light Roundabout. In the winter, he leads them in workouts and takes them to land-based competitions, where "ERG" rowing machines take the place of boats.

"It's kind of like the Boston Marathon where people of all different ages and abilities compete in the event with the elite."
— Jack Buckley

Last weekend, Buckley accompanied a few students from Cohasset High School to the John Liffman Challenge, held in conjunction with the Hull Lifesaving Museum at the Lillian M. Jacobs School in Hull. It was a training run for a bigger event, the CRASH-B Sprints World Indoor Rowing Championship, which will take place on Feb. 23 in Boston at Roxbury Community College's Reggie Lewis Track and Athletic Center.

So what does CRASH-B stand for? Charles River All-Star Has-Beens, otherwise known as the former rowing rock stars who ruled the river in their college days.

But the race is open to everyone, and Buckley — who is also a teacher at Cohasset Middle High School — will take a group of about 10 students along with him. "It's kind of like the Boston Marathon where people of all different ages and abilities compete in the event with the elite," he said. "It's the place where people are really trying to achieve their personal best."

Buckley still remembers when he first started rowing 12 years ago. It was a clear, calm winter day in Hull, and he had had to push the traditional wooden boat he was in through chunks of ice to avoid getting stuck.

Since then, Buckley has fallen in love with the sport, working closely with rowing programs at both the Hull Lifesaving Museum and the Cohasset Maritime Institute.

The students under Buckley's tutelage seem to reflect his enthusiasm for the sport. A few of them took part in the 2000 meter sprint at last weekend's Liffman Challenge, named for John Liffman, a Hull resident who is Buckley's assistant at CMI.

"The point is to put everything into it so you hardly have anything left," said Brittany Novak, a junior at Cohasset High, still half-winded from the race. "It's a full body workout. It's mainly legs, but you get your arms in there, your back and your abs too."

For Alice Bellone, a sophomore, the race was a good warm-up. She was about five seconds off her personal best, but glad to get the nerves out the way before the bigger competition later this month. "I think I got it out of my system," she said.

Alice's mother, Stefenie Thieleman, also competed in the event. "It's so much fun that we can enjoy the same sport," she said. "What's really fun is that it's intergenerational, especially at the Liffman Challenge. You've got teenagers competing against people in their 50s."

After the 2000 meter race, it was Buckley's turn to compete, but not before drilling a group of youngsters with a wind sprint. "Come on, two minutes. Best you can. This is for bragging rights," he told them.

The race Buckley competed in was a biathlon — a 5000 meter row followed by a 2-1/2 mile run through the hills of Point Allerton. A small crowd gathered in the foyer of the Jacobs School while the four competitors in the adult heat saddled their ERG machines.

Buckley's competition was stiff — or better yet, just plain tall. Buckley seemed about six inches smaller than the two middle-aged men and one college student whom he would race against.

"The point is to put everything into it so you hardly have anything left."

— Brittany Novak, a junior at Cohasset High

Still, he was unfazed. As he untangled his headphones, Ed McCabe, the director of the Hull Lifesaving Museum, asked what he was listening to.

"It's the same music I've listened to the last five Liffman Challenges — a little Sting," Buckley said.

Sting? Where's the heavy metal?

"There's a couple of slow songs you kind of suffer through," he explained.

By the time the race was 15 minutes old, Buckley was breathing deeply and gritting his teeth with each stroke, but it was unclear if a Sting song was to blame.

Meanwhile, from the sidelines, Liffman talked about his work with Buckley at CMI. "We're hoping to develop it into a significant sized program. It's already started to go that way," he said. "Cohasset is lucky to have a guy like Jack."

Buckley finished the rowing portion to a giant round of applause, with a time of 18:21. He was in third, less than minute behind the leader, but after a slow transition, he was last to start the run.

While the adults raced through the hills, younger competitors marveled at the finishing times frozen on the tiny screens of the ERGs. McCabe prepped the group for the next heat. "You saw what happened up here. It's ugly," he told them. "Prepare to get ugly."

Twenty minutes later, the adults filtered in. Buckley finished third, just behind the second place finisher — a good grind. "The hill was too steep," he joked. "My legs are too short."

Kick, step aerobics

It's not too soon to think about the beach...The Cohasset Recreation Department announces a six-week adult fitness class, to begin March 4. Master martial arts and certified aerobic trainer Charles Palmer will conduct the class.

This 70-minute class will provide participants with a total body workout through high-energy instruction in step aerobics, kickboxing, and muscle conditioning.

The class will meet Tuesday and Thursday mornings in the Town Hall auditorium from 9 to 10:15 a.m. The cost for this 12 session class is $100 per participant. Call the Recreation Department at 781-383-4109 to register.

Mr. Palmer holds seventh degree black belt in Kempo Karate, has achieved the title of Sifu (teacher) in Shaolin Kung Fu, is head of the National Association of Kickboxing Instruction, and is chief instructor of the Puma Self Defense Center in Quincy. In addition to his distinction martial arts, Palmer is both a certified master fitness trainer and professional aerobic instructor. He has been a staff aerobic instructor for members of Universe Gym, World Gym, and the Boston Athletic Club.

Step equipment will be provided for up to 20 participants, however 2 to5 lb. hand weights should be brought to class for the muscle conditioning segment of the training. Register for the class today and make a commitment to shape up before it's time to "suit up".

EDITORIAL

Citizen of the Year

As editor of the Cohasset Mariner, it is my pleasure to announce that Arthur Lehr is the Citizen of the Year. The father of three and grandfather of four has touched countless lives through his vocal support of many projects and causes during a lifetime in town.

You'd be hard pressed to find a worthwhile project or volunteer effort that Mr. Lehr hasn't been involved with over the past 50 years or so.

Mr. Lehr simply states he believes in service to others and derives a great deal of satisfaction by helping out as a volunteer.

He's been nominated often over the years for the Citizen of the Year, but the four-member committee decided this — the 10th year of the award — was time to honor Mr. Lehr.

Touched by the recognition, he couldn't stop smiling when interviewed this week.

While nominations were open, a total of 47 different individuals or families took the time to propose a citizen for the annual award — detailing his or her contributions to help make this town we all love a better place. The selection committee consisting of Jody Butman, Peter Whittemore, Roger Whitley and myself met at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square on Saturday to pore over the heartfelt letters of nomination.

Allan MacDonald said in his nomination, "Arthur Lehr is a Cohasset native son who from the goodness of his heart has instinctively and unstintingly toiled to better the character of Cohasset's people and the better the woods, fields, and byways of our rare town."

Jane Long said, "he loves giving of himself both to the town and all its citizens."

Helen Pratt wrote, "Arthur is a man of character. He was a devoted husband, is a loving Dad and granddad, a long-time businessman and still finds time to volunteer."

And Joe Buckley wrote," Arthur is a kind, lovable man, a very nice gentleman. He is the citizen of a lot of years."

So we extend our warm congratulations to Mr. Lehr, who, despite the same pressures of everyday life that face us all, still finds the time to devote time to so many worthwhile projects and programs.

Blizzard of memories

The Boston Globe and the Boston Herald American cost 20 cents. Close Encounters of the Third Kind, The Goodbye Girl, and Saturday Night Fever were playing in the theatres. The Six Million Dollar Man was on TV on Monday nights at 8 p.m. M*A*S*H was still on the tube at 9 p.m. The Love Boat and Lou Grant came on at 10. Debbie Boone's "You Light Up My Life" played incessantly on AM radio stations.

It's hard to believe it, but this week marks the 25th anniversary of the Blizzard of 1978, a storm whose ferocity is still remembered after all these years. Like any monumental event in history — the assassinations of JFK and Martin Luther King or Sept. 11 — everyone remembers where they were during the great blizzard that shut down entire states here in the northeast for a week or more.

Those were the days when there were no SUVs or four-wheel drive vehicles. There were no cell phones or fax machines. No Internet. In other words, the world came to a halt as people slowly came to realize that this monster of a storm would keep them indefinitely from their workplaces, schools, airports, churches, shopping centers and food markets.

To this day, people marvel at how neighborhoods and communities came together to share food, a warm hearth and a helping hand, not to mention a shovel and a strong back. Nothing since has served to bring people together in such a completely caring way as perhaps Sept. 11, or before that, the Gulf War.

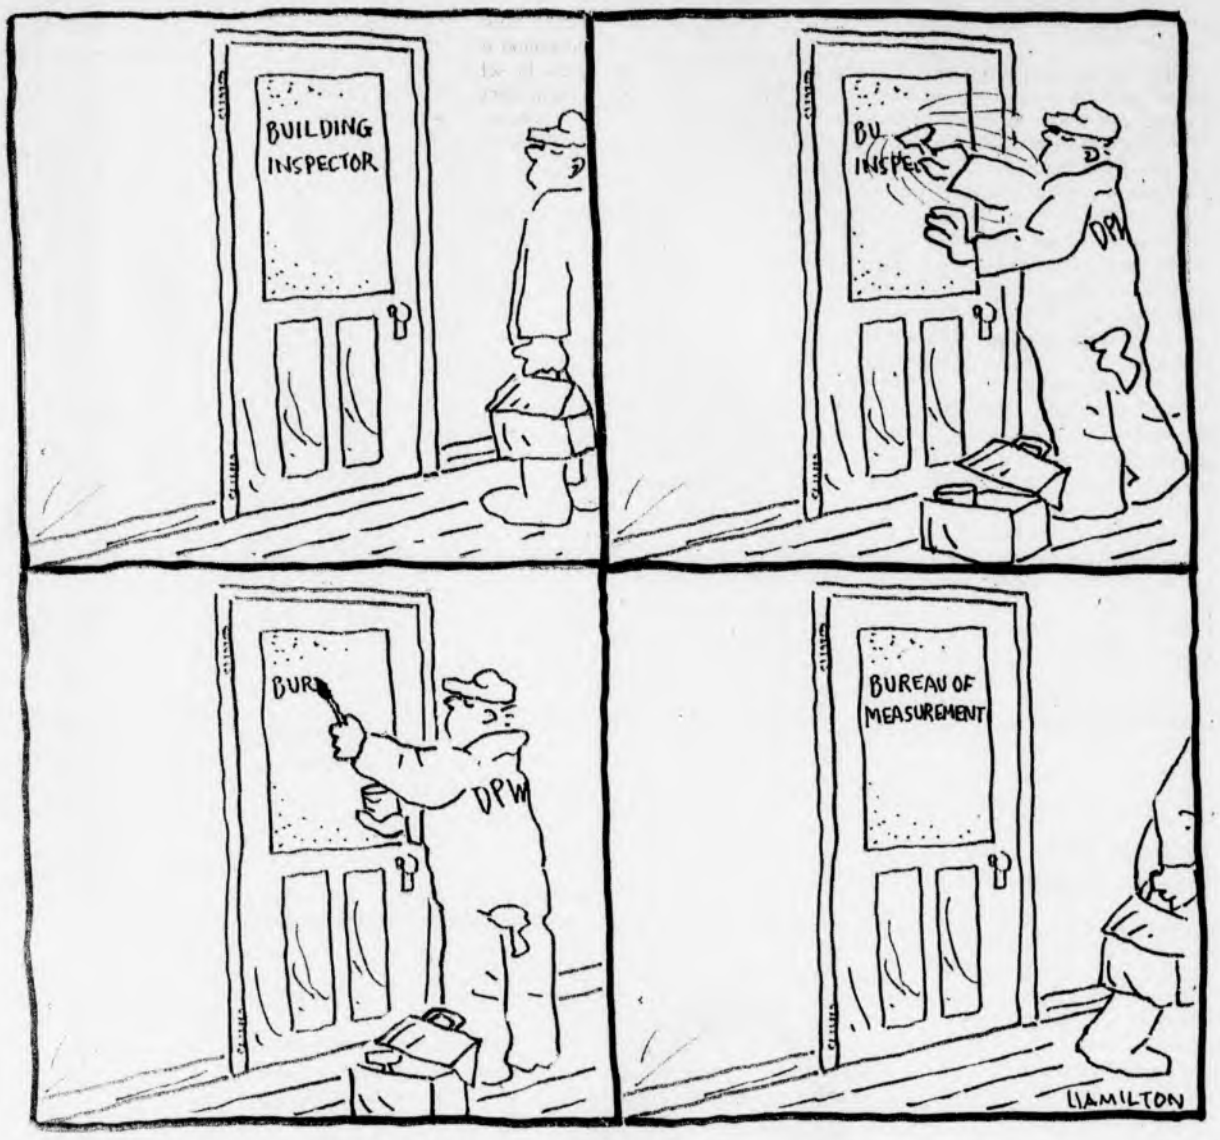
Everyone has their own special memories. Perhaps it's helping to dig out a neighbor's car (and everyone else's on the street), or moving the baby's crib away from underneath an upstairs ceiling leaking under the weight of melting snow. For others it's walking to the neighborhood grocery store for supplies — in a day when the neighborhood grocer was still around. Only to find the shelves empty. In some shoreline communities in New England, mountains of snow were deposited on beaches to melt. Cities and towns trucked the white stuff to the shore because they had nowhere else to put it.

Within days of the unforgettable storm, people turned up wearing "I Survived the Blizzard of '78" T-shirts.

All kinds of unanticipated problems came with the storm. Just as stores began to replenish their supplies, it was still impossible for many employees to get to work. Some banks stayed open extra hours to provide a check cashing service to people who had run out of money. In some cases, banks set a $50 to $200 limit so as not to run out of money themselves. Hospitals reported an increase in cardiac cases and a shortage of blood.

Some communities here on the South Shore, including Scituate, Hull and Holbrook, continued curfews in an effort to curb looting. Yes, despite all the goodwill the storm created, there was a downside. Randolph, Abington, Holbrook, Rockland, Braintree and Milton imposed restrictions on the sale of liquor.

Schoolchildren reveled in the snow days, building forts, making snowmen and doing all the things that children love to do when they're off from school for more than a week in the winter. The Blizzard of '78 probably drove moms everywhere crazy with cabin fever. It was a storm no one will ever forget.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Full disclosure warranted on local Peace Forum

TO THE EDITOR:

The recent "Peace Forum" concerning possible war with Iraq was deemed significant enough to have an article on the gathering reported in the Jan. 30 Cohasset Mariner. It is always a good thing for Americans to discuss and debate their government's policies, yet there is a need for full disclosure regarding the program.

While I did not attend the forum after reading the article I felt the most accurate comment was by Korean War veteran Peter Flynn of Braintree, who asked "why should we consider this anything but slick propaganda." Most of the individuals and organizations mentioned in the article are a "who's who" of anti-US activists.

Former US Attorney General Ramsay Clark is a fascinating case study of a man dedicated to attacking the US. This luminary of the loony left represented the Palestine Liberation Organization against the family of Leon Klinghoffer (the elderly US citizen thrown overboard from the Achille Lauro by PLO terrorists in 1986), defended Lyndon LaRouche on several occasions, defended Radovan Karadzic, leader of the Bosnian Serbs (who has been convicted of war crimes), and has been allied to the orthodox Stalinist sect, the Workers World Party (WWP). His cavorting with foils of the US such as Fidel Castro and Libyan dictator Colonel Quadafy can, and have, filled books. All this from a former member of the US corporate elite!

Scott Ritter has made a similar, if less dramatic flip from pro to anti-US. In 1998 Ritter resigned from his position as a UN weapons inspector, denouncing the Clinton administration for having withdrawn support for the U.N. agency and undermining inspections. He was widely quoted saying that Iraq had hidden numerous weapons of mass destruction (I served during this time in the US Mission to the United Nations working peacekeeping issues and there was official concern for Ritter's "grandstanding."). Ritter was then charged with spying, though he was not indicted. Increasingly hostile to the US, Ritter then visits Iraq on a trip organized by the Iraqi government (another similarity with Clark). Recent criminal charges of pedophilia against Ritter complete his resume (from an intelligence perspective this recent charge is significant as such shortcomings are commonly use to blackmail individuals of interest).

None of the above is to challenge the sincere beliefs or dedication of the South Shore Peace Forum or pacifists. It is to ensure that the public gets a full and complete picture of the individuals and groups that are supporting policies against the United States at such forums. I encourage the attendees and interested parties to do the research themselves. Also research and learn how Saddam Hussein and the September 11 terrorists think and what are their goals. Those of us in the intelligence community were relieved at the lack of damage from the attacks. Think of those planes loaded with biological, nuclear or chemical weapons. Pacifism is a valid individual choice, yet is irresponsible for a nation tasked with the protection of its citizens in a dangerous world.

Village support is appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to acknowledge the following Village businesses that pledged approximately $150,000 in financial support to help reduce the $800,000 expense of burying the overhead utility lines in the Village

The Red Lion Inn, Hub Shipping, Hingham Institution for Savings, Dean & Hamilton Realtors, Law Office of Richard Henderson, Flemings of Cohasset, Tedeschi's Food Shops, Erica Ford of Coldwell Banker Hunneman Hallmark, Stage Coach Way Realty Trust, On-line Cable Services, Inc, and the owners of Sixty South Main Street.

Their generosity would have significantly reduced the rate increase for each rate-payer in the community had the debt exclusion override passed on Jan. 25.

These businesses, and others who were in support of the project but unable to financially contribute, can be proud of their commitment to the village revitalization effort. By sharing some of the cost burden within the community, their generosity and vision would have made a lasting imprint on the Village business district.

Whether you supported the override election or not, please remember that local businesses, like many of you, are invested in not only the future prosperity of the overall community, but in preserving and enhancing the character of the Village.

MLK breakfast realized a dream

TO THE EDITOR:

On Monday, Jan. 20 the churches of Cohasset and the PSO Diversity Committee joined more than 100 celebrants to honor the life and teachings of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.. The Reverend Cliff Cutler of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church hosted guests from Cohasset and special honorees from Caribbean U-Turn, an urban ministry assisting Haitian youth.

Azia Carle, the daughter of METCO Coordinator Aleisa Gittens-Carle, read excerpts from Dr. King's biography, and Connie Afshar, a member of the Diversity Committee, read from Dr. King's Birmingham Jail Letter. Guests were treated to an inspirational sermon from the Reverend Mombeleur, pastor to members of Caribbean U-Turn in Mattapan.

Kay Doherty, Director of Sharing, Inc. and sponsor of the annual Good Friday Walk in Hingham, beautifully described her recent visit to Dr. King's Memorial in Atlanta. CHS students from the Social Awareness Committee welcomed and read stories to children in attendance. In a rare experience, followers of Christian, Muslim, Buddhist, Jewish, Unitarian, Greek Orthodox, Mormon and individual faiths held hands and sang "We Shall Overcome" on a frigid but bright Cohasset morning.

Two years ago, Cohasset's METCO Coordinator Yvonne Jones shared her dream of holding a Martin Luther King, Jr. Breakfast right here in Cohasset. The town's churches and PSO Diversity Committee collaborated in bringing Ms. Jones' wish to a reality. We thank her for believing it could happen and we thank all the volunteers, pancake chefs, gospel singers, ministers, priests, pastors, parents, children and friends of Cohasset and Boston for making a special event come to life.

We look forward to sharing the celebration with more of you, in 2004.

HEALTH NOTES

Considering tough measures to fight obesity in our children

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This column has argued tirelessly about the need to reduce factors which lead to obesity. The Board of Health is developing programs to enhance exercise, and proper diet, as well as many other inducements. So far, however we have stopped at issuing regulations. Somehow, we balk at issuing a regulation that says: "Thou shalt not eat too much." However, there are other approaches to regulations that may be more helpful.

We're fighting powerful forces, and it may be prudent to use regulations to even the playing field. For example, schools make unhealthy foods available in vending machines. Unhealthy foods are generally considered to be "energy-dense, nutrient-poor foods". Foods such as cookies, cakes, desserts, salty snack foods, candy, soda, coffee and tea, are generally put into this category.

Caterers for schools are required to make a profit, and also to provide popular foods. Sometimes these two factors are in opposition to the profit making incentives of food providers. For example, some schools have contracts with soft drink companies to sell their sodas and junk foods in vending machines. Therefore, both schools and soda companies are getting financial gains. Featuring only one brand of soda in a vending machine has been compared to the advertising and behavior conditioning that cigarette companies used by giving away samples.

We are sending the wrong nutrition messages to our children. How many parents would provide candy to their kids for breakfast just because it's easier to get them to eat it? Most states have laws that require both health education and physical education to be taught as subjects in school. However, the requirements for such subjects have been reduced in recent years and is often left up to local school committees.

Given the social environment children face, programs aimed at changing individual behavior are extremely difficult to implement. Policy changes must occur through a coordinated effort at all levels. These would include national, state, and local governments, the private sector, nonprofit organizations and schools. It is important that this be carried out in cooperation with families and the local community.

The $50 hamburger

HENSHAW
TOM HENSHAW

I once sat down to brunch in New York with a young lady named Charlotte who saw eggs benedict on the menu and asked me, "What can they do to an egg to make it worth $2.85?"

That was 40 years ago, as you can no doubt tell by the price of eggs benedict.

Now New Yorkers are asking, "What can they do to a hamburger to make it worth $50?"

That's what they're getting for the DB Burger Royale at the DB Bistro Moderne at 55 West 44th St.

And around the corner at the Old Homestead at 56 Ninth Ave. they're paying $41 for the Kobe Beef Burger.

You guessed it; there's a price war going on in the big city only they're competing to see who can sell the most, not the least expensive hamburger.

The way I understand it, someone publicized the 20-ounce Kobe Beef Burger at the Old Homestead as the costliest of them all at $41.

This was the ultimate humiliation for a restaurant that calls itself a bistro and had only the nine-ounce DB Burger at $29 apiece ($28 at lunch) to brag about.

Thus was born the $50 DB Burger Royale.

All of which fails to answer the question; "What DO they do to a hamburger to make it worth $50?"

Well, first you read the four-page instruction booklet the DB Bistro Moderne furnishes its kitchen help to guide them through the assembly (no other word quite fits) of the burger.

I'll not bore you by listing every one of the nearly 50 ingredients that go into a DB Burger Royale, but only seven ounces of it are ground sirloin.

It contains a filling made up of, among other things, beef ribs braised in red wine, port and veal stick; strips of seared foie gras and black truffle peelings cooked in truffle sauce.

Condiments used include mayonnaise with truffle bits. Mederia wine and truffle juice, Dijon mustard and freshly grated horseradish, Veggies include tomato "petals" made from blanched tomatoes, with peel, seeds and pulp removed.

To this mess is added two layers of freshly shaved black truffles.

In case any of you have not yet had an opportunity to dine with the caviar and brie set, black truffles are a fungi that are sniffed out and dug up by trained pigs in France.

They sell for between $350 and $400 a pound and the DB Burger Royale uses an estimated $21 worth. Leave them out and you have only a $39 burger which is hardly worth talking about.

Me, I'm sorry now that I complained in Jamie's Pub in Braintree when they charged me $6.95 for a Cajun Burger, which got me a half pound of sirloin with Cajun spices, onion rings, fried jalopenos, cheddar cheese and Cajun sauces.

I didn't know I had it so good. The cook didn't need a four-page instruction booklet to whip together. And they held the truffles, too.

Disappointed in vote, low turnout

TO THE EDITOR:

I was genuinely surprised and yes, also quite disappointed about the lopsided outcome of the Jan. 25 override election, much more so however about the fact that only about 1 out of 4 registered voters participated.

After the November Town Meeting, the newspapers gave both sides ample opportunity to express their thoughts and feelings.

In the fall I can see some of those who did not make the trip to Town Hall relax on a comfortable bench along a new sidewalk next to a sloppy leaning pole holding up big fat bundles of wires and cables overhead, wondering what happened to the beautiful lanterns and trees that could have been lined up along our downtown streets.

What went wrong, was it really too much of a price to pay for this once in a lifetime opportunity to do this much good for the village ? I guess we'll never really know as long as this many people don't participate in the process.

It will be interesting to see how many citizens will participate in Cohasset's next override election.

Making a difference

TO THE EDITOR:

We wanted to take a moment to thank Rob Lehr for restoring the skating pond in Wheelright Park. Such a feat was not easy. It involved clearing the pond of old tree limbs and debris; excavating years of dirt to uncover the clay bottom; pruning nearby trees; and re-building, and pointing the stone wall. We even noticed a hand-made wooden shovel to clear the pond of snow.

Thank you Rob for giving us a memorable morning of skating with our daughters. One person can make a difference!

Wellspring grateful for bounty of harvest

TO THE EDITOR:

As we begin the new year with hopes and expectations of what is to come, it isn't too late to look back with gratitude on the gifts of the past year. On behalf of all at Wellspring and all those we serve I wish to extend thanks to the religious communities of Cohasset — Beechwood Congregational Church, First Parish Church, Nativity of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church, St. Anthony's Catholic Church, St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, and the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset — for the generous donations collected at Thanksgiving. Just like the bounty of the harvest saw the pilgrims through the winter, this money will allow Wellspring to help our clients through what is proving to be one of the coldest winters in many years. In times of economic hardship, more people are turning to organizations like Wellspring for help.

Many of you may know that last year Wellspring launched a capital campaign to fund the purchase of our permanent residence on Nantasket Avenue in Hull. The purchase of this building ensures Wellspring will continue to serve those in need across the South Shore. The capital campaign is still underway and we are happy to say that we are over three-quarters of the way to our goal of raising $445,000. Contributions to the capital campaign have been most generous, and we are very grateful. Other donations, like the collections at Thanksgiving which go directly towards Wellspring's programs, are equally important.

The pilgrims who celebrated the first Thanksgiving came to this country with the hope of creating a better society. It is good to see this hope is still alive.

ZBA should make decision

CHAIRMAN S. WOODWORTH CHITTICK
ZONING BOARD OF APPEALS

As you are aware, the Board of Water Commissioners is very concerned over the potential adverse impact of the proposed 200 unit (364 bedroom) Avalon Bay development project on the watershed of Lily Pond, our public drinking water supply.

Avalon Bay is proposing to discharge about 40,400 gallons per day of treated wastewater effluent into surface waters located in the Lily Pond watershed, and is seeking an exemption from the provisions of Section 14.3 of the Zoning Bylaws which requires a Special Permit for any on-site disposal of 15,000 gallons per day or more in the Water Resource District, where the project is located. Lily Pond is in a eutrophic state, meaning it is being increasingly choked with weeds and algae because of nutrients like nitrates and phosphorus from septic systems or other sanitary sewers draining into the Pond. To protect the Pond as a drinking water source, we need to find ways to decrease, not increase, this nutrient loading.

Furthermore, Lily Pond and its tributaries, including Brass Kettle Brook, are classified by the state as Class A waters, and the wetlands that drain into the water supply are designated as Outstanding Resource Waters (ORW). To protect public drinking water supplies, state regulations prohibit any new surface water discharges of any pollutants in Class A waters or into Outstanding Resource Waters. Avalon's proposed surface water discharge is prohibited by state regulations.

The ZBA has the authority and the responsibility to prevent this potential threat to Lily Pond. The Massachusetts Housing Finance Agency, in their November 21, 2002 "Site Approval Application" letter required Avalon to "provide evidence that there is a plan to provide adequate sanitary and storm sewer service at the site that is acceptable to the comprehensive permit granting authority." [Emphasis added.] The ZBA should not defer this issue to the state.

Therefore, the Water Commission requests that the ZBA protect Lily Pond by making a determination that the proposed surface water discharge of wastewater from Avalon Bay is not "acceptable" and that if the ZBA approves this application that the ZBA include a condition prohibiting Avalon from utilizing surface water discharge for its wastewater management.

John K. McNabb, Jr.
Chairman, Water Commission

Cutbacks in SPED funds

TO THE EDITOR:

The Massachusetts Administrators for Special Education (ASE), Executive Board, is deeply concerned and troubled by the recent announcement from the Department of Education (Mass.) regarding special education funding for fiscal 2003. The lack of sufficient funds to cost share residential (educational) placements for special education students for the fourth quarter of this fiscal year (with the public schools) and the timing of the notification creates immediate concern and undue uncertainty for students, parents/guardians and school districts. Central to our concerns, but not limited to them are the following:

1. How will school districts (already fiscally burdened) be able to fund (in full) the fourth quarter payments for students who are residentially placed (in the 50/50) programs when there were no FY03 local appropriations for it or appropriate time to plan for the shortfall created by the decision?

2. What will the effect of a delayed payment be on the private special education residential schools and special needs students attending them, if school systems are not able to fund the fourth quarter payment in part or in full?

3. Why has DOE not requested the increased funding for the 50/50 account to meet the need of the increases associated with the cost share program to offset the projected deficit?

4. If state and federal funds are available, as DOE indicates, why are the funds not being released during this fiscal year to fund the residential students in the 50/50 program to meet the commitment?

We are gathering important data to look at the impact of the DOE decision. In the spirit of collaboration, we are committed to working with other organizations such as The Massachusetts Association of Approved Private Schools, Massachusetts Association of School Superintendents and the Massachusetts Association of School Committees in working on an immediate resolve to the current "50/50" program dilemma. Recognizing that the state's fiscal issues are real and not easily solvable, we also recognize that through collaborative efforts, in difficult fiscal times, better and more timely solutions can be obtained than if one organization or agency proceeds singularly in the definition of the problem, the understanding of it and the possible solutions to it. We are committed to working rigorously on the "50/50" shortfall problem to ensure an immediate fiscal remedy for our most severely and in need eligible special education students.

Ad, house in bad taste

TO THE EDITOR:

I found the recent, full-page ad regarding the eyesore being built at 3 Jerusalem Lane tacky, manipulative, and in the same bad taste as the structure at issue. The writer of the ad obviously is rudely presumptuous, addressing it to "friends," and clearly has little understanding of the history, culture, and expectations of the citizens of this marvelous town. This is Cohasset, sir, not Weirs Beach in New Hampshire.

Being a town official in any town always commands my respect given the dedication and sacrifices of time and family involved in such public service. Blaming town officials is inappropriate. Working with town officials to resolve any dispute is the wise and appropriate route, and the greater good of the community traditionally must be served. These ads, public demonstrations, scare tactics, etc., are classic "how not to do it."

I do not live in the neighborhood where the "big box" is being built, but I've often driven by it, and my reaction, first time and every time, has been that it's an out-of-place tumor, an eyesore, and an albatross for the local neighborhood. I've always concluded that it was being built by an insensitive builder who could care less about its negative impact on the neighbors, the neighborhood, and the town seashore, because the contractor obviously would sell it and disappear into the night with a profit. I was not surprised, then, to learn that the builder was not from Cohasset. It was a surprise, but I guess consistent, to learn that the builder was from out-of-state. It would be useful, for "public safety," to learn the name of the architect, if any. Out-of-state also?

The eloquent letter in the Jan. 30 Mariner from the immediate neighborhood families says it all and confirms everyone's suspicions. As for the "big box" structure, it belongs in the woods of New Hampshire - deep in the woods.

Many of us, indeed perhaps most, are glad to see that a town Board is exhibiting the courage and responsibility to question this obviously grossly flawed structure. Better late than never! A house of this huge size and height squeezed onto a one-quarter acre lot is, candidly, absurd. The laws of common sense apply here! Perhaps one of the builder's four lawyers might whisper to the builder that ignorance of the law has never been accepted as an excuse, especially when exacerbated by insensitivity and plain bad taste! Also, two wrongs never make a right! The issue is 3 Jerusalem Lane - and if the glove fits, wear it.

We'll all closely follow the course of this regulatory and legal mini-drama with interest as it plays out. We have confidence that "right" and common sense will prevail. I also expect we may see further, distressing disclosures before the saga ends, unfortunately.

A "dream house" for the builder, as the ad claims? One has to question that assertion. We also had heard the $2+ million asking price. What is certain is that it's a "nightmare house" for all of the neighbors!

The neighbors are the real victims here if this wrong is not remedied in an appropriate fashion, perhaps by consulting an oncologist on the best treatment for a large and growing tumor. Surgery is the usual answer? All in favor? If you don't own a scalpel, contributions to the newly established "Cohasset Defense Fund" should be considered.

As a final note, the comments in the Mariner by the "local" North Main Street builder criticizing the ZBA were extremely ill-advised and as outrageous as it gets. He who lives in a glass house should never throw stones.

Massport responds to Dormitzer claims

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is in response to the recent article titled "Has Massport been lying about...." In the article, Mr. Dormitzer asserts Massport staff has changed its story about the results of a noise survey conducted last spring. This is not the case and is an unfair representation of what happened.

The preliminary survey results, provided verbally to Mr. Ralph Dormitzer, were explicitly qualified by staff as "preliminary." For Mr. Dormitzer to characterize to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen the preliminary data as "changing the story" is disingenuous.

The facts related to the preliminary results are as follows. The 60 decibel Day Night Level (DNL) estimate reflects one of the highest daily noise levels recorded by the microphone at King Street and includes all sources of noise (aircraft and non-aircraft). This was explained to Mr. Dormitzer at the time.

The 58 DNL figure (actually it's 58.8) is the overall measure for the entire survey period and, again, this measure includes all noise events. Mr. Dormitzer has been told that the 58 DNL reading is too high because it includes days when a lawn mower was run very near the microphone. In fact, during one such incident, Mr. Dormitzer happened to be at the survey site and (without authority to do so) unplugged the microphone, thinking that this would prevent the microphone from registering the loud events. On relaying this to Massport staff, Mr. Dormitzer was told that the field microphone has a back-up battery unit and unplugging it did not prevent it from registering the noise events.

Finally, the 53 DNL figure is the overall measure for the entire study period for aircraft-only noise (excluding noise from local traffic, lawn mowers, etc.) In fact, as the report will show, the 53 DNL estimate for aircraft-only noise is on the high side of a range that is anywhere from the high 40s to low 50s DNL.

Regarding the Freedom of Information Act request, Mr. Dormitzer should have informed the Board of Selectmen that Massport had already agreed early on in the survey that it would include all the raw data along with the report. The only valid criticism Mr. Dormitzer can make is that the report is late. But even in relaying that criticism, Mr. Dormitzer should have qualified it by pointing out that to be responsive to Mr. Dormitzer, Massport staff undertook an unprecedented 47 day field survey. Typically, Massport field surveys are done over a one week period. This extensive survey generated about 8,000 individual noise events of which about 3,400 (or 43 percent) were aircraft-only noise events.

Massport staff has spent an inordinate amount of time filtering non-aircraft events, running cross-tabulations on the data, and correlating individual aircraft over flights to the FAA radar tracks. This analysis has gone above and beyond a standard field survey and was done at the request of Mr. Dormitzer. Furthermore, knowing that this analysis would be subject to considerable scrutiny, Massport requested that a peer review be conducted by HMMH, a nationally recognized noise consultant firm. This review was only recently completed. All these facts were known to Mr. Dormitzer before his briefing to the Board of Selectmen, unfortunately he failed to include in his briefing.

The report, along with the raw data, will be issued shortly. For Mr. Dormitzer to state that Massport is "continuing to change [the] story" is simply wrong. Massport stands behind its work and invites the Town of Cohasset to hire a reputable noise consultant to review the report or the raw data or conduct its own study.

State budget crisis creates a rare level of cooperation

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

Recap and analysis of the week in state government.

"I think it's easier when there's no money than when there's plenty." So said a state rep in the hallway, as he ruminated about what's going on.

What's going on is that government, for now, is working the way it's supposed to – the way it did in fifth grade social studies books. Leaders of the different parts are conferring about how best to address a serious problem, their disagreements respectful, their solution consensus-driven.

Of course, "easier" doesn't apply to the people affected. If you were depending on the city to provide a recreational space for your 15-year-old to go after school; if you were a part-time local health department worker hoping to convert to full time; if your kid received services from the state Brain Injury Program, things just got harder. Those are the kinds of people affected by the $488 million budget-balancing package Gov. Mitt Romney has laid out.

But for the decision makers, a genuine crisis has simplified life. Something really must be done right away, and it's easy to agree on the fundamentals: minimize the pain and spread it around; cut the lowest priorities; raise revenues on groups like golfers who won't suffer overmuch if they pay a few dollars more. The governor, House and Senate all worked along those principles. Where legislative approval is needed for the pieces of the Romney plan, a rare level of cooperation is anticipated.

When the state had huge surpluses, they tended to fund long-running gamesmanship, over how much to increase spending, or big tangents, such as the infamous 2001 budget stalemate that was largely about the Clean Elections Law.

The crisis has straightened out the usually twisted dynamics of life in the Statehouse. Moderation is prevailing. After starting out talking about a possible 10 percent cut in local aid, the governor cut no more than 1.8 percent of any community's allotment. He was careful to praise the Legislature for its help.

What's hard, and Romney's finding it out, is cutting the budget legitimately. He's looking for waste, and properly so, but it won't solve the problem. Romney said he was shocked to find that state government employs 800 lawyers. Assuming he sacks 700 of them, and they each get paid $79,000, and none of them do anything that brings money to the state, he'll have saved $55 million. You'd have to fire 19,000 such lawyers to solve half the problem for next year.

The government spends most of its budget easing life's problems for people who have a difficult time of it: the mentally ill, the old and sick, the young and sick, the inner city. It's expensive. Nursing home care for the middle class and affordable public higher education are huge costs. Not to mention repairing all those roads.

On Feb. 26, Romney's going to have to put out a budget that looks at those areas. He says raising taxes will only hurt working families. Casino gambling may be proposed. This is where things are likely to get the most difficult as the $3 billion problem is addressed. Even if it's easy, it's going to be unpleasant. But for now, everybody's sharing the pain. The cuts were mixed with personnel news, and plans intended to lend a silver lining to the local gloom.

• Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey said the administration is proposing the elimination of local civil service to reduce administrative costs; increases in local workers' health insurance premium payments; and union-unfriendly changes to the state's wage and bidding laws. An atmosphere of cooperation aside, all these are expected to encounter very harsh scrutiny in the House and Senate, where members depend on political support from public-employee labor unions.

• Metropolitan District Commissioner David Balfour was fired, and the governor wants to do away with his whole agency. The attempt will be a major test of how serious the Legislature is about restructuring; the MDC has long been a favorite place for lawmakers to reward supporters with jobs.

• Environmental Protection Commissioner Lauren Liss submitted her resignation, having been asked to do so by the Romney administration. She was a Cellucci appointee. There is no word yet on a successor, but environmentalists say they want a more aggressive person in one of the state's most important jobs.

• A study released by the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce quantified some of the pain the region and its workers are suffering right now. Financial services, health care, higher education and high tech lost a combined 9,300 job last year, the chamber found.

• Officials from Massport joined their federal counterparts in trying to determine how a box cutter found its way onto United Flight 179 last week. Few answers were available as the week neared an end, but there was consensus the incident showed cracks remain in the airplane screening apparatus.

• The multi-billion dollar state investment in public education since 1993 hasn't been sufficient to meet the court-ordered directive of adequate education for all, according to American Civil Liberties Union officials and others who will bring the case back to Superior Court in June. ACLU officials told legislators taxes are part of the plan to bring more equity to public education. The Massachusetts Budget and Policy Center, meanwhile, reported state taxes were cut more aggressively in Massachusetts during the 1990s than in any other state. Center director James St. George said taxes were cut by $5 billion over the decade, and then raised by $1.2 billion last year. Noah Berger, chief counsel and policy director under former Senate President Thomas Birmingham, was also announced as St. George's successor.

Considering tough measures to fight obesity in our children

• The proliferation of unhealthy food and beverage advertising.

• An abundance of fast-food outlets and an increase in the size of standard portions of food served. • Increased television and computer usage.

• A growing trend toward eating out of the home.

• A reliance on automobiles.

• Insufficient safe and affordable physical activity opportunities.

Preventing obesity in our children is one of the most important public health issues facing the nation. Obesity and its related economic and health impacts require immediate actions, both nationally and locally. Our timely efforts can ensure that our children will grow up to become healthier adults.

Below are some measures frequently supported by public health organizations:

1) Develop a media campaign to encourage a nutritional and physical fitness health model., using as a model the successful tobacco control initiatives to counter the unhealthy eating messages and images with which children are bombarded.

2) Augment safe physical fitness opportunities for children at schools and in their communities by creating more playgrounds, playing fields, gymnasiums, sidewalks, bike trails, swimming pools, skating rinks, tennis courts and increase supervised after-school activities.

3) Implement a "snack tax" which would reduce consumption of unhealthy foods, and use the money to fund (1) and (2).

4) Enact regulations that prohibit the sale of candy and carbonated beverages in schools during lunch periods. Particularly requiring the removal of vending machines from schools, or at least, prohibiting operation during school hours.

5) Enact mandates setting a minimum number of in-school hours annually that must be spent on physical education and activities in schools and ensure that lunch periods are sufficient for proper digestion of food.

6) Require the labeling of calories, fat and sugar content of foods sold in fast-food restaurants.

7) Develop policies to limit brand-name advertising for food and beverages in the schools.

8) Establish a coordinated infrastructure of governmental agencies, professional organizations, academia, research entities, and advocates to define and develop a program for improved nutritional and physical activity.

At a future meeting, the Board of Health will consider these eight measures, and discuss the adoption of several of them. In particular, we will consider measure 4 above, and probably adopt it. We would like your input.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Four-quad gates in limbo

By James Russell
CORRESPONDENT

The United States Army Corps of Engineers has signaled its deep unease with the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's preference to use 2-quadrant gates with median barriers at intersections along the proposed Greenbush rail corridor. Underscoring problems with the MBTA proposal, the Corps yesterday took the unusual step of ordering the Section 106 historic review process for Greenbush to be reopened. Part of the National Historic Preservation Act, Section 106 governs mitigation measures for historic properties and archeological resources, and defines types of mitigation to be undertaken in conjunction with construction projects in historic settings.

"You are welcome to submit comments regarding the seven unresolved issues contained in Section IX of the Section 106 Programmatic Agreement. Comments can be submitted to the Corps office in Concord until Feb. 19, 2003," said Theodore Lento, Army Corps Program Manager for Greenbush to a throng of 75 area residents and local officials at a meeting in Hingham Town Hall. Also attending was the Deputy State Historic Preservation Officer, Brona Simon, senior MBTA officials, Sen. Robert Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley.

Eric Fleming, an engineer with DMJM Harris contracted by the MBTA said 2-quad gates with median barriers are safer than 4-quad gates without median barriers, noting 4-quad gates are "experimental in nature.

"There is a general lack of acceptance in the railroad industry for 4-quad gates," he said, adding, "Using a median barrier is a prudent safety measure, with or without 4-quad gates."

Alexander Macmillan, Hingham's Greenbush Coordinator, expressed dissatisfaction with the MBTA's claims.

"What the MBTA asserts as the experimental nature of 4-quad gates is wrong," said Macmillan, citing an ongoing rail construction project in Illinois containing 96 grade crossings that will employ 4-quad gates at 68 of the crossings. "4-quad gates have been installed at nine crossings along the new Acela Amtrak route between Boston and New York City. It is in place; it is not an experiment."

Macmillan also took the Greenbush Project Conservator, Maureen Cavanaugh of Epsilon Associates, to task.

"It appears the project conservator would have no opinion regarding median barriers used for 2-quad gates; in other words, you have accepted the MBTA's position," said Macmillan. "You might want reconsider your earlier comments so that we do not have the implied judgement that median barriers are not under the purview of the Project Conservator. We are concerned where you seem to be going on this issue."

Cavanaugh responded by noting the document referred to by Macmillan was "labeled a 'review draft.'"

"Like the Army Corps and the MBTA, I am here to listen, and to take comment. Given the additional information we will review our previous comments," she said.

Andrew Brennan, Director of Environmental Affairs for the MBTA, said figuring out how to have safe grade crossing without whistles blowing is the goal. It is estimated 4-quad gates would add $3.2 million to Greenbush, which would extend 17.5 miles of track from Braintree through Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate at a projected cost of $465 million. The transportation authority expects trains to roll sometime in 2005.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

QUESTIONS

With today's edition, the Cohasset Mariner begins coverage of the 2003 Massachusetts legislative session with the weekly feature "Beacon Hill Roll Call" (BHRC). This feature is a clear and concise compilation of the voting records of area state representatives and senators at the Statehouse. It provides an unbiased summary of each bill or amendment and arguments from floor debate on each side of the issue along with local legislators' votes.

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner . It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on three roll calls and local senators' votes on two roll calls from recent sessions. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

REQUIRE ROLL CALL VOTES ON TAX HIKES (H 2003) House 126-23, rejected an amendment prohibiting any tax hikes from being given final approval by the House without a roll call vote.The amendment, which could be suspended by a four-fifths vote, also allows the House to approve tax hikes only up to 30 days prior tothe deadline for filing nomination papers to run for a seat in the legislature. Amendment supporters said this would ensure that votersknow how their legislators vote on any tax hikes. They noted it will also prevent what occurred last year when the House took up the $1 billion plus tax hike two days after the filing deadline for candidates who may have chosen to run for office if they knew an incumbent had voted for the tax hike. Amendment opponents said the amendment goes too far and will make it very difficult for the House to consider tax hikes even during an emergency. They argued it is a bad precedent to restrict the time period during which a bill can be considered. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring a roll call vote and restricting the period during which tax hikes can be approved. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).	N
ROLL CALL MACHINE (S 2003) House 148-4, rejected an amendment prohibiting any member's vote from being displayed on the electronic roll call machine in the House until after the time for voting has expired. Amendment supporters said this would foster members' independence and discourage them from merely looking at the roll call machine prior to voting and simply voting with the speaker and the leadership. Amendment opponents said members do not need the votes of the speaker and leadership hidden in order to be independent. They noted that displaying the votes after voting has ended will allow visitors in the gallery and viewers of Channel 44 to see the votes displayed for only a minute before the board is cleared for the next vote. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment preventing the display of votes until voting has ended. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).	N
TERM LIMITS FOR SPEAKER (S 2003) House 106-44, rejected an amendment prohibiting any member from serving as speaker of the House for more than eight years. Amendment supporters said 20 states have term limits for legislative leaders and argued it is healthy to rotate the speakership in order to prevent the building up of excessive power by one individual. They noted that Speaker Finneran actually voted for this eight-year limit in 1985 but in 2001 he led the successful fight to repeal it. Amendment opponents said it is unfair to restrict a member's service as speaker and argued rank and file members should have the right to re-elect a current speaker or choose a new one. They noted tha voters already may impose term limits when they vote at the polls and representatives already can impose term limits when they vote for speaker. (A "Yea" vote is for the eight-year limit. A "Nay" vote is against the eight-year limit).	N
SENATE RULES FOR 2003-2004 (S 1923) Senate 33-5, approved changes to the rules that govern the actions of the Senate. Changes include creation of a Committee on Long Term Debt that would be allowed to initiate legislation; abolishing the Ethics Committee and transferring its powers to the Rules Committee; adding two new leadership positions of assistant majority whip and president pro tempore; banning the use of cellular phones in the Senate chamber during a session; requiring a senate president to resign from that position if he becomes a candidate for any other state or federal elective office; and requiring that senators receive a list of cities and towns that do not receive television coverage of Senate session and an explanation for the lack of coverage. Supporters said the changes would improve the operation of the Senate and make it more efficient and accountable. Some opponents said the changes did not go far enough and noted they supported many more changes that were defeated. Others said they objected to the provision allowing the Committee on Long Term Debt to initiate legislation. They said that this power is troublesome because it has created problems in the past when Ways and Means initiated legislation that emerged without any input and public hearings and without the knowledge of most senators. (A "Yea" vote is for the package of changes. A "Nay" vote is against the package).	NV
LEGISLATORS' TESTIMONY (S 1924) Senate 37-0, approved an amendment prohibiting elected officials, except the governor and other constitutional officers, from speaking for more than two minutes at a public hearing unless he receives permission from the committee chair. Amendment supporters said this would prevent legislators from making lengthy speeches for the benefit of television cameras. They noted legislators often monopolize these hearings while citizens who attend to testify are forced to wait hours and miss an entire day of work. BLIZZARD OF '78

Blizzard was one for the history books

By Ed Baker
EBAKER@CNC.COM

In early February 1978, the air pressure off the South Carolina coast began to drop considerably. This disturbance didn't alarm forecasters because it remained unclear whether a major snowstorm was forming Local residents also gave scant attention to initial forecasts that suggested the possibility of snow amounts of six inches or more on Feb. 6.

This lackadaisical outlook stemmed party because a record-breaking 21.6 inches of snow had fallen on the South Shore 10 days earlier. Residents generally felt that any additional snowfall would be easy to handle after the "Super Storm 78," Within a few days, that storm would be largely forgotten when the "Great Blizzard of 78" arrived with fury on the evening of Feb. 5.

When it ended 35 hours later , the blizzard would leave 54 persons dead across New England, scores of South Shore coastal dwellers homeless and thousands of residents snowbound for a week. Its havoc would cause $1 billion worth of damage to the region and force a state of emergency for eight days.

"We knew a storm was coming, but we didn't realize how bad it would be until about noontime," said Esther Reed o f Marshfield. "We also had that big storm in January and didn't think anything could be as bad as that."

Sunny skies greeted area residents on Feb. 4. There was no wind and the air seemed unusually quiet. This calm before the storm hardly suggested a disaster would be soon wreaking havoc. But a change in the atmosphere's jet stream began feeding the developing blizzard off the Carolina coast on Sunday with cold air and that spelled trouble. The storm was also being fed by another smaller low pressure system that moved across the eastern seaboard from the Great Lakes on Monday.

As the day wore on, forecasters began calling for between 8-12 inches of snow to begin falling during the afternoon of Feb. 5. When area residents awoke on the following day, the storm clouds were in place. A Boston Herald headline proclaimed, "Here we go again." Some wisps of flakes began gently falling across the area after daybreak — hardly enough to cause alarm.

"For 25 years I've thought about it without a tear but when I was thinking about it the other day the tears started flowing."

— Faith Jean, a Brant Rock resident.

By 10 a.m. dire storm predictions began to emerge from local radio and TV stations. Newscasters warned coastal dwellers of extensive flooding along the South Shore and snowfall amounts of 16 inches. Residents were urged to travel for only emergency purposes during the evening. By the time these warnings became known, most residents were already at work or school. Some firms began to send workers home early, but Reed, a Gillette employee, had to remain until 5:00 p.m.

"We didn't shut down," said Reed. "When it was time to go home, the traffic on the Southeast Express way was crawling." An hour commute for Reed turned into a three-hour tour by the time she reached her home.

"The snow flakes were the size of snowballs and the wind was blowing so hard," said Hanover firefighter Jeffrey Blanchard, a high school senior at the time.

The blowing snow began making roads across the region impassible. The afternoon commute on Route 128 turned into a nightmare for nearly 3,000 drivers when two tractor trailer trucks jackknifed. The accident forced an eight-mile backup on the southbound side of the highway between Needham and Randolph.

By early evening, forecasters began calling the storm the worst in 100 years. Drivers were urged to remain home or take shelter if on the road. Scores of schools and National Guard armories began providing shelter to stranded motorists.

Angry waves hurled themselves against seawalls in Scituate, Marshfield, Cohasset and Hingham shortly after 7:30 p.m. This initial onslaught pummeled summer homes in these communities with sand, pebbles and spray. Within an hour the lights began going out along the coast and sea water began flooding basement homes along the shore. Wind-driven waves forced Scituate's Cedar Point residents in some instances to wade to safety through the icy waters.

Marshfield resident Faith Jean said the storm was initially an adventure, but it turned into a nightmare during the evening. "For 25 years I've thought about it without a tear but when I was thinking about it the other day the tears started flowing," said Jean, a Brant Rock resident.

For awhile, the blizzard provided her children, April, 10, Phyliss, 13, Tom, 18 and Katherine, 24 with some excitement. "The electricity went out and we played cards by candlelight," said Jean. "We had never experienced a blizzard before and we thought it was fun. My husband, (Howard) was at work at the Morse Shoe Company in Canton."

The adventure became a nightmare when Jean stepped outside to take some pictures. "The water was flowing down South Street like a river," said Jean. "A fire truck was nearby and full of people. The fireman looked at me and said I only have room for you and two more."

Jean bordered the fire engine with Phyllis and April. Thomas and Katherine decided to ride out the storm as long as they could in the home. "We grabbed some pillows and blankets and went to the Grace Ryder School." The family endured swirling snowflakes and wind-driven ocean spray as the truck treaded to the Brant Rock firehouse. Upon arriving , the Jeans were taken to the Grace Ryder School where 200 residents were being given shelter. While there the family could only hope that Tom and Katherine would safely ride out the storm. "I had found out that we were the last truck out of Brant Rock," said Jean.

As the tides flooded the coast without respite, town officials began requesting assistance with evacuating residents. Firefighters from several nearby towns began sending aid. At 8 p.m then Gov. Michael Dukakis declared a state of emergency and activated the National Guard.

The storm's terror continued into the following day as higher than usual tides began smashing homes and seawalls to pieces after 10:30 a.m. The wind-driven surf tossed cars and house frames like toys. Scores of residents remained trapped inside oceanfront homes and awaited rescue. Some of these dwellers had to endure the night with flooded homes and lack of heat.

In Scituate, attempts to rescue a 5-year-old Amy Lanzikos, and her mother, Sally, from a flooded Jericho Road neighborhood by firefighters ended tragically when a sea wall broke loose. The wall's collapse capsized a rowboat that was being used to take the Lanzikos to safety with Edward Hart and his wife Alice. The fire fighters were able to rescue Sally and Alice, but could not save Amy and Edward. Both would be found deceased days later by rescuers near Scituate Harbor.

The storm's fury ultimately claimed lives 24 lives in Massachusetts. A dozen of these deaths occurred in the Boston area. Several motorists died from carbon monoxide poisoning after being discovered inside snowbound cars on Route 128. Some residents died from heart attacks while shoveling snow or from stress caused by the storm.

Life in the various shelters began to take on its own creativity during the long ours. Jean was awakened by the smell of bacon and eggs when morning arrived. "A policeman was at the grill and cooking us breakfast," said Jean. "He had been out earlier rounding up food from the stores that were closed because of the blackouts. The stores were only too glad to give the stuff away because it would have spoiled."

The breakfast and friendliness by evacuees helped lighten Jean's mood as she wondered whether Thomas or Katherine were OK. "Later in the day we were told some (evacuees) were taken to the Winslow School," said Jean. " I went over there but they weren't there."

Within minutes after arriving, Jean volunteered to assist with cooking, despite fears over her children's safety. "As I began working I had tears slipping down my cheek," said Jean. "A while later I heard somebody say 'Mom'. I turned and looked and it was,... Katherine. She was with James Haddad,...who is now an assessor. I then found out Tom was safe."

The snow began to wind down by 10 p.m. on Feb. 6. On the following day, area residents away from the shore awoke to nearly 27 inches of snow. "It was quite a sight," said Blanchard. "The town hall had piles of snow. "

Roadways throughout the area remained impassible for days. A driving ban also kept motorists off the roads, and for awhile residents were forced to walk to area stores to buy groceries or take delight in the scenery.

The National Guard also assisted area towns with snow removal and residents needing help along the ravaged coastal areas. Guardsmen also helped transport doctors and nurses to work at South Shore Hospital throughout the week.

"It was quite a time," said William Molisse, a South Shore Hospital food service director , "The National Guard would give me a ride home at night and the police would give me a ride to work in the morning from Weymouth Landing."

Many of the hospital workers who were on duty when the storm struck worked continuously for almost two days until the Guard and police began transporting additional staffers.

Neighborhood block parties became a common occurrence among youngsters and the young at heart. Town centers appeared to resemble a scene out of Dickens' Christmas Carol play as residents strolled along snow combed streets with a sled in tow. Youngsters scoured towering snow banks along area roadways.

Along the storm-ravaged coast, homeowners sifted through debris and tried to salvage possessions. The storm's waves also provided many coastal dwellers with a free lobster feast. Scores of lobsters were tossed onto beaches and deposited in shrubs by storm driven waves.

Within days after the storm President Jimmy Carter declared the area a disaster scene. Scores of coastal residents applied for relief in rebuilding damaged homes.

Since then many questions remain about weather forecasting. Boston meteorologist Harvey Leonard said forecasters have more computer modules to guide them with predicting weather. "there's no question that while far from perfect, our field has grown a lot since 1978," said Leonard in a Boston Herald interview. "The computer models we use to guide us, the software and hardware available to us has improved so much over the years."

BLIZZARD OF '78

Local author recalls the 'storm of the century'

By Ed Baker
EBAKER@CNC.COM

For a while, the world appeared to be coming to an end to seven-year old Christopher J. Haraden as the Blizzard of 1978 aimed its fury across the region during the evening of Feb. 6, 1978.

Gale force winds howled as heavy snow fell at the rate of three inches per hour across the South Shore. Traffic came to a standstill while the snow piled up. On Route 128, nearly 3,000 cars and 500 trucks became snowbound after two-tractor trailer trucks jackknifed.

Along the coast, the ocean heaved its icy contents into Haraden's backyard at his former home in Hull. The flooding forced many residents to evacuate. Homeowners living along flooded shorefronts in Hingham, Cohasset, Marshfield and Scituate made frantic calls to police and the Coast Guard for rescue. In some instances, houses were snatched off their foundations and thrown into the angry ocean. Boats became loosened from their moorings and were tossed like toys onto nearby streets. Scituate Village became a pond as the sea emptied from its basin.

As the evening wore on, local forecasters began issuing dire warnings to remain indoors or risk death. A state of emergency was declared by then-Gov. Michael Dukakis. Driving was banned throughout the state by 10 p.m. Exceptions to the ban were allowed for snow removal crews, police, firefighters, EMT's or persons with life or death emergencies. This prohibition would last for a week in many towns.

These realities are being vividly recalled by Haraden, 31, of Hanover in "Storm of The Century, New England's Great Blizzard of 1978." The book recalls the blizzard's fury and aftermath across southern New England. "At least two-thirds of it contains pictures and the remaining portion describes what happened," said Haraden.

The pictures include a photograph of Scituate's Minot Light being smashed by towering waves along with scenes of destruction in Hull , Marshfield, Cohasset and various communities across the region. There are also a variety of pictures that show the snow-clogged highways and towering snow drifts.

Residents old enough to recall the storm will discover Haraden's recollection to be an accurate reminder of how the region was impacted and pulled itself together in the days that followed.

Haraden said the blizzard was like a camping trip for him and his family. The storm knocked out electricity for a few days in parts of Hull and in various sections of nearby communities. "We huddled by the fireplace and listened to the small radio," said Haraden. "We had the phone for awhile but we later lost that."

As the winds howled and the waves pounded the shoreline without mercy, he listened to anxious callers on the radio ask WBZ news anchors to summon rescue crews. Some of these callers came from Hull. "We heard a guy from Revere Street call up and say his street was getting flooded," said Harden. "The guy said he didn't know what to do. He must have made at least three or four calls to BZ."

The situation in Hull was especially difficult because the flood waters could not roll back out to sea with the tide. Cement barriers that normally kept the ocean from flowing into the neighborhood now acted as a barrier with keeping the floodwaters from draining. It would take nearly a week in some instances to pump the seawater out from the flooded areas. When the storm ended, it left many homeowners without a dwelling. Lucky homeowners in the stricken areas got off with flooded basements.

In the days that followed Hull High School became a shelter for the town's displaced residents. The National Guard patrolled the streets and the Red Cross provided food and clothing for those in need. School children got two weeks off from school because the roads were impassible and the schools in many instances sheltered stranded persons or residents with storm damaged homes. "The pile of snow looked like Mt. Everest," said Haraden.

He said the ability of residents to cope with being housebound during the state of emergency was amazing. "There were no VCRs or cell phones 25 years ago," said Haraden. "We had no cable TV or Internet."

Haraden said he became interested with retelling the blizzard upon noticing there were few books devoted to it. "I was surprised no one else wrote about it,' said Haraden. The book is available for purchase at local bookstores for $19.99. A portion of the profits from book sales will benefit the Fort Revere Park Preservation Society. The Society oversees the Fort Revere Park — a former military installation used during the Revolutionary War by colonial troops. Haraden is a trustee with the Preservation Society.

He is also a former reporter and editor for various local newspapers. Haraden previously worked for The Hull Times, Banker & Tradesman, Boston Homes and the TAB Newspapers. He has also written various articles about tourism, historical, and financial publications across New England. Haraden is also a contributing author of "Hull & Nantasket Beach: Then and Now." The book is a joint effort by the Committee for the Preservation of Hull's History.

CHS hockey team rallies from first SSL loss to defeat Abington

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A Ted Straughn power play goal broke a 1-1 tie for Cohasset with 6:05 left in Saturday's showdown with Abington at the Rockland Ice Arena, lifting the Skippers to a 2-1 win over their South Shore League rivals and keeping them in the driver's seat in their quest for a second consecutive league title.

First year Cohasset coach John Blake wasn't exactly thrilled with the performance that produced the win, but, at this stage of the season, it would appear he's well into the "win is a win is a win" mindset.

"It's wasn't pretty, but we'll take it," said Blake, whose team went to 7-1 in SSL play with the win (8-6-1 overall) to remain atop the league standings. "Teams are ready for us now. I think the first time through the league we kind of surprised a few teams. Not much was expected of us going into the season, but now we're the team to beat, I guess. Teams are trying to take away what we did the first time against them. We've got to be ready for a much stiffer challenge this second time around."

The Skippers went 6-0 the first time through the SSL, but

Focus for CHS wrestlers now on next week's Sectionals

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It's that time of year again: that time where winter sports regular seasons begin to wind down while the anticipation for postseason competition begins to heat up.

In other words, it's the right time for the wrestling team to be wrestling at the level they are right now.

"We're just looking to stay healthy," said long-time coach Torin Sweeney. "Most of our focus right now is getting ourselves ready for Sectionals."

The Skippers pushed their record to 14-3-2 last Friday, with consecutive wins over fellow contenders Rockland and Middleboro, then closing the day with a blowout over Keefe Tech. With their 37-37 tie with Carver last week, the team clinched a tie for the South Shore League title, their second straight year they've grabbed at least a share of their league crown.

On their marathon Friday, Cohasset succeeded in becoming the only team to knock off Rockland in dual meet competition this year. The Skippers took the meet, 41-30, leaving the Bulldogs (13-1) no chance to compete for the league title.

The meet started perfectly for the Skippers, with Sweeney strategically switching junior Jake Berger in the heavyweight class and moving sophomore Matt Baroudi to 215 pounds. The move worked perfectly, as senior Cosimo Cambi (189) combined with the underclassmen duo for three consecutive pins to begin the meet.

Staked to an 18-0 lead, the Skippers did fall behind at one point, but received five crucial wins from Terry Baroudi (130), Phil Strazzulla (pin at 140), Chris McKenna (pin at 145), Matt Casey (152) and Mike Casey (171).

This is the second straight win for Cohasset over Rockland, as the Skippers defeated this league rival in their final dual meet of the 2001-02 season to win back the league.

Green Wave silences Skippers, 64-48

Balanced attack leads Abington over Cohasset

By T.J. Byrne
CORRESPONDENT

Tuesday night's game between the Cohasset Skippers and host Abington Green Wave played out much like their seasons have gone. Despite a strong effort from Cohasset, the Skippers faded in the second half to Abington's steady and consistent play. The end result was a 64-48 Green Wave victory.

The win improves Abington and head coach's Don Byron record to 11-4 (8-2 South Shore League), while Ron Ford's Skippers drop to 4-11 (2-7 SSL). The Green Wave remains alone in second place in the South Shore League trailing Norwell by two games while staying a half a game ahead of Harwich.

"This was a tough win for us tonight," said Byron. "Cohasset came in here ready to play and they played their guts out. We have Norwell 'coming up on Friday, so it was important for us to go into this game on a positive note."

The Green Wave used a balanced offensive scoring sheet to down Cohasset. Seniors Bill Junkins (14 points, 12 rebounds), Steve Perry (14 points) and junior Bill Carey (16 points) lead the way for Abington. As for Carey, it was the point guards most balanced game of the season by also adding five steals, six assists and four rebounds.

"Carey is one of the more underrated players in the league," added Byron. "He protects the ball very well. So we are not losing many scoring opportunities due to careless passing and turnovers. You saw a great example of that tonight with Bill."

Cohasset got 22 points from junior Chris Bilodeau, however they also committed 22 turnovers for the game.

"We had our opportunities tonight," said Ford. "We just did not protect the ball on the offensive end. At times we got very careless and it will eventually catch up to you. The final score indicates that, but the guys still played very hard the entire game. That is all you can ask for."

The first half gave every indication though that this would be a game contested all the way to the final buzzer. Within the first nine minutes of action there were seven lead changes and four ties. The final tie coming on a Perry baseline drive to tie the score at 18.

Abington would take the lead on a give and go from Brian McSharry to Junkins, which was followed by a three pointer by Carey to increase the Green Wave lead to 23-18 with 7:00 left in the first half.

Bilodeau, as he did for most of the game, would keep the Skippers alive with a strong drive to the goal to close the gap to 23-20. However, a basket and

Playing for pride

Eliminated from postseason picture, Lady Skippers still set sights on strong finish

By Lou Molinari

The Cohasset High girls basketball team has a new motto: "play with intensity." The Lady Skippers adopted this last Tuesday.

The motto proved a good one, but it still needs a little more intensity work to get that intensity thing going to make the intensity work.

The Skippers kicked off the motto during halftime of Tuesday's home game with Abington, which the vistors won, 47-38.

At the end of the first half, Abington was flying, 28-13. The 15-point deficit suddenly had the Skippers chanting "Intensity! Intensity."

The Cohasset girls did get intense over the situation, and continued cutting down the lead. But while the intensity thing was working for Cohasset, there was another problem — the foul line.

"The girls had a very poor night at the foul line," noted Cohasset coach Ellen Carr. "They played with exceptional intensity during the second half.

Swim meet losses can be broken down into three categories: shoulds, woulds and the could nots. The Scituate-Cohasset swim team's meet last Friday falls into the shoulda catergory, while their Tuesday loss to Sharon is definitely a could not.

The Sci-Cohs should have beaten Barnstable, and might well have had injuries and sickness not ripped through the roster, leaving the team without its three best swimmers. Meanwhile, the Sci-Cohs could not have beaten the mighty Sharon squad on any day. The Eagles powered their way to a 103-71 victory over the girls, and an 80-40 decision for the males.

"There's nothing you can do at times like last Friday," conceded third year coach Jamie Kearney, who was missing two senior captains and her freshman phenom for the Barnstable match. "We lost some very key people. But Sharon, on the other hand, is just unbelievable. The fact that we swam so well against them just speaks volumes for the hard work our team has put in this year."

Sharon now has positioned itself to capture the Old Colony League crown, standing as the only team this year to unseat last year's champion Nauset team. The Eagles should also have a strong chance to earn the title of

Cohasset skiers off to strong start

The recent frigid temperatures have not deterred the Cohasset High Ski Team from competing at Blue Hills, although some might say is as much a test of endurance as speed. Halfway through the race season, the Ski Team, coached by Jack Dane, is in fourth place in the small school division. The student's race in both Slalom and Giant Slalom formats to obtain individual and team points. Co-captains, Juniors Jessie Guild and Andrew Busk have consistently earned points for the team, giving them a good chance at representing Cohasset at the State Championship in late February.

For the girl's team Junior Brenna O'Donnell and Sophomore Elizabeth Stone have added to Jessie Guild's overall results by earning points in the last two races. Freshmen Emile Shea and Catherine Whoriskey are just fractions of a second from contributing to that all-important point total.

On the boy's team, freshman Prescott Busk has picked up speed to add to the team totals. Freshman Daniel Sullivan is on the verge of earning points as are returning juniors and consistent performers, Ryan Oftshun and Dan Roth. With such a young team, the future looks bright.

The Cohasset Ski Team is organized as a club sport, which is fully funded by the participants. Race results are posted on MBSLE.org.

foul shot later by Junkins with under 0:04 left in the half gave Abington a 29-22 halftime lead.

Cohasset came out with an aggressive man to man defensive set to start the second half, but Abington countered with some timely outside shooting. A ten footer from Perry and a three pointer later by Carey, the Green Wave grew their lead to 34-22 as the second half opened.

The Skippers would get as close as seven following a nice give and go from junior Sean Connolly (nine rebounds) to Bilodeau, but Abington would always respond on the other end. Bilodeau's basket was immediately answered on a quick transition break and basket from McSharry to get the lead back to nine.

Moments later, a drive to the basket by Bilodeau lead to a hoop, basket and made foul shot to put a spark into the Skipper roster. As was the case most of the night, Abington responded with a McSharry three pointer to get the Green Wave lead back to 13 at 48-35.

"We made the big plays tonight when we needed to," said Byron. "The one thing I like is that we did not let up when we got the lead. We continued to play smart and aggressive. Guys were hustling all over the place and that saved us some points tonight."

Despite a late run by Cohasset in the last three minutes, strong free throw shooting down the stretch from Carey and Dan Hoffman, who came off the bench with seven points, sealed the Green Wave victory. Cohasset's Ben Lynner added 11 points for the Skippers.

Skippers went match-for-match with their opponents, winning by a score of 39-27 on the strength of three key pins. Sophomore Joey Kehoe (125), Matt Casey and Matt Baroudi figured in with six point victories. Winning by points were Cambi, senior Dave Kupsc (112), Terry Baroudi, and McKenna.

The final meet of the night was a 57-16 massacre of Keefe Tech, which merely featured a far superior team showing the form that made it one of the top teams in Division 3 right now.

The real highlight of this match was Chris McKenna, who took down Keefe's senior Russ Luttrell. McKenna had lost in two previous meetings with Luttrell (who is ranked fifth in the state for the 145 class), but got the better in this meeting by a 5-2 decision. McKenna will likely receive consideration for a very high seed at Sectionals, as he has compiled a 24-2 record this year, with losses only to the 145-pound wrestlers ranked number 1 and 2 in Massachusetts.

Heading into Sectionals, which will be held on February 14 and 15, Foxboro is clearly the team to beat, according to Sweeney ("they're head and shoulders above everybody," assessed the CHS coach). However, Cohasset should be right in the mix for a top three team finish, along with Mansfield, Duxbury, Rockland and Canton.

Cohasset will head into Sectionals, if all healthy, with six wrestlers who placed last year, and five who finished in the top five in the Sectional Tournament.

Tumblers look to extend season

Postseason berth still a possibility for C-N gymnasts

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

With two meets left, the Cohasset/Norwell girl's gymnastics team is gearing up for the chance to make the South Sectionals.

Needing big scores this week, the girls hope their 129.775 average score can shoot over or at 130, a number that will likely land the squad in the Sectionals.

"This is obviously a huge week for us," acknowledged head coach Kara Connerty. "Our goal is to get an overall team average of 130 points and then wait and see if that's enough for us to qualify for the Sectionals."

This week's meets are Wednesday night against Hingham, a meet that occurred after the Mariner's press time, and Thursday night at 6:30 at Head Over Heels in Norwell. The All-League meet will be this Saturday at Carver.

Cohasset/Norwell won their last two meets, the first a 129.05-103.25 win over Duxbury, and the last a 129.05-113.85 win over Carver.

Against Duxbury, Meredith Bixby won the all-around with a 34.3 score, her third highest for the season, Nancy Durkin came in second with a 31.9, Katherine Coyne was second on beam with an 8.2 and Jen Guiney was second on the vault with an 8.1.

In the Carver win, Bixby and Durkin were first and second in the all-around again, Bixby with a 33.9 and Durkin with a 32.8. Lisa Spirito was second on the vault with a 8.0, and Erin Kelley was third on the floor with an 8.25.

We just couldn't sink the ball at the line. That was the big difference in the game."

The coach added: "We got that intensity thing going pretty good. If the kids can keep that up, there's a good chance we may just win the remaining four games of the season."

Unfortunately, Tuesday's loss left the Lady Skippers now playing for pride alone. The loss dropped them to 5-11 with just those four games remaining, making it impossible for them to reach that magic .500 mark needed for postseason qualification.

Senior captain Lindsay Grossman led the team both at the offensive end (15 points) and on the backboards (8 rebounds).

"Lindsay did an outstanding job for us," commented coach Carr. "She certainly had intensity going."

La'Raine Langford, another of the four senior captains, was second in scoring for Cohasset with seven points. She also had five assists and four steals.

Also playing well for Cohasset were Maura O'Brien, Casey Anderson, Danielle Pinkus, Heather Peraino, Jen Buckley and Ashley Faber.

Conference champions a week from this Saturday.

The biggest story from the Sci-Cohs perspective was Cohasset freshman Mammie Daley, who qualified for Sectionals in the 100 backstroke. After her previous two attempts had fallen just tenths of a second short of the qualifying time, Daley swam a 1:14.15 to become the third female on the team to earn a spot at Sectionals. Finishing third in the backstroke, Daley also came in second in the 100 butterfly with a time of 1:17.97.

Scituate junior Coral Yang, who will join Daley at Sectionals in the butterfly and 100 Individual Medley, won the 100 freestyle and took second in the IM with a season best time of 2:31.76.

Scituate sophomore Becky Keys inched closer to postseason qualification for diving with a score of 162.45. Keys needs to clear 165 to qualify, and this was the closest she had come to her mark this season. Keys won the Nantucket Invitational last Saturday, indicating last year's Pilgrim Conference diving champ could be up for a repeat performance.

The Sci-Cohs girls relays looked very strong, closing out the meet with a 1-2 finish in the 400 free relay, for a 12-point swing. The team of Yang, Daley, Keys and junior Delia Regan took first, while Shevawn Mayo, Elisa Jerome, Jenn Noonan and Erin Feeney were not far behind.

On the boys side, the Eagles won every individual event except one: the 50 yard freestyle. I proudly state that I edged out Sharon's Matt Abrams by one-hundredth of a second for a six point win. While I'm on the subject, I also took second in the 100 breaststroke with a season best time.

Freshman James Smith, back in action after one week away from the team, took home two second places, in the 200 IM and in the 100 fly. Smith's time of 1:05.64 in the butterfly shows a drop of nine seconds over the course of the season.

"He is one powerful swimmer," lauded Kearney. "He was arguably the best swimmer on the team at the beginning of the season, but that hasn't stopped him from working and working to drop his times at every meet."

The relay team of Ingber, Smith, Garrett Donovan and Maran Monaco took first in the 200 relay, with a time of 1:49.86. Although this is not the championship line-up for this particular relay, the win showed the Sci-Cohs impressive depth for their small team.

Last Friday, the team lost a close one to Barnstable, 93-77. Barnstable had a small but very powerful team, made up of only 12 swimmers, nine of them male.

The Sci-Cohs were left victim of a very regimented officiating style that earned the team three disqualifications and myriad hesitant starts. Barnstable, well accustomed to the pair of officials, took advantage for an early lead while the visitors were still getting used to the unique starting style, where no one can move once they step up on the block.

"Every ref has his style; I just don't agree with this guy's style," said a grinning Kearney. "But, hey, we got past it. That's what the good teams do."

Hitters' Workshop returns to SSBC

February school vacation, Feb. 18-21, in Hingham

HINGHAM - The popular Hitters' Workshops returns to the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham during the February school vacation.

The third of four special Hitters' Workshops, under the direction of veteran SSBC instructor Rick DelVecchio, will be offered Feb. 18-21 to players in two different age groups: 8-12 and 13-18.

"Lectures and drills are intended to create habits that will give hitters what they need to succeed in games," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. explained.

SSBC's Hitters' Workshop features daily hitting lectures, five different hitting stations, various skills work and drills, live hitting cage with pitchers, soft toss and bunting stations, two live hitting stations, and a safety station for inside pitches.

Players 8-12 report at 9 a.m. to 10:45 a.m., while ages 13-18 go from 11 a.m. to 12:45 p.m.

The fourth and final SSBC Hitters' Workshop of the 2002-2003 academic year will be conducted during the April school vacation.

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

And other neat Marinerland sports stories

This had the makings of a true story destined to be exiled to Urban Legend status.

And even though it didn't go off exactly as planned, there'll still probably be a good number of folks who, hearing about it years from now, will say "Nah, that never happened."

Those who tell it will need to produce a newspaper with a written account to avoid being labeled a prevaricator. So, as I see it, I'm merely performing a public duty here.

It still is a very cool story, but...sigh, it could have been a truly great one.

What do you think are the odds of high school sweethearts, both basketball stars, reaching the 1,000 career points milestone on the same evening? Virtually nil, I'd say. In fact, it seems quite likely this is something that has never happened in the history of our race.

Well, Scituate's Tom Cuddihy and Rockland's Melissa Murphy fell just one 3-point bomb short of making mortal history last Friday night.

Cuddihy, a junior who currently leads all of Eastern Mass in scoring with a per game average of 28.8, nailed his 999th, 1,000th and 1,001st point with a bomb from beyond the arc with 8:49 left in the second half of SHS's tough luck 62-57 loss to Patriot League rival Hanover on Friday night.

At the moment Tom netted his milestone, girlfriend Melissa, a senior, was trying in vain to get her 13th point of the game to reach quadruple figures for her own career in a battle with Patriot League rival Hingham. Alas, Melissa remained stuck on 10 points, and her Lady Bulldogs likewise fell in defeat.

Melissa had to wait until tonight's game at Norwell High to try again to reach the magic millennium mark.

So what do you think are the odds of high school sweethearts reaching the 1,000 career points milestone four days apart? Still, pretty long, wouldn't you say?

Of course, most circumstances regarding the relationship between Tom and Melissa seem more than a bit of a stretch.

Rockland and Scituate High Schools are Patriot League rivals, arch-rivals in boys basketball. In fact, this might just be the South Shore's most heated basketball rivalry. And that's just the tip of the ice burg.

Melissa's brother Bobby (a 2001 RHS grad and former football, hoops and track star there) went head-to-head with Cuddihy in the backcourt more than once in a couple of classic Sailors-Bulldogs battles in the 2000-'01 season.

Melissa and Tommy met at a Patriot League spring track meet in the spring of 2001 following that winter season, each starring for their respective combatant teams. They started dating shortly thereafter and have been a couple ever since.

Bulldogs vs. Sailors = Montagues vs. Capulets...hardly? The irony of it all brings at most a wry smile to the face of any Rockland or Scituate sports fan who is in the know.

Speaking of millennium marks, Norwell senior Gerry Corcoran is on a pace to pass that mark for the second time this week. Gerry, who reached 1,000 career points five games into his junior season, likely would have topped 2,000 this past Monday at home versus Carver had illness not forced him to miss Friday night's tilt at Mashpee.

Gerry, who two weeks ago surpassed Dan McNamara's all-time school scoring record of 1,800 points, scored xx in Monday night's lambasting of league rival Carver, xx-yy, to move to 1,9xx, so he will likely reach the milestone at North Cambridge Catholic tonight or at home versus Abington Friday (both 6:30 starts). If the road game is as lopsided as the first go-round was with NCC was (a 21-point home Norwell win), we're guessing Clippers coach John Willis puts Gerry on the bench for good if he gets within three points in order to let him reach the mark in front of a home crowd.

Speaking of the Norwell boys, it seems almost unimaginable to envision anyone in the South Section of Div. 3 even giving them even a worthwhile tussle right now, never mind beating them. The Clippers are coasting with a 15-0 record, their average margin of victory over 25 points, with the closest game a mere 12-point win way down on the far end of the Cape against Harwich.

The Norwell boys knocked off the biggest school in the state, New Bedford, on Wednesday, by 34-points, 84-50. With a student enrollment exceeding 5,300, New Bedford is quite literally 10 times the size of Norwell High. The law of averages would dictate N.B. has a varsity hoop team with nothing but thoroughbreds, and indeed it does. And yet they could not even keep it close against Norwell. Think about that.

It could be a March for the ages at Norwell High, with the lady hoopsters, led by perhaps the South Shore's best female talent in Sarah Cox, also likely to be a strong player in the Div. 4 state tourney.

The girls team was allowed to drop down to D4 a year ago, and could well roll behind Cox, Shauna Eyster and fast-emerging frosh point guard Holly Gustalli .

Then there's the Scituate High hockey team, which has come out of nowhere, much like the Cohasset High icemen of a year ago (19-0-1 in regular season) to emerge as a legitimate candidate for state glory. They are currently 12-1-1 — their loss to Div. 2 power Marshfield, their tie to Div. 1 tourney bound Bridgewater-Raynham — and riding a 10 game unbeaten streak. At the moment, they are ranked second among all Div. 3 teams in Eastern Mass by Hockey Night in Boston (behind defending state champ Westwood) and third by the Herald (behind Westwood and Lowell).

The Sailors feature three strong lines, exceptional depth at the blue line (particularly for a D3 program) and a returning Mariner All-Scholastic talent between the pipes in Joe Duggan.

the start of the second half of the league slate last Wednesday saw Norwell avenge an earlier season 4-1 loss to Cohasset with a 4-3 win. The Skippers also beat Abington in go-round number one by a 4-1 score.

Blake did not seem surprised by this turn of events or down on his team as a result. In fact, the play of his team when the game was on the line seemed to leave him with an overriding positive feeling.

"We played pretty well in the first period, not as well in the second, but I thought we were definitely the stronger and more aggressive team in the third," appraised the former Thayer and Blue Hills assistant coach. "That says a lot about the character of our team. That was definitely a positive.

"That's the kind of thing you like to see toward the end of the year when you're fighting for a playoff spot."

Abington is likewise fighting for a postseason berth. With this loss, and another to Rockland on Monday, the Green Wave fell to 6-7-1 with six games remaining.

"Abington came to play too," noted Blake. "They gave us all they had. We were coming off a tough loss (to Norwell), but we hung tough and pulled out a win."

Defense dominated the first two periods, with Abington's forwards doing a nice job of bottling up the Skippers main offensive weapons—slick skating and puck handling captains John Durkin and Matt Davis—in the middle of the ice before they could build up a head of steam.

With so much attention being paid to the Skippers top two scorers, junior defenseman Mike Devine was able to break free for an electrifying end-to-end rush that he capped with a picture perfect backhand feed from the left corner to the hard-charging Mike Rasmussen in the slot for the quick re-direct past Abington goalie Ken O'Sullivan, putting the Skippers on the board first 3:31 in.

The hosts answered with 5:53 to go in the opening period when Greg Anderson got a stick on a Matt Kenney slapper from the right point, fortuitously re-directing it to Matt Sulmonte camped by the left post for the easy one-timer into the open half of the net behind Cohasset netminder Stefan Parnell.

Though it was largely an up and down game through the rest of the first and all of the second period, the Skippers clearly created more quality scoring opportunities over this time, but O'Sullivan (29 saves) proved equal to all salvos. League leading scorer Durkin (20 goals, 14 assists) was able to break free a handful of times, and twice hit posts.

Parnell also came up big on a handful of occasions, his best stop the bang-bang snare of a wrister from Abington's Pat Bishop on a partial break-in midway through the second period.

Cohasset clearly carried the play in the third period, with the heroics of O'Sullivan keeping it a tie game for the first 8:55 of the final frame. The senior netminder somehow got his pad on a Durkin bullet from the right circle on a break-in four minutes in and then showed just as much quickness pouncing on the rebound an instant before Davis got there.

The ability to dodge bullets finally faltered, though, as Cohasset pressure forced an Abington penalty with 6:43 to go in the game and it took the Skippers only 38 seconds to cash in for the gamewinner. O'Sullivan got a pad on a hard low slapper from the point by Cohasset defenseman Tom Anderson, and even the attempted Durkin follow, but the third time proved the charm for the Skippers, as Straughn poked the carom home.

Hockey Notes

Norwell 4, Cohasset 3

The Clippers avenged a Jan. 4 4-1 loss to Cohasset with a hard fought 4-3 win at Pilgrim Arena last Wednesday. Davis and freshman Matt O'Connell matched first period Norwell goals to send it into the break tied at 2, and Rasmussen gave the Skippers their only lead of the game early in the second. However, the Clippers would score the game's only other two goals before the end of the middle frame to put it away.

The Skippers out-shot Norwell for the game, 35-26, but Clippers junior goaltender Tom Sullivan continued to build a case for an all-star team selection with some sterling stops, including a flat out stoning of Durkin on a break-in with under three minutes to play.

After scoring in each of the first 13 games this season, Durkin has now been held without a goal for two straight heading into last night's meeting with SSL rival Hull. Defenses are now clearly keying on him. Norwell coach Paul Hurley admitted openly that his team would do this heading into last Wednesday's game.

The talented Cohasset senior still leads the South Shore League in scoring, though, with 34 points (20 goals, 14 assists). Behind him in the team scoring race, and fourth in the SSL, is Davis with 26 points (11-15). The two senior captains are followed by the surging Rasmussen (6-9—15), Straughn (4-9—13) and Anderson (3-9—12), the third team captain.

Parnell, a freshman who shows improvement every time out, lowered his already impressive goals against average to 2.2 per game (31goals/14games) with his showing against Abington.

Despite some noteworthy evidence to the contrary (the preceding few paragraphs among that), Coach Blake sees his Skippers as a team that needs to worry about defense first, and he's got the numbers to support his point.

In games this season where the Skippers let up three goals or more, they have one win, that being an 11-3 laugher over Mashpee. When they've surrendered four or more goals, they're 0-5.

"It's like I said from day one: we're not a team that's going to win many shootouts," asserted Blake. "We're at our best when we concentrate first on defense and pick our spots on offense."

Heading into last night's game, the Skippers needed only three more points (two for a win, one for a tie) in their final five games to qualify for the postseason for the second straight year. Meetings with Mashpee this Sunday and Carver next Saturday, teams the Skippers beat 11-3 and 7-0 in the initial go-rounds, should present golden opportunities for the Skippers to sew that up or improve on their seeding position.

The game on the schedule that has a big circle around it is next Wednesday's showdown with Harwich (6-1-1) on the Cape. The Skippers torched the Rough Ryders the first time around, 7-1, but coach Blake is expecting a much tougher go of it the second time around, particularly given that the South Shore League crown may well be on the line in that one.

MAXLAX REPORT

Game of the Week: U14 Stingrays top Blades, 10-9 in OT

If a coach is lucky, every now and then they get to see the fruits of their labors in the performance of their players. This week's MaxLax GOW provided one of those moments in a contest that was arguably one of the best that we've seen at any level in any session.

The SRAYS are a new entry this session, but they were formed around a core of veteran MaxLaxers that have proven their abilities and have established good momentum coming into this game with a couple of tough wins. The BLADES are a "veteran an team" of diehard lacrosse junkies that love to play the game and though only 7th graders, they've been together since they were 9 and they definitely have the skills to hold their own against many of the stronger, and more experienced teams that they face.

The crowd knew something special was unfolding as the opening score by the BLADES was a double assist from Nate Porter, to Mike Grimm, to Chris Mills who finished off the trifecta with a split dodge around the crease.

The SRAYS, weren't about to give up their momentum this early as Mike Rice took the next face-off for an unassisted tally and then followed it up by forcing a double team that freed up Andrew Gormley for their second score. Mills then returned the favor to Grimm after he came up with the loose ball on a broken clear and found Grimm cutting down the lane for an easy strike. Dan Ferzoco then answered for the SRAYS off an assist from Gormley, who followed that up with another perfect feed to a charging Rice who also found the net.

This game could have easily turned into another SRAY's victory as the next five minutes resulted in a number of rushes that could have easily produced goals. However, led by the defensive prowess of James Jarzneiki and Matt Blair, the SRAYS came away empty handed and more than just a little bit frustrated with nothing to show for their efforts.

But you can't win a game on defense alone and the BLADES managed to take advantage of a penalty situation where PJ McCaw found Porter on top of the box for a quick strike and a score. Grimm won the next face-off and then, weaving in and out of the defensive traffic, posted his second tally going down low from about 15 feet out. Rice stemmed the tide with another solo count, again drawing the double-team, but this time escaping with the finisher as the first half ended 5 - 4.

With the BLADES shorthanded (no subs) and with more than just a few walking wounded, they were riding high having kept the game tight with a lot of the credit going to first time goaltender Alex Shipp. As Shipp would come out in the 2nd half, another first-timer, Nate Porter donned the goalie garb and, though tentative at first, he proved to be the BLADES secret weapon throughout the next 20 minutes of play. Rice (on his way to a 6 point game) quickly scored as the 2nd half opened and the crowd was a little anxious as Porter didn't seem to be very "excited" about the role he had come to.

However, as the fans soon saw for themselves, Porter became the "iron curtain" and practically shut down the scoring threats to give his team a fighting chance. McCaw found glory on a turn around one-timer in front of the SRAYS goal. The fans then saw a repeat of last week's play of the week as Grimm intercepted a clearing pass, sent it behind the net to Mills who forwarded it to McCaw, who then sent it back to Grimm who responded with a blistering upper right corner goal. Score tied 6 - 6 and the fun wasn't over.

Ferzoco notched his second score off of spin move that left the defense dizzy. The BLADES Mark Flibotte took a feed from McCaw in front of the cage, faked left, then spun the opposite way and shot to the lower corner ala a "fall-away" jumper, landing on the mat at the same time that the ball lit the lamp. Score 7 - 7. Porter then stopped several point blank shots that were 2nd and 3rd efforts by Rice and Ryan Donovan, only to clear it down the field to Mills who also found Flibotte nestled tight on the crease as he repeated his spin move, but this time got to watch his own performance as he saw the "puff". While the BLADES continued to focus on the SRAYS "big threats", they set up their next score perfectly by drawing several defenders into the center only to dish it back out to a waiting Colin Staples who then used the screen to get it past Porter. 8 - 8 .

With less than two minutes on the clock, the SRAYS went to their strength and though, repelled twice on the same rush, Donovan found the magic off of a feed by Rice which looked like it might be the game winner. In the next minute of play, with the SRAYS in possession of the ball and mounting another charge to put it away, Rice got away in front for what looked like a sure goal to everyone. Only Porter wasn't convinced, as he proceeded to "stuff" the shooter not once, but twice off of the rebound, and then came down with the ball and quickly go it out to Grimm who was streaking across the middle. He then caught the defense off guard with a quick no look pass to Alex Shipp who put it in with a quick fake, tying the score at 9 - 9 and sending the game into OT.

Though the OT only lasted a few minutes and was punctuated by a solo shot and the winning goal by Rice for the SRAYS to cap off a fine individual performance, this one had all the makings for a timeless ESPN Classic and for those that got to see it and play in it, they've all got a feature length highlight film that they'll remember for a long time.

PLAYER of the GAME: The Blades Nathan Porter, who was "fearless under pressure."

PLAY of the WEEK: BLADES v STINGRAYS - Did you see this one ?

We try not to highlight the same team twice in a row, but this one merited the attention. In a tough OT loss to the STINGRAYS, the BLADES needed some extra help to stay in the game and they got it from first time goalie Nathan Porter. After getting over some first inning jitters, Nate settled in and made one remarkable save after another culminating in a "triple-decker" play when he 1) stuffed the shooter, 2) stopped the next shot off of the first rebound, and 3) with only seconds remaining, miraculously cleared the ball to set up the tying score that sent the game into overtime. You don't see this one very often ...

Cohasset Little League signups

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball is opening an exciting new chapter in its history and will hold its registration for the upcoming softball and baseball season on Saturday, March 1, 2003 from 9 to 11 AM outside both the Osgood and High School gymnasiums. This registration is for boys and girls aged 5 to 12 as of July 31, 2003.

This will be the only registration opportunity for the upcoming season for this age group. All parents /guardians who are unable to make this registration should register their child by obtaining the necessary registration forms by contacting Anne Kearney on 781-383-1451. All registrations accepted after March 1, 2003 will be subject to a $10 late fee. A copy of the child's birth certificate must accompany a new player's registration forms.

The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the major league baseball (ages 10 to 12) and softball divisions (ages 11 and 12) will be $100. The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the minor league divisions for baseball (ages 7-11) and softball (ages 7-10) divisions will be $85. The registration fee for the farm league instructional tee ball division (ages 5-6) will be $65. In addition, due to recent the child protection program instituted by Little League governing organization, all adults interested in coaching, managing or volunteering in any way, are required to register at this same time and supply a photocopy of a government issued identification. Individuals not complying with this requirement will not be allowed to participate in the CYBSA program.

Questions regarding either player or coach registration may be directed to Mike Kearney on 781-383-1451 or Nancy Froio on 781-383-1897.

Project SAFEGUARD expands, new programs planned

When Project SAFEGUARD first began in Cohasset back in the mid 1990s, a few parents working closely with School Health Education Coordinator, Michael Gill, set out to raise monies in the community to support a special seventh grade program.

Last December, this Project SAFEGUARD Committee joined forces with the school-based Health Education Advisory Committee and the community-based Town Drug and Alcohol Committee. Together these three groups will work to develop and promote physical, social, and emotional/mental health programs for K-12 students.

It's designed to bring students and parents together to attend presentations and workshops designed to address a number of child and adolescent health and social issues.

In addition, because of the at-large community work that the Town Drug & Alcohol Committee has performed for many years, the Project SAFEGUARD Committee will make an effort to be responsive to the needs of the entire community by working with the Parent School Organization, the Social Service League, the Department of Public Health, the Police Department, and other agencies and organizations.

What is special about this program is that it's designed to bring students and parents together to attend presentations and workshops designed to address a number of child and adolescent health and social issues. Last October, the Committee organized an exceptional program for seventh-grade students and their parents at several sites surrounding the town common. Presently, plans are being made for a program for eighth grade students and their parents on March 12 at the Middle-High School auditorium and on April 9 for sixth-grade students and their parents at the Deer Hill School. Both programs will be held during the school day. Parents, please note the dates.

Project SAFEGUARD meetings are generally held in the Middle-High School library, one morning per month. Community members interested in working with this committee are invited to contact Health Education Coordinator, Dr. Michael Gill (383-4205) mikegill@chs.ssec.org, or parent reps., Sally Sisson (salsisson@attbi.com), Karen Oronte (oronte@attbi.com), or the Reverend Clifford Cutler (ccutler@ststephens.org).

League provides student job bank

The Social Service League provides a referral service to match high school students looking for work opportunities in Cohasset. If you are interested in hiring a student to work for you, please call the League Office at 781-383-0771 between 8:30 a.m. and 3 p.m., Monday through Friday.

A list of student names is available for the following services: lawn mowing, leaf raking, general yard work, cooking, computer skills work, babysitting, house sitting, pet sitting, etc. at $7 per hour.

Children's vacation art series offered

The Children's Creativity Workshop is offering a special series of art activities for the February vacation. The series meets Feb. 17, 18 and 19. Boys and girls, ages five to seven, meet from 9-10:30 a.m.; ages eight to nine meet from 11 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.; and ages 10-12 years meet from 1:30-3 p.m.

"Stories in Clay" is the theme of this workshop. Each student will sculpt their original design, inspired by a story, poem or song of their choice, in a miniature setting. Techniques of developing characters and environments will be provided. To ensure a place for your young artist, pre-paid registration is due by Feb. 7.

Call Lynn at 781-749-59123 for information or visit their Web site at www.childrenscreativity.com.

IT'S HAPPENING

Massasoit hosts Scott Ketcham exhibition

The Akillian Gallery at Massasoit Community College's Canton campus, hosts "Odalisque," an exhibition of approximately 24 mixed media works by Scott Ketcham including oils, pastels, charcoal, and ink drawings of the female figure. The exhibition is free and open to the public through Feb. 28, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and from 6 to 9 p.m. on Thursday evenings. Special showings are held by request.

This exhibition of female figures is part of an ongoing initiative presently in its fourth year wherein Massasoit as part of a community outreach features local artists and their works.

Award winning artist, Scott Ketcham grew up in Cohasset, and since 1990, his studio loft has been in the Codman Building in Rockland where he is a member of the Plain Street Artists, a group of more than 55 artists and artisans. His works have been exhibited at the Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton and he has received awards in both, sculpture and painting.

On Wednesday evenings from 6 to 10 p.m., Ketcham has agreed to teach "Drawing II," the study of the figure, at the Canton campus of Massasoit Community College. For information about his exhibition or figure drawing course, call Linda Dunn, Acting Dean in the Division of Applied Technology at 781-821-2222, ext. 2105.

Newcomers' club

Join the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers' Club. You don't have to be new. Applications can be found at the Scituate-Cohasset libraries or South Shore Community Center. The activities include Book Club, Bon Appetite Club, Men's Night Out, Ladies Night Out, Playgroups, and much more.

Adult caregivers

Cohasset Elder Affairs will be holding an adult caregivers presentation and discussion on Thursday, March 20 from 1-2 p.m. titled "Adult Caregivers: Coming Up To Bat." The guest speaker will be Carolyn Housman, L.I.C.S.C. who will speak at the Cohasset Elder Affairs facility at 3 North Main St. Housman's talk is about the complexities and concerns of family dynamics when an elder person needs care.

Please RSVP to Cohasset Elder Affairs by calling 781-383-9112.

African dance band at Coffeehouse

On Saturday, Feb. 15, at 8 p.m., the Old Ship Church's Coffeehouse off the Square presents Boston's premier African dance band, Rumbafrica. Congo's Tshibangu Kadima and his exotically costumed international musicians, singers, and dancers draw on contemporary and traditional Congolese, Cuban, and other styles and rhythms towards one end — great dance music. They include the sweet vocal harmonies and lilting dance rhythms of classic Congolese Rumba, as well as guitar theatrics, percussion breakdowns, and traditional dancing.

The coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham Square.

Tickets are $10 at the door and coffees, teas, cider, and homemade desserts are 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian/Universalist Service Committee. For more information, contact: Jim Watson, 781-749-1767 or John Leonard, 781-749-2852.

Kids classes offered

The South Shore Community Center at 3 North Main St. is offering the following classes:

Thursday, March 27 from 4-5:30 p.m.: Babysitting For Boys & Girls; ages 10 and up; four weeks; $45 members, $48 nonmembers.

Saturday, March 22 from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m.: Kids Cooking — Accompanied by an Adult: $45 members, and $50 nonmembers.

AAUW holds book discussion Feb. 11

The local chapter of the AAUW (American Association of University Women) will meet in Weymouth at the Allerton House off Broad St on Tuesday, Feb. 11 at 7:30 p.m. The public will welcome to attend this meeting which will be a discussion of the book, "The Bondswoman's Narrative" by Hannah Crafts.

"The Bondwoman's Narrative" was written in the 1850s by a young female house slave who, with her mistress, escapes to freedom. This fictionalized account gives us a view of slavery unique in our history and speaks to the passion for education and freedom that is at the heart of the American dream.

Discovered by Harvard Professor Henry Louis Gates, Jr. as an unpublished manuscript in an auction catalogue of African American artifacts, the work has been exhaustively researched and authenticated.

Whether or not you have the chance to read the book before the meeting, come and join us for a lively discussion.

The goal of the AAUW is to promote education and equity for all women and girls.

For more than a century, AAUW has influenced legislative debate on critical issues such as education, Social Security, sex discrimination, civil rights, reproductive choice, affirmative action, Title IX, welfare reform, vocational education, pay equity, family and medical leave, and health care reform. Local branches carry out programs such as diversity workshops, work with local schools, raise money for the AAUW Educational Foundation and the Legal Advocacy Fund.

Since 1968, the Hingham Area Branch has enjoyed activities dedicated to lifelong learning and the camaraderie of educated women. Opportunities for networking and volunteering exist on a local and state level.

To learn more about the AAUW, its vision and potential value to you, please reserve a space by calling co-president Priscilla Johnsen at 781-337-2143.

What's New

"In Search of Robinson Crusoe" by Tim Severin (Nonfiction)

Who was the real inspiration behind Daniel Defoe's tale of Robinson Crusoe? As he did with his "In Search of Moby Dick," Severin investigates the real life stories the author might have drawn from and then travels to the remote sites to test his various theories — a literary detective story with a surprising conclusion.

"Savage Reprisals" by Peter Gay (Nonfiction)

Here's a book for anyone with a literary bent who always assumed that fiction, especially the "realistic" novel, is based on historical truth and is thus a valuable resource to historians. Not so, says Gay, and he used "Bleak House," "Madame Bovary," and "Buddenbrooks" to make his case.

"Anytime, Anywhere" by Robert Spector (Nonfiction)

For anyone committed to building a business around customer service, this book is an invaluable guide. Spector show you how to meet and exceed the expectations of customers in addition to offering powerful insights for promoting products and services and building customer loyalty.

"The Psychology of The Sopranos" by Glen O. Gabbard, M.D. (Nonfiction)

Drawing on his own professional experience, psychologist and psychoanalyst Gabbard takes a hard and humorous look at the psyches of America's favorite mob family. Fans of the show will enjoy Gabbard's assessment of the psychology of the characters, the show's depiction of therapy, and how "The Sopranos" showcases the psychological ambiguities and conflicts in our own lives.

"A Brilliant Solution" by Carol Berkin (Nonfiction)

Subtitled "Inventing the American Constitution," this is the story of how a group of lawyers, politicians and ordinary men came together in Philadelphia in 1787 to try to create a form of government more stable then the disastrous Articles of Confederation. Berkin takes the reader into the hearts and minds of our founders and shows us the human side of a great accomplishment.

Blizzard exhibit opens on Feb. 8

On the afternoon of Feb. 6, 1978 a storm arrived on the South Shore that would virtually hold the area hostage for nine days. By 6 p.m. many towns had lost power. Electricity would not return for four, or in some areas, five days. Many residents saw their homes devastated by heavy snowfall, high winds, and extreme flooding. Forced to evacuate, most found shelter in the public schools. Suddenly the need arose to feed and care for thousands of cold, hungry, and exhausted people. While the storm soon ended, its effects were felt for years to come.

On Saturday Feb. 8, the Hull Lifesaving Museum, 1117 Nantasket Ave., will open a new exhibit to mark the 25th anniversary of this unforgettable storm. The story of the South Shore's nine-day ordeal through the Blizzard of '78 is a fascinating account of New England weather as well as New England character. Through photographs, newspaper articles, personal testimonies, and film clips the Blizzard of '78 Anniversary Exhibit will examine the impact of the blizzard on the South Shore in terms of both physical damage and community experience.

The museum welcomes guest speaker Chris Haraden, author of the newly published "Storm of the Century: The Great Northeast Blizzard of 1978." Haraden's slide presentation will begin at 1 p.m., followed by a book signing. Light refreshments will be served. This event is open to the public free of charge. For more information contact Victoria Stevens at 781-925-5433.

What is a Day of Harmony?

WLVI-TV (WB56), The Team Harmony Foundation, Community Newspaper Company and the Boston Herald have joined together to bring the message of Team Harmony directly to your school and your community on Thursday, February 27, 2003!

WB56 will host a live, interactive television show, "RealTalk Live" on February 27 from 10 am - 11 am. This commercial-free educational hour will be dedicated to the issues of diversity and ending bigotry and hatred in our communities. Teens will co-host the show, students will form a studio audience and schools will be able to directly participate by calling or emailing their questions and comments.

Through Newspapers in Education (NIE), Community Newspaper Company and the Boston Herald will publish lesson plans and discussion questions to assist educators in facilitating a dialogue in their schools around the issues discussed during the program. Newspapers are provided free of charge to classrooms when you sign-up at www.townonline.com/nie. And, parents can participate at home by using the newspapers to open-up dialogue with their children.

How do I get involved?

Encourage your teacher to sign-up your school or classroom for an assembly to watch "RealTalk Live" on WB56. Sign-up or find more information at www.teamharmony.org.

Former flower child going with the flow

Folk singer Melanie touring to promote new CD

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Folk-rocker Melanie is the kind of "Ultimate Flower Child," hippie singer/songwriter that could have only happened in the late 1960s, or is she?

True, she's best-known, among other career milestones, for braving the elements to comfort the rain-drenched masses at Woodstock during her performance there in 1969. This event subsequently inspired the singer to write "Lay Down (Candles In the Rain)," her Top Ten hit of the following year, partly credited for giving birth to the long-running, infamous tradition of lighting candles and/or Bic lighters at rock concerts. Also in 1970, Melanie became the first pop star to play at Carnegie Hall, and followed the Who on stage at England's Isle of Wight Festival.

Altogether in her late 60s/early 70s heyday, the singer scored a string of pop/rock hits — "Lay Down," "Brand New Key," "Look What They've Done To My Song, Ma" and "Beautiful People" among others — that conveyed her left-field persona with the naive but sincere world-view of good vibes conquering all.

Much of the press in Paris thought I was British, and they used to write things like calling me the female Bob Dylan, and `the lady with the black soul.'"
Melanie

Melanie faded from the spotlight when she semi-retired to domestic life in 1973, but that didn't slow her career down as much as you'd think. She's continued to tour steadily over the last three decades, particularly in Europe. She's released the occasional album on major labels like Arista, Atlantic and others. And the singer enjoyed more recent success in 1989, when she snagged an Emmy for her lyrics to "The First Time I Loved Forever," for the CBS production of "Beauty and the Beast."

Now Melanie is touring in support of a new CD, Crazy Love, which is produced by her longtime producer/husband Peter Schekeryk and features her children Beau Jarred (guitars) and Jeordie (background vocals) Schekeryk. The disc is the singer's first of fresh, all-original material in a number of years, except for a new, slightly rearranged and updated version of "Brand New Key." Melanie brings her tour into Norwell's Company Theatre this Saturday, Feb. 8 for a show at 8 p.m.

"We're out there promoting this new CD," said Melanie, born Melanie Safka, now 55,. "And we've been touring pretty regularly over the past thirty years, but not always with the kind of PR company that we have this time around. This CD is hopefully bringing us back into a higher visibility, more like the old days when we had the hits on the radio. Basically, I've been a working legend, if you will."

Melanie has fond memories of her legendary spot at Woodstock,

Members of the Riverside Repertory Company of Hyde Park make up the cast of "Forever Fosse" being staged through Feb. 13 at Raffael's in Quincy.

"Forever Fosse" serves up dinner and dancing

Raffael's stages tribute to Broadway choreographer

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

As an artist, the late Bob Fosse was known for his completely contemporary approach to dance.

Indeed, Fosse had a unique style which ensured that his work as a choreographer and director was never confused with anyone else's. Snapping fingers, provocatively tilted bowler hats, frequent shoulder rolls, swiveling hips and sexy strutting are among the Fosse signature elements in evidence in the new musical revue "Forever Fosse," currently being presented by J.M. Productions as the opener of its fourth dinner theater season at Raffael's in North Quincy.

After starting out as a dancer in the early 1950s with small roles on Broadway and in movie musicals like "Kiss Me Kate," Bob Fosse's legend as a Broadway choreographer and director was made with a string of hits including "Sweet Charity," "Pippin," "Chicago," and "Dancin'". He also enjoyed success with his choreography for films including "The Pajama Game" and "Damn Yankees." In 1972, after several other directors turned it down, Fosse stepped in and made the movie version of "Cabaret." Featuring music by John Kander and lyrics by Fred Ebb, the film adaptation of the stage hit became one of the most acclaimed and successful movie musicals of the post-MGM era. That year was one of the biggest in Fosse's career. He won an Academy Award for "Cabaret," a Tony for "Pippin" and an Emmy for "Liza with a Z," a television variety special which starred Liza Minnelli.

In the fall of 1998, 11 years after his death, Fosse's longtime muse Ann Reinking teamed with Director Walter Bobbie and creative consultant and Fosse widow Gwen Verdon to stage "Fosse: A Celebration in Song and Dance." After a sold-out pre-Broadway engagement at Boston's Colonial Theatre, the show went on to win the 1999 Tony Award as Best New Musical. At the same time in New York, Fosse's work was also being recreated in Broadway revivals of both "Chicago" and "Cabaret," which are still running today. Some in the entertainment industry have even suggested that the recently released Rob Marshall —directed feature film of "Chicago" owes some of its success to its Fosse connection.

J.M. Productions homage to the late choreographer comes in the form of an original production being staged for the dinner theater by the Riverside Repertory Company of Hyde Park, a song and dance ensemble trained to perform in various styles and in various venues. The revue will feature song and dance numbers like "Steam Heat," "All That Jazz," and "Cabaret," per-

Peak performance

Filmmaker Liesl Clark takes 'Nova' viewers on uncharted climb

By Alexander Stevens
STAFF WRITER

If, during this particularly cold winter, you shiver at the thought of walking from your house to your car in the morning, you'll probably want to avoid the summit of Vinson Massif, the highest peak on the Antarctic.

Liesl Clark, a "Nova" producer who lives in Brighton, scaled the 16,067-foot peak in January 2001 to make "Mountain of Ice," airing at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 11, on WGBH (Ch. 2). And her stories of battling the weather make our recent cold snap seem like a day at the beach.

"It was summer there," she says, "so there's 24 hours of sunlight, and that's kind of warming. But if you climb into a shadow, you get what I called The Steel Glove. It was literally like someone put a steel glove around you, because there's no warmth. You can feel the cold creep toward your core. It's frightening."

On the day that she and the seven other climbers reached the summit, the wind chill kicked in at about 70 degrees below zero. At that temperature, your eyelashes freeze together, any sliver of exposed flesh gets frostbitten, and every breath burns in your lungs.

Liesl Clark

It would be nice to report that the thrill of reaching the top of Antarctica's highest peak created a euphoria in Clark that overwhelmed her pain. It would be nice, but it wouldn't be accurate.

"Zero elation," reports Clark.

The final day of the ascent started poorly for the filmmaker, and it never got better. She awoke with severe altitude sickness: nausea and headaches.

But, encouraged by the gentle coaching of guide Dave Hahn, she soldiered her way to the top.

Oatmeal scones

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Oatmeal scones with pieces of dried fruit are common enough at coffee and teahouses, but rarely get made at home. I discovered why when I made five different recipes, most of which turned out dry and heavy. I was looking for good oat flavor packaged in a scone that wouldn't gag the family dog.

The basic concept is simple. Butter is cut into the dry ingredients (oats, flour, salt, sugar, baking powder, etc.) and then liquid is added which is either buttermilk, milk, or heavy cream. The dough is mixed until it just comes together, pressed into a circle, cut into wedges, and then baked, usually at 350 degrees. One recipe toasted the oats first and then soaked them in buttermilk, which produced good flavor but a heavy texture. Only one of the recipes was reasonably moist – the rest were too heavy – so I began with that one as a starting point.

Since I like the notion of toasting oats for oatmeal and the scone recipe using toasted oats was very flavorful, I started with this technique. I tried toasting the oats in the oven since it had to be heated for the scones. They toasted well at 375 in about eight minutes. I chose to toast them dry for a couple of reasons. First the recipe includes lots of butter that is cut into the dry ingredients. Secondly, the dry toasted oats make for minimal clean up of the sheet, which is used to bake the scones. You can do a simple pass with a towel instead of thorough washing. The oats do have to cool completely before the scones are assembled. For our recipe I settled on 1 1/4 cups each flour and oats.

The scones were definitely on the dry side and I knew that butter held the solution to this problem. After a few tests, I settled on two full sticks. This gave the scones a rich butter flavor, which nicely complements the nutty oats. (I found that if I added any more butter the scones became greasy.) Next, I tested various dairy products. Heavy cream made the scones too heavy, milk and half-and-half were lackluster, but buttermilk was a winner, adding a light note and good flavor. Since I thought the scones were still a bit dense, I added an egg along with the buttermilk. This proved to be my favorite scone. The scones were moister and lighter with the egg. It turned out that 1/3 cup buttermilk and one egg was the perfect quantity.

As for the leavener, I had started testing with 1 1/4 teaspoons baking powder and 3/4 teaspoon soda which, after much testing, turned out to the correct amount. Although a basic scone recipe may use only a tablespoon of sugar, I found that oatmeal scones need a bit more sweetener, 1/3 cup being my favorite quantity. I tried using granulated sugar, light and dark brown sugar, honey and maple syrup. The best-flavored scones were made simply with light brown sugar.

As for the dried fruit, I found that apricots and dried cranberries were winners. Dried blueberries are hard to find and raisins as well as currants were a but dull in flavor although the latter is traditional and tastes perfectly fine. I used 1/3 cup roughly chopped dried apricots and 1/4 cup cranberries in my favorite scones. Ingredients that did not make the cut were dried coconut, nuts, cinnamon, nutmeg, ginger and wheat germ.

As for technique, the dry ingredients are placed in a food processor and mixed to combine. The butter is added and it is cut into the dry ingredients with six 1-second pulses. I then add the oats and fruit and the dry are pulsed again six times. (If the oats were added with the rest of the dry ingredients it became over processed and the scones were dry.) The contents of the food processor are dumped into a bowl and the buttermilk and egg are added. After a quick mix with a fork the mixture is turned onto a countertop. The dough is gently kneaded a few times and then pressed into a disc. The disc is cut into wedges and placed on a parchment lined baking sheet. I baked the scones at 400 degrees (higher than most other recipes I tested) for about 15 minutes. If the oven is higher the scones are likely to burn with all the sugar and butter in this recipe. (If they are baked at a lower temperature they took more time and didn't brown quite as well.) As with most scones they should be held for about 10 minutes before serving since it gives them time to firm up. These scones have a somewhat ragged appearance compared to many other recipes, the price I had to pay to eliminate the choking dry quality of their taller counterparts.

OATMEAL SCONES WITH DRIED APRICOTS AND CRANBERRIES

You can use all apricots, all cranberries, or even currants if you like.

- 1 1/4 cup rolled oats (not instant)
- 1 1/4 cup all purpose flour
- 1/3 cup light brown sugar
- 1 1/4 teaspoon baking powder
- 3/4 teaspoon baking soda
- 3/4 teaspoon salt
- 2 sticks chilled unsalted butter cut into 1/2-inch cubes
- 1/3 cup dried roughly chopped apricots
- 1/4 cup dried sweetened cranberries
- 1/3 cup buttermilk
- 1 large egg

1. Adjust oven rack to center position and heat oven to 375 degrees. Spread oats in an even layer onto a jellyroll pan or cookie sheet. Place in oven and toast until golden brown and fragrant, about 8 to 10 minutes. Remove from oven and cool completely. Wipe sheet, line with parchment paper and increase oven temperature to 400 degrees.

2. Place flour, sugar, baking powder, baking soda and salt in the bowl of a food processor fitted with a steel blade. Blend briefly to combine. Evenly distribute the butter over the dry ingredients and process for six one-second pulses. Add the oats and fruit and pulse an additional six times or until the largest piece of butter is about the size of a pea. Transfer to a large bowl.

3. Stir the buttermilk end egg together in a small bowl or large measuring cup until well combined. Add mixture to the dry ingredients and mix with a fork or rubber spatula until dough begins to form large wet clumps. Turn onto countertop and knead by hand, incorporating any dry floury bits until it comes together into a rough sticky ball. Pat down into a 6- to 7-inch disc and cut into 8 wedges. Transfer scones onto prepared baking sheet and bake until dark golden brown, about 15 minutes. Cool on a rack for at least 10 minutes before serving.

which like those of many of the festival's other performers, was instrumental in her subsequent career success. She also laments what she views as the exploitative nature and, consequently or not, disastrous results that transpired at the Woodstock reunion events of the 90s. But as far as career recollections, she'd rather go back to where it all began.

"My career really started in Paris," said Melanie. "I had my first big hit in France with a song called `Bobo's Party,' which was on my first album with Buddah Records. And shortly after that I did a major engagement of 30 days and nights at the Olympia Theatre in Paris in 1968."

"It was a typical European musical-theatre variety show of the time. I was second on the bill to the singer/emcee Gilbert Becaud, who was like the Frank Sinatra of Paris in that day. For most of the shows I was on the bill with all these different types of European dance and acrobatic troupes. And my style was very unshowbizzy for the time. Much of the press in Paris thought I was British, and they used to write things like calling me the female Bob Dylan, and `the lady with the black soul,'" Melanie said.

On Crazy Love, Melanie's signature cracked, folksy voice — a model for such later successful songbirds as Stevie Nicks and Edie Brickell — is smoothed over somewhat but still prevalent. Also in abundance is the famous hippie-gypsy persona, which gives us such hopeful anthems as "Smile" — "I love people who smile/If everyone smiles we'll have a hometown all over the world." But other songs like "Leftover Emotion," "The Wonderer" and the title track go beyond the persona, exploring intimate emotions closer to contemporary artists Shawn Colvin and Tracy Chapman.

"Everyone in singing/songwriting eventually develops their own style," Melanie said. "I sort of set out in the beginning to imitate Billie Holiday and Edith Piaf and got it wrong. But my new CD is the first time in a long time I've been singing and writing in such a flowing way."

Melanie will perform at Norwell's Company Theatre, Saturday, Feb. 8 at 8 p.m. For tickets and information call the Company Theatre Box office at (781) 871-2787.

formed by Corinne Duggan, Rick Trusty, Michelle Giunta-McKay, and Sioux Anna Ramirez-Cruz.

For its first three seasons at Raffael's, J.M. Productions primarily presented cabaret-style entertainment with an emphasis on song, not dance. J.M. Productions Founder and President John F. McDonald, Jr. says his audiences helped him decide to join forces with Riverside Repertory.

"Our audiences have been asking us to include more dance in our shows. That's what led me to the company. That and the fact that Riverside has an excellent reputation in the greater Boston performing arts community. I knew they did excellent work, so I welcomed the opportunity to present them on the South Shore. I believe strongly in collaborating with other local theater companies. When you work together, you showcase the best of both organizations as well as the many talented performers in our area."

Green thumbs up

Part 3

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Winter in New England is always an adventure. For South Shore communities our weather patterns are a perpetual roller coaster ride, rarely allowing for a dull moment. Snow, ice, and cold temperatures are often interspersed with rain and unseasonable warmth. Last year's warm open winter posed serious challenges to the survival of many perennial plants due to alternating freeze-thaw cycles. In dramatic contrast, this year's bitter cold weather accompanied by harsh, desiccating winds is likely to threaten less hardy plant material, causing potential damage to evergreen foliage and the flower buds of woody plants which were set during last year's growing season. Despite the severity of this winter season, Mother Nature has often provided a protective blanket during her most frigid blasts, which should minimize the adverse effects to dormant plants resting beneath the snowy covering.

During the month of February, there are sure to be hints of springtime intermingled with periods of wintry weather. On warmer days, I plan to briefly inspect the gardens searching for signs of spring as I prepare a list of pruning priorities. When the sun manages to peek through the steely gray cloud cover, it delivers a glow and warmth that give promise to our yearning for pussy willows, forsythia, crocuses and the gradual greening of our landscapes. Later this month, spring will burst into bloom at the Rhode Island Flower Show. When the "weather outside is frightful", I will look for spring among the pages of gardening magazines, catalogs and books.

As my stacks of gardening catalogs have grown each year, I have found it necessary to exercise tremendous self-control. Filled with tempting photographs of beautiful flowers, I long for one of everything, especially when I look out at our winter wonderland. Years of overbuying and recent time constraints, however, have made me a wiser shopper. I use most of my catalogs as reference material and order from a select few that have proven dependable over the years. I purchase the bulk of my plants from local sources.

Catalogs are practically a must for those discerning plant hobbyist in search of a broad offering of a particular family of plants or seeds although many specialty nurseries are emerging throughout our area. Certain perennials, including daylilies, iris, and hosta are currently available in countless colors and sizes due to recent hybridizing efforts. The best quality and greatest diversity of these hybrids are likely to be obtained from suppliers who specialize in these plants.

In an effort to provide some guidance for novice gardeners or for those in search of specialty plants, I will list a few sources I have found reliable in the past or that have been recommended to me by knowledgeable gardeners. Bluestone Perennials is an ideal source for those planning new borders designed with mass plantings. Although plants tend to be small, they are priced accordingly and establish quickly often reaching maturity by the end of the first growing season. Plant Delights is a new resource for me, listing many new introductions in an entertaining, colorful catalog. White Flower Farm has been a dependable New England supplier for many years with excellent cultural information and lovely photos. The Wayside Gardens catalog is perhaps the best reference catalog with gorgeous photos, extensive listings and cultural information.

There are several excellent sources for seed packets. Park Seed Co. has been my first choice for more than 20 years; their foil packaging seems to help seeds remain viable for an extended period of time. Another great catalog is Johnny's Seeds located in Maine. They test all their seeds in that locale so the varieties they list tend to do especially well in our area. Burpee Co. has an excellent reputation with extensive listings and many of their seeds can be purchased through local suppliers.

It should be noted that some of these sources charge a nominal fee for their catalogs. Place small orders initially to judge the quality of the plants and products. Keep a garden notebook to list plants you have purchased, their condition upon arrival, and their performance during the first growing season or two. Mail order perennials often fail to bloom during their first season. Many web sites offer customer comments about mail order companies.

Brighton filmmaker Liesl Clark takes 'Nova' viewers on uncharted climb

"I dry-heaved my way up to the summit," she says. "It was a bad day for me. No fun."

She couldn't even enjoy the fruits of her labors. "I kept thinking, 'What's the big deal [about making the summit]?' Maybe the view is nice, but frankly, at that point, I didn't care."

What she does care about is her film. "Nova" is a science series, and at the root of the expedition is a story about the health of Antarctica, the world's greatest desert (remember, deserts are defined by precipitation, not temperature), and a continent that's a key link in our global ecology.

But viewers of the show are more likely to be captivated by yet another compelling story of man (and woman) vs. nature. Although previous ascents of Vinson Massif date all the way back to 1911 when Norwegian adventurer Roald Amundsen conquered the peak, this is the first expedition to ever attain the summit from the much more imposing east face of Vinson.

"Every step was a step into the unknown," she says. "It was really a first."

Viewers of "Mountain of Ice" are likely to recall the gruesome but compelling story of the ill-fated 1996 ascent of Everest that killed nine people. Climber Jon Krakauer, who wrote the best-seller "Into Thin Air," was a key player in both expeditions. Some may view Krakauer as a controversial figure; it's tempting to blame him for some of the bad judgements that were made on that Everest climb.

But Clark is very supportive of Krakauer, describing him as a "team player" and saying he was key to both the ascent of Vinson, and also her film. But those who are predisposed to be suspicious of Krakauer will find more to dislike in "Mountain of Ice."

The key moment in the film comes when the group confronts a 3,000-foot headwall that stands between them and the summit. Two different plans emerge. Krakauer favors a direct route that follows an exposed rock ledge to the top. It's a steep ascent that only technically advanced climbers could manage — "a charismatic climb, a true climber's climb," as Clark describes it, that would have left Clark and her cameraman behind.

Hahn pitched a second, more circuitous route that was less challenging, but it also would have exposed the group to potential ice falls.

During the debates, Krakauer seems more interested in the quality and challenge of his climb than in the goal of getting everyone to the summit. And once he has scaled the headwall, he says he'll wait for a while for the others to catch up, but when the time necessitates it, he'll leave without them for the summit.

When, later in the film, Krakauer expresses his admiration for Hahn's ability to get everyone up, Clark believes it's a kind of breakthrough for Krakauer, a man who has been critical of inexperienced climbers tackling challenging mountains.

"Jon Krakauer came to terms with some of the issues he's had with guiding and mountaineering," she says.

Clark discovered something about herself as a climber, as well. Although she has climbed much higher — she's been to the advanced base camp at Everest — this climb presented some unique challenges. She admits she was uncomfortable on the final "razor-thin" ridge to the summit. But the headwall might have been even tougher. The steepness would give vertigo to a less hearty soul.

"I knew if I looked down, it wasn't going to be a good thing," Clark says. "You get disoriented and your legs start to weaken. You can see snow break away and tumble down 2,000 feet and disappear. You can't let your mind start to play games with you."

Viewers get so lost in the story of "Mountain of Ice" that it's easy to forget the great accomplishment of filming it. In addition to the daily hassle of just maneuvering the equipment, Clark had to make creative decisions while fatigued, ill, and oxygen-deprived. And her candid series of therapy-like interviews that she conducted on the mountain, in a tent, with Krakauer provide an honest and insightful narration to the story.

And she had to hope every morning that the mountain wouldn't claim her equipment.

"You kept your fingers crossed that the camera would power up every morning," she says. "If it didn't, you didn't have a film."

The summit offered little sense of accomplishment for the battered, if unbeaten, Clark. Any sense of euphoria would have to wait until a small plane lifted the team off the continent. As the plane swooped them up to warmth and safety, they were able to see from their windows the trail they had left in the snow, a trail that carved its way to the peak via a path never before trodden by humans.

"We could see our little ski prints," says Clark. "The energy inside that plane was amazing."

"Mountain of Ice" airs at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, Feb. 11, on WGBH (Ch. 2).

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 5

Planetary action turns around completely today. At 12:44 a.m. the moon enters fiery Aries, setting a fast pace today and tomorrow. In addition, Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, interacts with expansive Jupiter at 2:25 p.m. Be sure to have a clear plan of action, so that you can take advantage of today's high potential. You can be extremely productive. The green light is on for new starts across the board. Go for the gold.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6

Yesterday's planetary patterns continue. The Aries moon promises another high-energy day. It forms easy contacts to Jupiter, Mars, the sun, Pluto and Saturn. You will be surprised how much you can accomplish, if you are well-organized and stick to your game plan. Zero in on projects that require physical labor and exertion. Get back on track with exercise and physical fitness programs.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 7

Step out of your usual routine; be more adventurous this morning. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 9:21 a.m. makes it prime for new experiences. Keep an open mind. At 9:21 a.m. the Aries moon becomes inactive until 12:59 p.m., when it enters Taurus. The green light goes on, particularly for selling or purchasing land or property. A lunar alignment to Venus generates a romantic mood this evening.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 8

The sun forms a 60-degree contact to Pluto at 10:28 a.m. This morning is ideal for tackling projects that need to be redone, making repairs or renovations. It is also favorable for starting self-improvement programs. The Taurus moon aligns with Neptune at 11:21 a.m. and Jupiter at 1:54 p.m. Put practical, business decisions on the back burner. This is an evening to kick back and mellow out completely.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 9

The first quarter phase of the moon arrives at 6:11 a.m. A full moon is building and will culminate next Sunday, February 16. A Taurus moon today sets a relaxed pace. Take a vacation from stress and worry; enjoy favorite leisure activities. Follow your bliss. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 10:28 p.m. may interrupt the flow of the evening. Keep it light; be flexible. At this time the Taurus moon becomes inactive.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 10

At 1:45 a.m. the moon enters lively Gemini, remaining there for the next two and one-half days. An applying alignment of the sun and Saturn makes this day prime for initiating new activities, promoting ideas, launching campaigns. Pull out all the stops. You can be most productive. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Jupiter this evening prompt you to explore new options and set goals. Pay attention to your dreams.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 11

This day has its challenges. Take it slow and easy. It is better to handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands mental focus and concentration. The moon continues to travel in versatile Gemini. However, it forms stressful contacts to Mars at 10:10 a.m., to Pluto at 4:15 p.m., and to Saturn at 9:29 p.m. That means that you should maintain a low profile, carefully choose your words, postpone important signings.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 12

Storm clouds move out today. The loquacious Gemini moon forms a harmonious contact to Uranus at 9:28 a.m. and becomes inactive. Plan to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 12:19 p.m., placing a focus on home and domestic responsibilities. The planet Mercury moves into Aquarius at 8:00 p.m., remaining there until March 4. This is a favorable time for new learning or travel experiences.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13

The Cancer moon opposes Venus at 7:22 a.m. and becomes inactive. It will travel void-of-course throughout today and most of tomorrow. That means that new starts are off limits. Instead, take the time to follow through on unfinished projects, review and redo, make repairs, clean and reorganize. Share a special dinner with close friends and family this evening.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 14

An inactive Cancer moon can make for a slow start to this day. Others may be moody, hypersensitive. Think about what you are saying. Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. Planetary influences turn around completely, however, at 7:04 p.m., when the moon enters playful Leo. The evening is prime for social activities, romantic rendezvous. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

GETTING WITH THE PROGRAMMABLE

Programmable hearing instruments are a step up in technology from conventional hearing instruments. These instruments have an analog circuit that can be programmed by the hearing instrument dispenser. This allows for greater flexibility and fine-tuning of the instrument to the wearer's needs. After the hearing instrument dispenser selects an instrument and receives it from the manufacturer, he or she will connect it to a computer and set a listening program based upon the wearer's hearing loss. While being fitted with the programmable instrument, the wearer reports likes and dislikes to the hearing professional for immediate changes. If changes in a wearer's hearing should occur, adjustments can be made to the listening program in the office.

Success in wearing any hearing instrument begins with the proper fitting of the appropriate aid by a board certified hearing instrument specialist. A hearing aid that is appropriate to the impairment and well-fitted to the individual is more likely to be worn regularly - a key factor in maximizing hearing potential. If you'd like a hearing test to determine the state of your hearing, just call us at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, 781-337-1144. We've recently opened our new office in Weymouth across from the Stetson Bldg. at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18). We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

P.S. Most programmable hearing instruments have automatic volume control.

Village project delayed

More concerns to be addressed

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

In an effort to respond to merchants' and residents' concerns about the village streetscape revitalization project, Selectmen have decided to add two merchants to the Downtown Revitalization Committee and delay putting the project out to bid by five weeks, from mid-March to April 30.

The decision came at the Selectmen's meeting Tuesday after many merchants complained the project was not addressing parking needs in the village, while others wanted more time to explore alternative methods of burying or moving utility wires.

The project is now coming dangerously close to being extended through next winter, which could result in a higher price tag. Craig Miller, president of the Waterfield Design Group, the company in charge of planning the project, said construction is expected to take eight to nine months. An April 30 bidding date means work will probably not begin until mid-June.

A meeting last week held by the Waterfield Group revealed that many merchants felt additional parking in the town parking lot would not make up for spots eliminated on Elm Street by the addition of curbed sidewalks.

Callahan puts forgoing raises on the table

FY'04 budget news worsens

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Selectman Tom Callahan is asking all town and school employees to forgo their scheduled pay raises in fiscal year 2004 so the town can balance its operating budget without having to make additional cuts in personnel.

The request came at Tuesday night's meeting of the Board of Selectmen, shortly after Town Manager Mark Haddad informed the board that the current fiscal forecast is worse than it has ever been.

Haddad said the town was likely facing a 20 percent cut in local aid for the coming fiscal year, on top of the 2.5 percent cut it took this year. The result would be a $512,000 loss of funding from Chapter 70, lottery revenue, and additional assistance. Haddad was originally budgeting for a 10 percent cut in those areas — a loss of $232,000 —and planning for a $485,000 override to balance the budget.

The news of a 20 percent cut, which town officials previously considered a worst-case scenario, has forced Selectmen to completely reconsider how they will tackle the budget. They

Decision doesn't clear Ayer dispute

Lets other work stand

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

While the owners of 14 Cohasset homes on undersized lots can breath a little easier this week after Building Inspector Bob Egan has apparently let them off the hook, Phil and Mary Anne Ayer aren't giving up the fight.

As they apply for a special permit and appeal the Zoning Board's decision on their home in Superior Court, the Ayers are still claiming the town is not enforcing the zoning bylaws equally across the board.

Saying the Zoning Board of Appeals' decision on 3 Jerusalem Lane does not necessarily apply to other cases, Egan last week denied requests from Roberta Sawyer, a lawyer for the Ayers, to strip building permits or certificates of occupancy from 14 homes and force the homeowners to acquire special permits for reconstruction or additions.

Sawyer, who has said her clients are being treated unfair-

Cohasset Mariner wins top honors

The Cohasset Mariner is the best weekly newspaper in its circulation class in New England, according to judges for 2002 New England Better Newspaper Competition.

The Cohasset Mariner won first place in the General Excellence category which encompasses everything from writing, reporting and emphasis of news — to photography, sports, design, use of headlines and overall community significance.

This was the fifth year in a row the Cohasset Mariner was honored in the General Excellence category with judges calling the Mariner "simply an outstanding newspaper." They were impressed with the Cohasset Mariner's excellent design elements, solid reporting, story leads, photography, editorial pages, local cartoons and sports section.

Community Newspaper Company/South, owner of the Mariner, earned a total 13 awards — six for first place including General Excellence for the Cohasset Mariner — at the annual New England Press Association awards banquet Saturday in Boston.

This was the fifth year in a row the Cohasset Mariner was honored in the General Excellence category.

Journalists from across New England celebrated community journalism at the convention held at the Park Plaza Hotel. CNC/South was honored for journalistic excellence in a variety of categories, competing with thousands of entries sent in by papers throughout New England.

CNC/South sports editor Julie Nevero was honored for the second straight year with a first-place award for sports column writing.

Matt Losordo with some new masonry work at the new entrance to the library.

When Frank Losordo of The Frank Losordo Company wrote the motto "Don't Start Something You Can't Finish" more than 70 years ago – he had no idea how those words would ring true decades later.

The Frank Losordo Company, carpentry and masonry contractors, did the brickwork on the rear wing of the former Osgood School at the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street back in 1929.

Matthew Losordo, the late Losordo's grandson, is the mason on the new library, which will be housed in the former school building.

Matthew Losordo says an aunt alerted him to the coincidence and even provided some old company literature with a photo of the then, new Osgood School wing.

Clarification on chimney fire

A news brief in last week's Mariner about a Jan. 31 chimney fire at the Red Lion Inn warrants some clarification.

In the process of putting out the fire, the fire department cleared the burning creosote from the interior of the chimney, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said. The news item may have left some readers with the impression the fire department cleaned the chimney. The fire department also evacuated the premises during the incident, he said.

Upcoming meetings

The following meetings were posted at Town Hall as of Tue., Feb. 11:

Board of Assessors, March 4 at 4 p.m.

Conservation Commission, Feb. 13 at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 27 at 7:30 p.m.

Osgood School Council, March 4, 7:30 in the Osgood conference room

Planning Board, Feb. 19 at 7:30 p.m., Feb. 24 at 7:00 p.m. (with Zoning Board)

Police-fire Station Study Committee, March 20, 1 p.m.

School Committee, Feb. 13 at 7 p.m. in the High School Library (Public Hearing, FY2004 Budget)

Selectmen, Feb. 25 at 7:30 p.m.

Zoning Board of Appeals, Feb. 24 at 7:30 p.m. (Avalon/40B), March 10 at 7:30 (Avalon/40B)/ All Avalon meetings will be held in the selectmen's office and will be televised.

All meetings are at Town Hall unless otherwise indicated.

Snow removal budget extended

Numerous small storms have chipped away at the town's snow removal budget, forcing Selectmen to allow additional spending for the cause.

Before Friday's storm, less than $4,000 remained of the $60,000 appropriated for snow removal.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town usually over-expends the budget every other year. Last year the town spent only $37,000 but the year before it spent $128,000, he said.

Haddad estimated spending this year would fall between $80,000 and $100,000.

"The problem is we've had a lot of piddling storms, but every time a storm hits you have to send out a lot of trucks because they all have to salt and sand," he said.

Health Board may add to smoking ban

The Board of Health is considering expanding the potential ban of smoking in public places to include more outdoor areas.

The board presented the warrant article to selectmen Tuesday night with the understanding that places like outdoor patios at restaurants were already included in the proposed ban. However, selectmen quickly pointed out that the language of the article is such that only indoor areas are included in the definition of a public place.

The Board of Health will revisit the warrant article and possibly redraft it before Town Meeting. Several selectmen suggested the board include outdoor areas like patios in the ban.

Town could buy White Cedar Farm

David Bigley and Alix White have informed selectmen of their intent to sell White Cedar Farm at 224 Jerusalem Road. Under state law, the owners must give 120 days' notice, during which time the town has the right of first refusal to purchase the farm. Selectmen are waiting to see an appraisal of the land before taking any further action.

Beechwood Street traffic study planned

In response to complaints of speeding on Beechwood Street near the intersection of Hillside Drive, the town will do a speed survey to determine what speed limit should be posted on the road.

Police Chief Robert Jackson recommended the traffic study after determining that turning the intersection into a three-way stop was not warranted according to recommendations on traffic control from the federal government.

The Board of Selectmen hopes posting the speed limit on Beechwood Street, in conjunction with an existing "dangerous intersection" sign, will slow traffic in the area.

Free legal clinic

Do you have a legal question or are you confused about a legal issue? The Bar Association of Norfolk County is sponsoring free legal clinics as a public service to the community. A panel of attorneys experienced in all areas of the law will be available for a one on one consultation with you to discuss your legal questions.

All consultations are strictly confidential. The evening legal clinics will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. on Tuesday evenings at the Quincy District Court on the following dates: March 4, April 1, June 3, July 1.

For further information, contact Adrienne C. Clarke, Bar Association of Norfolk County at 617-471-9693.

Adopt a hydrant

Russ Bonetti of Parker Avenue suggests residents "adopt" their local hydrant by clearing away the snow around it after a snowstorm He said after Friday's storm, firefighters came by to shovel out the hydrant at the corner of his driveway on Parker Avenue and they explained there are more than 350 hydrants in town.

"Hopefully we won't get much more snow, but it would be a nice gesture that I'm sure the firefighters would appreciate," Bonetti said.

Names of local soldiers sought

The Sons of the American Legion chapter in Cohasset would like to know the names of any Cohasset soldiers who have been deployed to the Persian Gulf.

The Sons are also ordering Blue Star Banners for the families of local soldiers. Please leave a message for Sons Commander Tom Wigmore at the American Legion Post, 781-383-9657, and he will contact you.

Financial welcome mat for historical society's new home

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A boost from the Community Preservation Fund may soon give the Cohasset Historical Society exactly what it needs to make its new home at the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library financially viable.

The Community Preservation Committee voted Monday to recommend at Town Meeting on March 25 that voters appropriate $400,000 from the fund for the historical society to pay for improvements to the building.

Most of the money — $300,000 — would pay for the construction of two moderate-income, senior housing apartments in the building's basement, the rent for which would cover the society's operating costs. The remainder of the funding would go towards structural improvements deemed necessary by the CPC for preserving the building historically and bringing it up to code.

"Certainly, if there was anything that fits the spirit of the CPC thing, then this is it," said committee member Al Moore, noting the dual nature of the project in that it supports both community housing and historic preservation.

If approved at Town Meeting, a grant from the Community Preservation Fund would cap an improbable run of events that has made it possible for the Historical Society to acquire the Pratt Building as its new home.

The process began in early December when Selectman Tom Callahan suggested the Historical Society bid on the building and pay for it by selling its headquarters at the Lothrop House. King Street resident Lou Harvey and five other anonymous financial guarantors sealed the deal by agreeing to front the society $725,000 until Lothrop House could be sold.

On top of all that, Cohasset resident John Barry, who made the highest bid for the Pratt Building and was legally entitled to buy it, agreed to turn it over to the Historical Society in the interest of the town.

But without the money to pay for the construction of two apartments in the building's basement, the Historical Society would be unable to pay the estimated $27,000 per year in operating costs that go along with being housed there. At Monday's meeting, Historical Society vice president Tom Gruber made sure the CPC understood that.

"Certainly, if there was anything that fits the spirit of the CPC thing, then this is it."

— Al Moore, Community Preservation Committee

"Without the apartments, this thing is going to be a sinkhole for money," Gruber said. "If there's one thing we want you to consider it's the housing component, to help us get the building on a sound financial footing as soon as we can."

Gruber said the two, one-bedroom apartments would qualify as moderate income housing for seniors. But he said making the apartments "affordable" by state standards wouldn't bring in enough revenue.

"It just wouldn't be the prudent thing to do from a financial standpoint," he said. [State guidelines say an apartment must be affordable for someone making 80 percent of the Boston area median income by not having to spend more than 30 percent of their income to live there.]

As it is, an estimated minimum rent of $1200 per month for each apartment will barely cover the building's operating costs. Gruber said the society may increase the rent to $1300 or $1400 per month to allow for extra cash to pay for maintenance.

The only request of the CPC with regards to the housing was that the deed restriction — which would keep the apartments as moderate income housing for seniors — remain in perpetuity, instead of 25 years as proposed by the Historical Society. Gruber saw no problem with it, but the CPC has not yet worked out the details on how such a restriction would transfer if the property was sold in the distant future.

Gruber originally asked the CPC for more than $450,000 to fund the project. However, the CPC said it did not want to use any money to make improvements to the building that were not necessary for historic preservation or community housing. Gruber said the remainder of the proposed improvements would need to be covered by fundraising.

The town adopted the Community Preservation Act at last year's annual Town Meeting. It derives it money from a 1.5 percent surcharge on real estate tax and a 100 percent state match. Allocations are recommended by the committee and then voted on by Town Meeting. The committee's funds must be spent on three areas: open space, historic preservation, and affordable housing.

Gruber said improvements that fell under historic preservation included repairing the slate roof, repainting the exterior, reglazing some windows, restoring the cupola and balustrade, and restoring some cracks in the building's brick and stone walls.

Gruber was optimistic that the Lothrop House would be sold soon because the Historical Society recently dropped the price of the building from $975,000 to $925,000. Factoring in the realtor's fee and the cost of the Pratt Building, Gruber said the sale of the Lothrop House would leave the Historical Society with $100,000 of its own money to put towards additional improvements in its new home.

Gruber was visibly excited by the opportunities for new displays that will be opened up at the Pratt Building. "We have 17,000 items in our collection," he said. "17,000 items. I mean, I never would have guessed it."

Business manager reinstated, assault charge is still pending

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Ivan Klimko has returned to work as the business manager in Cohasset Public Schools.

Klimko, a 55-year-old Hull resident, is still charged with assault and battery on his wife and is slated to go to trial at Hingham District Court on March 21. The state dismissed a charge of attempted murder on Dec. 18 due to insufficient evidence.

Klimko was hired as the business manager for Cohasset Public Schools almost two years ago after working in the Vista United school district in California.

Klimko could not be reached for comment. His phone number at his home was unpublished and he could not be reached at his office in Cohasset.

Supt. Ed Malvey said Klimko was reinstated in early January after the attempted murder charge was dropped. "This was not an employment issue. This was a private matter at home," Malvey said.

Malvey indicated the school was legally obligated to reinstate Klimko and also give him his full back pay. "I can't go into the details of it, but it's the law," he said.

Malvey said he could not comment on what would happen if Klimko was convicted of assault and battery. He said Klimko had been working weekdays from 4-11 p.m. and some weekends and would be "transitioning back into working days."

Police arrested Klimko on the night of Nov. 3 after being notified that a woman was attempting to flag down cars on George Washington Blvd. Police said Mrs. Klimko told them her husband had tried to strangle her and threatened to kill her. A police report by the arresting officer said there were "fresh scratches and red marks on her throat."

Klimko was released on $1,000 bail with the condition that he surrender his passport, stay alcohol free, and stay away from the alleged victim.

Klimko, who makes $80,000 as the school business manager, has not attended any School Committee meetings since being reinstated, despite the fact that several of those meetings have focused on budget issues.

"There was nothing that couldn't be handled without him being there," said Malvey, noting that Klimko had never been required to go to School Committee meetings in the past.

Klimko attended about 75 percent of School Committee meetings before he was arrested, said Mark DeGiacomo, a member of the School Committee. He said Malvey has kept the committee informed of Klimko's status.

Open burning season is underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis from through May 1, for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch, Center at 781-383-0260 between the hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact permit issuance. Burning hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Egan decision doesn't clear the Ayer dispute

ly, said the homes in question are no different than 3 Jerusalem Lane because they involve "extensions, alterations, or enlargements" on nonconforming lots without special permits.

"I wasn't surprised but I'm extremely disappointed that they continue to single out Mr. Ayer," she said about Egan's decision. "They're not enforcing the bylaw equally. They're subjecting Mr. Ayer to prejudicial treatment."

Egan said in a letter to Sawyer that he denied the requests not because the homes did not involve similar circumstances to the Ayers' home, but because the Zoning Board's decision regarding the Ayers' home concerned "a narrow case involving a single property." "I do not see that the decision and its conditions are immediately applicable to any other case," Egan wrote.

Egan also said in his decision that he questioned whether Sawyer's complaints were "in good faith" because the Ayers are asking for enforcement of the zoning bylaws and simultaneously claiming the decision of the Zoning Board is incorrect.

Although the Ayers razed a small ranch and replaced it with a much larger home, Egan issued the building permit because the new structure met all height and setback requirements. But the Zoning Board found on Jan. 16 that the Ayers' home should not have been issued a building permit because it was on a nonconforming, or undersized, lot. The board said Egan's longstanding interpretation of the bylaws was incorrect and the Ayers must apply for a special permit to complete the home according to original plans.

"The United States of America is a democracy. You have to apply the laws equally and fairly and they're not doing it."

— Roberta Sawyer, lawyer for 3 Jerusalem Lane

Sawyer said the decision was particularly frustrating because Egan appeared to agree the homes in question were similar to 3 Jerusalem Lane in terms of their nonconforming lots, but still found they were not subject to the Zoning Board's interpretation of the bylaw.

Before issuing his decision, Egan said that at least six of the 14 homes in Sawyer's complaints were the "same cases" as the Ayers' home.

"It's completely inconsistent," Sawyer said, adding that the ruling seemed to reflect an "internal war" between Egan and the Zoning Board.

But Chairman Woody Chittick has repeatedly said the Zoning Board and Egan are not at odds. He also said that "all decisions (of the zoning board) apply only to specific cases," which seems to support Egan's denial of Sawyer's requests.

Chittick said the Zoning Board did not consider the effect its interpretation of the zoning bylaw might have on older, already completed houses.

He said forcing a house under construction that was in violation of the bylaw to seek a special permit would depend "on whether someone's aggrieved or not." However, the bylaw should be applied uniformly to future cases, he said.

Sawyer said allowing such disparities between past, present and future cases was unlawful. "You can not have selective enforcement," she said. "The United States of America is a democracy. You have to apply the laws equally and fairly and they're not doing it."

Sawyer said she will appeal Egan's decision to the Zoning Board.

The public hearing for 3 Jerusalem Lane that is part of the special permit process is scheduled for March 17.

Callahan says forgoing raises should be up for discussion

now want to prepare for the possibility of a general override being rejected, an event that would leave the town with a budget deficit as high as $765,000.

Callahan said that by town and school employees forgoing their pay raises, around $630,000 of that deficit can be erased, without raising taxes or sacrificing the quality of services for residents. "This is another thing that we've never put on the table and it needs to be in the mix," he said. "It's a sacred cow that's never been touched."

Callahan said eliminating raises was common during tough times in the private sector and that the Governor of Connecticut had even suggested the idea this year to help cure that state's budget crisis. The idea was turned down by labor unions, he said, but "hundreds and hundreds of people are now out of work there."

"It just seems to me that one of the purposes of the unions in to serve their membership," Callahan said. "In the end, the unions are going to lose members. They cut their nose to spite their face."

Reaction from other selectmen to Callahan's suggestion was mixed.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris seemed to oppose the idea, saying town and school employees already make less money than people in the private sector.

But Chairman Michael Sullivan was more receptive, noting that what were supposedly considered "cost of living" raises were not as necessary in a sluggish economy. "We have to have some more flexibility to deal with the down years," Sullivan said.

In the current school budget, salary increases account for $420,000, more than 90 percent of the 4 percent budget increase that Haddad previously told the schools to expect. The School Committee has said that any additional cuts in its budget would definitely result in additional layoffs.

Callahan said the idea of cutting raises was not his only idea for balancing the budget and he was only saying that a dialogue with unions should begin. "I'm not suggesting at this point shoving anything down anyone's throat. I'm just suggesting we open up talks with the unions," he said.

Sullivan told Haddad to begin informal talks with the unions and to set up a meeting between the Board of Selectmen and union presidents and leaders. Callahan said the board should be prepared to let the unions know exactly what cuts would be made in different budget scenarios.

Village project is delayed

Meanwhile, several merchants are trying to raise the $550,000 necessary to bury conduits so that utility wires in the village can be buried in the future. A suggestion by Cohasset resident Wayne Sawchuk to move utility wires to the town parking lot for buildings along that side of South Main Street is also being considered.

At Tuesday's meeting, Miller said he misspoke at the last meeting by saying the cost of lighting was not included in the original scope of the project's budget. However, he said, the spacing of lighting will still be affected by utility poles.

Selectmen initially considered delaying construction on the streetscape project until September so that businesses would not be disturbed in the summer and all parking and utility issues could be sorted out.

Miller said waiting that long was risky because it would mean the project would definitely need to be extended through the winter, increasing costs.

Town Manager Mark Haddad also cautioned against the move, saying that if construction was not completed by June 30, 2004, the town would risk losing whatever remained of a $1.5 million state grant that will pay for the majority of the project.

Selectman Tom Callahan seemed to be in disbelief that the idea of extending the project was even being considered. "I'm concerned about the town being hijacked by the interests of the downtown businesses," he said. "There's so much at risk, so much financial disadvantage for us to wait."

After agreeing on waiting until April 30 to bid the streetscape project, Selectmen said the James Brook culvert project and the reconstruction of the town parking lot, to be paid for by the MBTA as part of mitigation for Greenbush line, would be put out to bid on schedule by mid-March. Selectmen said they would name two merchants to the Downtown Revitalization Committee in the coming weeks.

Miller said a consensus would be needed from the merchants looking to bury utility wires. He said the designs for burying the conduits, which those merchants would need to pay for, would take five weeks to complete.

Miller also said that Sawchuk's idea to move the utilities into the parking lot, along with other ideas he submitted to Selectmen, should be looked into. "I think Wayne has some innovative ideas and they deserve some attention," Miller said.

The Board of Selectmen reiterated it would not support another override to help pay for the streetscape revitalization project.

Cohasset Mariner wins top honors

reporter Shanley Stern, took home a first-place prize in spot news reporting, for work on the Gary Sampson shooting spree last summer. The Mariner at the time was the first newspaper to report the alleged killer tried to call the FBI to turn himself in prior to committing the crimes for which he is being charged.

"The awards really show the breath of coverage and the hard work our editorial team does day in and day out," said Mark Skala, editor in chief for CNC/South. "It does take a team effort and requires close contact with our communities and readers, who help us do a better job every day."

Other awards include:

- First place, Editorial Writer; Alice Coyle, Scituate Mariner.
- First place, Environmental Reporting; Cathy Conley, Braintree Forum.
- First place, Coverage of Racial/Ethnic Issue; Cathy Conley, Braintree Forum.
- Second place, Coverage of Racial/Ethnic Issue; Dan Gravel, Marshfield Mariner.
- Second place, Color Photo; Alan Chapman Scituate Mariner.
- Second place, Arts/Entertainment Reporting; Alice Coyle, Scituate Mariner.

READERS CHOICE AWARDS 2002 COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY

HAIR COLOR & DESIGN CENTRE OF NORWELL

Six Grove Street • Norwell • (781) 982-1224

Recently 27 from our Coloring and Design Team attended the Redken International Symposium in Las Vegas. We were so impressed with the advanced classes conducted by some of the beauty industry's greats that we invited them to Norwell……

Our Educational Directors welcomed Redken Global Performing Artist Shannon King to our Salon on February 2nd for an "up close and personal" day of hair design, instruction demonstration, and participation.

Here Shannon displays his cutting mastery while our team observes.

On Sunday, February 23rd, Graham Webb's Director of Education for the Washington, D.C. Academy, Gerard Harms joins us for an in depth look at the company's latest design collection.

On Sunday, March 30th, World Colorist, Patrick McIvor will join us for Redkens 2003 spring hair coloring techniques and fashion trends.

We believe education is the key to success.

Other salon news…

While the staff was in Vegas, the salon got a "face lift." Come in and see our beautiful new Salon.

Our benefit for South Shore Hospital's "Neonatal Care Unit" is set for Sunday, May 4th from 9-5p.m. Book any of our services for that day and 100% of the revenue will be donated. Door prizes, raffles, and refreshments will be served. Our goal is to raise $10,000 - $12,000. We are so proud of the hospital and its wonderful staff. Help us help them to care for our babies in our own hospital. Call (781) 982-1224 for an appointment or just to make a donation.

He's welcomed by proud parents Leslie-Ann McGee and Dan Shropshire, and his big sister Coyle McGee Shropshire, all of Kingston. His grandmother Donna J. McGee of Cohasset is ready with a lot of hugs, as are his grandparents Carol and Lee Shropshire of Greeley, Col. Welcome to the world Holden, you are joining a family filled with lots of love.

DOUBLE THE BLESSINGS!

Double the blessings, double the joy! Joseph P. and Jill A. Carroll of Jerusalem Road are parents of twins. Joseph P. III and Emma Margaret arrived Jan. 9. Their grandparents are Raymond and Leslie Beaudin of Amherst, Mass. and Joseph and Margaret Carroll of Sandwich, Mass. Congratulations to all on the births of these two little sweeties!

RELAY FOR LIFE KICKOFF

Hundreds of area residents have taken up the fight against cancer by taking part in the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life. The volunteer planning committee for the Society's seventh annual Relay For Life in Cohasset is hosting a kickoff for new team captains and interested participants from 7- 8p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 25 at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St. The Relay For Life in Cohasset is set to take place on May 16-17 at Cohasset High School. Funds raised support the Society's programs of research, education, advocacy and services that benefit local patients and their families. For more information, to volunteer or to find an event near you, please call 1-800-ACS-2345 or visit the Web site at www.cancer.org.

CYBS REGISTRATION

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball is opening an exciting new chapter in its history and will hold its registration for the upcoming softball and baseball season on Saturday, March 1 from 9 to 11 a.m. outside both the Osgood and High School gymnasiums. This registration is for boys and girls aged 5 to 12 as of July 31, 2003. This will be the only registration opportunity for the upcoming season for this age group. All parents / guardians who are unable to make this registration should register their child by obtaining the necessary registration forms by contacting Anne Kearney at 781-383-1451.

All registrations accepted after March 1, 2003 will be subject to a $10 late fee. A copy of the child's birth certificate must accompany a new player's registration forms. The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the major league baseball (ages 10 to 12) and softball divisions (ages 11-12) will be $100. The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the minor league baseball (ages 7-11), the new instructional softball (ages 7-8) and the minor league softball divisions (ages 10-11) will be $85. The registration fee for the farm league instructional tee ball division (ages > 5-6) will be $65. In addition, due to recent the child protection program instituted by the Little League governing organization, all adults interested in coaching, managing or volunteering in any way, are required to register at this same time and supply a photocopy of a government issued identification. Individuals not complying with this requirement will not be allowed to participate in the CYBSA program.

Questions regarding either player or coach registration may be directed to Mike Kearney on 781-383-1451 or Nancy Froio on 781-383-1897.

LEHIGH GRAD

Many residents of Cohasset have been working hard at school and we want to recognize their efforts. John Kasemeyer of Cohasset received a bachelor's degree in business and economics with a major in accounting from Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Penn. Jan. 12.

BACHELOR OF SCIENCE

Joanna Larrabee graduated from Springfield College in Springfield, Mass. in January with a Bachelor of Science degree.

The daughter of Richard and Birgitte Shea, Julie is a member of the National Honor Society. Other activities include, serving as a School Committee representative, captain of the tennis team, peer counselor and a sailing instructor with the Cohasset Sailing Club. With her acceptance, Julie is one of 123 students admitted early decision to Colby.

BRYANT DEAN'S LIST

Patrick Murphy, a senior in marketing, and Todd Bestick, a senior in finance, have been named to the dean's list at Bryant College in Smithfield, R.I.

POST-PROM PLANNING

The Post Prom Party Committee is holding a meeting for the entire Senior Class parent body on Thurs., Feb. 27, at 7:30 p.m. in the CHS cafeteria. We encourage all the senior parents to attend, especially the dads (for construction, in particular), to sign on for different responsibilities. Participants who work together on this magical project will most likely experience lots of fun and a special bonding with other Senior parents. This is also a good time to begin gathering baby pictures as well as current photos. Any questions, call 781-383-2702.

The fundraising drive is underway for Post Prom Party 2003. Note cards (5x7) with the school's logo and colors (blue and white) are available with matching envelopes in packages of ten for $10.00. To place an order, send your name, telephone number and check (payable to COHASSET POSTPROM 2003) to: Cohasset Postprom 2003 16 Fernway Cohasset, MA 02025

BRICK BY BRICK

Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum celebrated its groundbreaking in November 2002 and renovations are underway to the museum's space which will be located adjacent to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sohier Street/ Our World has raised one-third of the funds needed to meet its goal for the opening of the museum and are portions of the museum are expected to open in the fall of 2003. The focus now is on fundraising for the playground which will be built adjacent to Our World. The estimated cost to rebuild the playground is $125,000. One of the ways the Our World Playground Committee will be raising funds for the playground is with the Brick by Brick program. Through the Brick by Brick program, your donation of $100 will be recognized with an engraved brick. You can have your name, your family's name, loved one or your business name celebrated in brick. If you prefer, you also have the opportunity to contribute a larger engraved paver or a beautiful hardwood bench complete with an engraved brass plate. Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. All the funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance.

To participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399. The first 100 brick orders received will be entered into a drawing for a $100 gift certificate for dinner at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset.

LUNCHTIME SPEAKER

The Cohasset Social Service League resumes its Lunchtime Speaker Series on Friday Feb 28 at noontime with Dr. Alan Jacobson of South Shore Mental Health. Dr. Jacobson will speak on "Preventing Adolescent Risky Behavior," this will include some of the causes of risky behavior as well as some parental strategies to prevent this behavior. This presentation will emphasize the importance of balance, communication and the effects of peers. At the South Shore Art Center, Cohasset. Free. 12-1p.m. Q&A to follow. For more info call the League at 781-383-0771.

Cohasset resident John M. Connolly, M.D., left, accepts his Caring With Excellence Award from Scott Steward, M.D., of Caritas Good Samaritan Medical Center.

CARING WITH EXCELLENCE

Congratulations to John M. Connolly, M.D. of Cohasset, operating room medical director at Caritas Good Samaritan Medical Center, on his Caring With Excellence Award. The hospital presents the awards to individuals who have earned deep respect from their colleagues, thrive in their profession, make a profound impact on others and demonstrate everyday a commitment to the hospital's mission to heal, care, comfort and serve. All winners are nominated by their peers.

I want to end my column this week by sending out a fond farewell to a man who was known and loved by so many, my father-in-law, Mr. Frederick Piepenbrink. He was known as Bud, Fred, Freddie, Dad and Grandpa. He will be missed every day and our memories will hold us all as we move forward in all of our lives. As we sat at his Memorial Service on Tuesday, I watched and listened with tears of sadness, but also with tears of joy that his family and friends were able to see and hear what an amazing man he was. He fought for our country, delivered mail to so many and shared his life and love with his children, grandchildren, daughter-in-laws and friends. Papa, you truly were a hero to us all, we love you! The family would like to say thank you to all who helped and let us know that they were there in so many ways. The love that you all gave to us was so appreciated.

Please send in all of your news to me no later than Mondays at noon.

Library project has a family connection

although the trade hasn't changed a lot over time, having the family connection intrigued him.

"I never met my grandfather because he died before I was born," Losordo says. "So it was satisfying to find out my grandfather had worked on the building and it was a great way for me to connect with him."

Matching new brick to the older brick took a little time, but was well worth the effort, Losordo explains.

"It's a beautiful project and I was very impressed with all the contractors and subcontractors on the job," he says.

Steve May, clerk of the words for the library project, said Lorsordo's work involved installing any new brick and repairing old brick. The job also entailed the brickwork around the new entrance and bay windows.

"It's a very difficult brick to match because it's so old," May explains. "They are not making bricks out of that type of clay anymore."

The town built the school back in 1926 due to overcrowding at the Joseph Osgood School on Elm Street [where the police-fire station are now located], and later renamed the new school after its predecessor. In 1929, the town added the back wing and called upon architect Edward Nichols for the design, and the Frank Losordo Company of Hyde Park to do the contracting work. At the time, Frank Losordo had completed a number of schools and other public buildings in Massachusetts.

"Today, 76 years later, the brickwork is being continued and expertly matched by Frank Losordo's grandson, Matt," notes Paul Pratt Library Trustee Barbara Power.

Power said Losordo wanted to memorialize his grandfather in some way and the Trustees were pleased to accept his offer to provide some extra work not included in the budget in exchange for adding a line to the donor wall "In Memory of Frank Losordo."

May said Losordo repaired the pre-cast "columns" that were badly chipped around the old front door facing Ripley Road and did a lot of pointing [mortar work] that was not in the contract in exchange for the memorial to his grandfather.

In the mid-1990s, the town built the new Osgood School on Sohier Street; and later approved the $3.9 million library project for the former Osgood School. The new library will open March 3.

Help is just a phone call away

Program can ensure local seniors are safe

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Help may be "only a phone call away," as the saying goes, but making that call isn't always easy.

Seniors living alone who fall down or become ill often don't have the ability to place a call in an emergency.

That's why a service from the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office — the "Are You O.K.?" telephone reassurance program — is doing it for them.

"It only takes 24 seconds, it's absolutely free, and it could save your life," says program director Cheryl Bambery, who began "Are You O.K.?" in April 2001 and modeled it after a similar program in Plymouth County.

Bambery said the program has saved 17 lives in less than two years.

"We had a women in Walpole who didn't answer her phone. When we checked up on her she was under the table with a broken leg," she said.

The way the "Are You O.K.?" program works is simple. Once an application is filled out, a person will receive a automated phone call at a designated time every day between the hours of 6 a.m. and 12 p.m. A voice will ask, "Are you O.K.?", and a simple "yes" is all that is required. But a "no" answer or a "no response" will prompt another call from an "Are You O.K.?" officer.

"I think it's a godsend. To me, it's wonderful."
— Helen Murley, Cohasset resident

If there is no answer at all to the original call, a second call is placed five minutes later. Still no answer, and an alarm tells an "Are You O.K.?" officer to contact a designated friend or family member to check on the person. If a friend or family member is unavailable, the officer will contact the local police to do the check-up.

Bambery said the program reaches about 250 seniors in Norfolk County.

"It's grown to be more of a support group than anything else," she said. "Sometimes it's the only call they get all day."

Helen Murley is one of three Cohasset residents who use the program. "I think it's a godsend," she said. "To me, it's wonderful."

Murley hasn't had any emergencies since she signed up in September, but she said the program gives her something to fall back on if her arthritis or asthma act up. "It makes me feel very secure. I'm very pleased with the results," she said.

Carol Barrett, outreach director at the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs, educates seniors about the program.

"It's a very difficult sell," she said. "The elderly say, 'I don't need someone to call me because my son or daughter calls me every day.' Well, I say, 'What if they don't call you one of these days?'"

Bambery agreed. The one day a relative doesn't call, she said, is the day something could happen. "In this program, we don't take anything for granted," she said.

Barrett said the simplicity of the program makes it very worthwhile. "All they really have to do is lift up the phone," she said. "If they say they're not feeling well, then they'll get a call back again."

For more information about the "Are You O.K.?" program, contact Cheryl Bambery toll-free at 1-866-900-7865.

Deadline for nomination papers looms

Time is running out for those who wish to run for elected town offices. No new candidates sought nomination papers this week.

Potential candidates must secure 50 signatures from registered voters to make them eligible for the April 5 election. Nomination papers must be obtained by 4:30 p.m. today and submitted by 7 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 18.

Candidates who had turned in papers as of Wednesday morning include Gabriel Gomez, Richard Barrow, Carol Riley, Margaret Chapman, Michael Patrolia, Roger Hill, John McNabb, and Robert Sturdy.

Candidates who had not yet submitted papers include Michael Sullivan, Richard Flynn, Chartis Tebbetts, Agnes McCann, Patience Towle, and John Beck.

Seats up for election include:

- Board of Selectmen. Michael Sullivan will seek reelection. Roger Hill and Gabriel Gomez will also run for Sullivan's seat;
- Board of Assessors. Michael Patrolia is running for re-election;
- Board of Trustees for the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Agnes McCann, Patience Towle and Carol Riley will all run for re-election;
- Board of Health. Margaret Chapman will seek re-election;
- Planning Board. Robert Sturdy will seek re-election;
- Recreation Commission. Richard Barrow will seek re-election;
- School Committee. Rick Flynn and Chartis Tebbetts will both seek re-election;
- Sewer Commission. Gary Vanderweil will not seek re-election, but John Beck is running;
- Water Commission. John McNabb will seek another term.

OPINION

Be prepared

"Always be prepared" is a motto that many of us learned in our days in the Boy Scouts or Girls Scouts when we were children. But that commonsense message is lost on many of us today because fast food drive-thrus are open most of the time, as are supermarkets and convenience stores.

And if we need money at odd hours, we can always find an ATM machine.

Life wasn't always this "convenient." Not so long ago, we had to plan meals because fast food and take-out pizza weren't readily available, and just about everything was closed on Sunday.

Those were the days of air raid drills in school and the fear that Khrushchev was going to drop the atomic bomb on us.

Although we knew of no one who actually had one, there were reports and even TV shows about families that had built their own bomb shelters in their basements or backyards.

The times we live come with another set of fears, not the least of which is terrorism that carries with it a range of frightening scenarios from suicide bombings to biological weapons of mass destruction.

Terrorism is nothing new — just ask any Londoner who lived in the UK during the IRA bombings. But it wasn't until the catastrophic attacks of 9-11 that many of us on this side of the Atlantic felt truly vulnerable.

During the past week, the federal warning of a terrorist attack has been rated "high" up from "elevated." But, according to reports, many of us have done little to prepare for any break in our routine. That may be attributed to the fact we're all being encouraged to conduct our daily lives as usual, so it's difficult for a threat to seem real.

Twenty-five years ago this month the Blizzard of '78 completely shut down the state for days. In many ways, the preparedness we need for a terrorist attack is no different than what would be required to have during a major snowstorm or hurricane.

Therefore, if the specter of terrorism didn't exist, it would still be a good idea for all of us to review our household emergency plans.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) has an excellent Web site that asks "Are You Ready?" The site includes information on "disaster supply kits," creating a disaster plan, and emergency planning.

Here are a few tips we gleaned from the information:

- Plan how your household would stay in contact if you were separated.
- Pick a friend or relative who lives out of the area for your family members to call to say they are OK
- A disaster supply kit with essential food, water and supplies for three days should be kept in a designated place and be ready to "grab and go" should you have to leave your home quickly.
- Keep a car kit with emergency supplies, including flares and jumper cables.
- Assemble a work place disaster kit with food and water
- Store adequate drinking water for your household; keep canned foods, dry mixes and other staples
- Assemble a first aid kit for your home and each vehicle
- Make sure you have prescriptions are filled
- Store important documents in a watertight container
- Have flashlights with extra batteries
- Assemble a tool kit
- Have blankets or a sleeping bag for each family member.
- Consider the needs of infants, the elderly, disabled and pets, and include entertainment and comfort items for children.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The real leaders

TO THE EDITOR:

It was a pleasant surprise to find that someone had nominated me for consideration as citizen of the year, citing leadership of the Lightkeepers as one reason. Although I have served as President for the last few years, I see it as sort of a caretaking role to preserve the great achievement of Joe McElroy, the real leader who, with Herb Towle, recognized the potential of the decrepit lightkeepers house, who persuaded the town to let it be restored and converted to a community function hall, and who raised the funds and organized the myriad activities required to deconstruct and reconstruct the building. Joe also established the operating policies and practices that we still follow with only minor adjustments

Thanks to Joe McElroy, the townspeople enjoy a beautiful facility at nominal cost, and many will long remember the weddings, birthday parties and family get-togethers they attended in Bancroft Hall.

All viewpoints are welcome

TO THE EDITOR:

The South Shore Peace Forum invites all South Shore citizens of all viewpoints to join us in discussing our nation's future at our next forum on Tuesday, Feb. 18 at 7 p.m. at the Hingham Public Library. We will be investigating the domestic impact of a war on Iraq. Together we can meet our responsibility to engage in a civil public discussion and provide guidance to our elected representatives.

Response to Massport letter

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is in response to the letter to the editor from Betty Desrosiers, Director of Aviation Planning and Development at Massport, and published in the Mariner on Feb. 6.

On April 12, 2002, Massport installed a temporary noise monitor on King St. in Cohasset. Its purpose was to quantify the noise levels now experienced in the town and to be used as a reference to gauge the effectiveness of mitigation procedures relating to recommended flight path changes. The monitor was in place for 47 days.

In that period there were thousands of overflights from arrivals on runways 33L and 22R, the runways which affect us most severely. Frank Icavino, manager of Massport's noise office, informed me that on the first weekend there were 300 aircraft noise events that exceeded 65 dB. This is the noise threshold above which residential land use is discouraged. In August, Mr. Icavino called to tell me that he had calculated the average noise level for the entire, period to be 60 dB. In September, he again called to tell me that after review the average noise level had been recalculated at 58.8 dB. In early December, he called once again to tell me that the actual noise levels were now 53 dB. I told him that it was simply not credible that there could have been a sevenfold reduction in noise from the original calculations. He claimed that Massport had failed to exclude lawnmower noise. This is not a plausible explanation. He had explicitly planned to exclude lawnmower and other extraneous noise from the outset. Contrary to the assertion in Ms. Desrosiers letter to the editor, Mr. Icavino did not qualify any of his remarks with words such as "preliminary" or "single day".

The monitoring equipment itself is designed to exclude most extraneous sources of noise. It records only those noises above a known threshold and of long duration. These are uniquely characteristic of airplane-generated sound. Mr. Icavino set up those parameters when he installed the equipment.

You may have been surprised to read that of the 8,000 noise events recorded, only 3,400 were counted as aircraft-only events. Since the noise monitor is equipped to exclude most other sources of noise, this reduction is quite unbelievable, 3,400 events over the study period works out to be only 72 noise events per day. When runway 33L is in use for arrivals, we experience up to 600 overflights/day, and when runway 22R is in use for departures, we experience up to 400 overflights/day. It only takes seven days of these flight patterns to accumulate 3,400 noise events. The monitor was in place for 47 days. Massport's math does not add up.

It is most inconvenient for Massport to have recorded noise levels of 60 dB in Cohasset, According to their Environmental Impact Report (EIR), noise at this level is only supposed to occur over the water somewhat north and east of the tip of Hull and six miles closer to the airport than Cohasset. Since the building of the new runway is justified by the Report, it is clear that the EIR should be revisited and corrected to reflect the measured experience of South Shore residents.

Ms. Desrosiers asserts that I was promised the "raw data" with which to do our own analysis. On Wednesday, Jan. 29, Mr. Icavino refused my direct request for the data. This was a reversal of an earlier commitment that Massport had made to make the data available. It is troubling that Ms. Desrosiers chose not to inform me directly but used the vehicle of the letter to the editor of Feb. 6, to grant the request.

Finally, the assertion that I "unplugged the microphone" of their noise monitor is nonsensical and a complete fabrication. It might have been in Massport's interest to unplug the microphone, but it was certainly not in ours. The only people who had the ability and knowledge to operate, install, dismantle, unplug, take readings, etc., were officials of Massport. If a microphone was unplugged, it could only have been done by Massport. Perhaps that is why the number of noise events was lower than expected,

As you now know, Massport and the FAA have increased the number of flights directly over Cohasset severalfold over the last three years. These flights are claimed to be "over-the-water," and ineligible for mitigation. It is tragic that Massport sought to dilute the results of the noise monitor so as to maintain the "over-the-water" fiction. The final reported results of the noise monitor are not credible. I am therefore requesting with this letter that Massport agree to a second study of the aircraft noise in Cohasset. The study should be conducted by an independent, qualified noise consultant acceptable to Cohasset and the data be made available promptly at the conclusion of the study.

Valentine dance to benefit Bread & Jams day shelter

First Annual Valentines Fund Dance will be celebrated on Saturday, Feb. 15, from 8 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. at the Atlantica Restaurant, 44 Border St. The creative black-tie party will raise money to benefit the homeless of greater Boston and Cambridge. All proceeds will be donated to Bread & Jams, Inc. Self-advocacy Programs.

Bread & Jams is a day shelter for men, women and youth in Harvard Square at the Old Cambridge Baptist Church at 1151 Mass. Ave., Cambridge.

With this year's crippling State and Federal cutbacks, this event will allow those who do not think of themselves as wealthy philanthropists to make a collective difference that will keep the shelter alive. Dress creatively, come and have compassion and fun at the same time.

Numerous merchants, restaurateurs and local artists and friends from both South Shore communities and Harvard Square have donated gift certificates, tickets to major sporting events and works of art for raffle and silent auction. The Atlantica Restaurant is donating the hall and hors d'oeuvres. There will be a cash bar and dinner reservations can be placed with the Atlantica at 781-383-0900. Featured entertainment by The Joe Micarelli Trio, The Full Moon Revue, and Shaken Not Stirred - all donating their energy to this timely cause. Donations are $25 per person. Tables and blocks of tickets are also available. RSVP by mailed invitation please as a limited number of tickets will be available at the door. HEALTH NOTES

Comprehensive plan is critical to storm-water management

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As you know, to meet EPA Clean Water Act (Phase II) provisions, the State requires urbanized towns, of which Cohasset is one, to meet more rigorous storm-water management regulations to control surface water runoff to our various water resources. Lily Pond, our drinking water supply, is one. The requirements of this law are reasonable. Implementation, however, is not trivial, since it changes the way we have managed our surface water runoff since colonial times.

Nevertheless, if we are to receive the benefits of modern progress, we must deal with its threats. These threats come from runoff of certain types from our roads, lawns, agricultural and industrial facilities, and from many other sources all of which are directed by the town's storm-water system of drains and catch basins into our various wetlands, streams, rivers, ponds and estuaries. About half of the surface water drained by the system is benign. The rest has harmful contaminants to a greater or lesser degree.

For about a year now, the Town has been developing under Board of Health sponsorship, a Stormwater Management Plan which would help control the harmful material entering our water resources and would meet Federal and State requirements of the Clean Water Act. A major part of this plan is to identify the source of storm waters entering all of our water bodies, but most importantly, those containing our drinking water.

But mapping and identifying is one thing, cleanup is another.

Accordingly, the Town, using state grant funding, along with some matching funds of our own, has been working on identifying all of the town's storm drains and catch basins. At the beginning of this work it was estimated that the Town had about 900 such drains. Using mapping from aerial photography (taken for other purposes) we have completed maps of about half the Town, and have found about 1100 catch basins and storm drains. By the end of this work, all significant areas of Cohasset will have been mapped and made a part of the Cohasset Stormwater Plan in conformance to Federal and State requirements.

The Town's Stormwater Plan is a blueprint for assessment and cleanup. It includes a schedule and a description of some of the measures which cleanup will require. But mapping and identifying is one thing, cleanup is another. Modifying our drains and collection systems will take years, and will only be possible if we proceed deliberately and use the people and resources we already assign to such tasks. The Cohasset DPW already inspects and services many of the towns storm drains and catch basins. It is the purpose of the plan to make this ongoing activity more effective by addressing the most important problems first. In this manner, we can keep the costs of such an undertaking within reason.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Gomez announces run for selectman

My wife, Sarah, and I moved to Cohasset a few years ago to raise our growing family. We chose the town because of the warmth of its people, the beauty of its landscape, the high quality of its public education, the feeling of physical security, and the strength of its community. We are thankful to have found such a wonderful place to permanently settle and increasingly feel the responsibility to give back to the town that we call home. I am running for the Board of Selectmen to offer the voters of Cohasset a fresh perspective on town issues, a strong commitment to hard work on the Board and a sincere promise of strict fiscal responsibility. As a new face on the Board, I look forward to the opportunity to evaluate all issues with a sole focus on the long-term health of Cohasset.

Through my military service as a U.S. Navy SEAL commander and as a U.S. Navy pilot I have learned leadership skills, the value of hard work and how to operate effectively within diverse teams. Further, my training from Harvard Business School and business experience working with growing companies in the financial services industry has enabled me to build a strong foundation of financial understanding and the discipline of a successful executive. Having served on the Board of Directors of a number of growing companies as well as the YMCA of Greater Boston, the largest YMCA in the United States, I have helped guide businesses and charitable organizations through this difficult economic period, learning to avoid the pitfalls of insufficient planning and inadequate management. I do not shy away from challenge or difficulty. It has been suggested to me that as a relative newcomer, I have an uphill battle to win your support. To the contrary, I suggest that the fresh perspective I can bring to the Board will enable me to better represent you. As you get to know me, I hope you will find that I have both the judgment and the character to be entrusted with the betterment of our community.

Spending time in the community has taught me that while the voters of Cohasset are proud of their town, they see ways that the Board of Selectmen can improve life in the community, and ways that the Board of Selectmen can improve itself. The Board of Selectmen is the executive of Cohasset, responsible for the direction of our town. In difficult economic times such as these, it is the Board of Selectmen that must be responsible for the state of our town and accountable to the people of Cohasset. In a time of difficult choices and with changes to be made, I will be your voice of responsibility and change on the Board of Selectmen. I am a family man, a military man, and a businessman with a strong sense of community responsibility and a fresh view for Cohasset.

First and foremost, I believe that a high degree of fiscal responsibility will be crucial to the future of Cohasset. Like many towns in Massachusetts, Cohasset is facing the difficult combination of decreasing tax revenues and uncertain state funding as the economy continues to falter. In Cohasset we have seen budget overrides and special expenditure votes as the town struggles to provide all of the services of the late 1990s within the stark revenue realities of 2003. This approach is both inefficient and time-consuming, as voters must head to the polls for every new issue that arises. The goal of the Board (of Selectmen) should be to propose a budget that makes overrides unnecessary. As Governor Romney presents his budget cuts later this month, Cohasset will have more difficult choices to face. I believe that these choices are a challenge to be overcome, and one that is best met with a realistic budgeting process based on the worst-case state-funding scenario.

I have a strong understanding of the issues, a proven ability to learn and to lead, a passion for the job and an absolute commitment to listening to your concerns.

Cohasset voters do not want further tax increases. It is therefore the obligation of the Board of Selectmen to keep town spending in check. Rising tax rates are threatening the security of long-time town residents and putting a strain on households already feeling the pinch of a down economy. Despite the difficulty of the situation, it is the Board of Selectmen's responsibility as representatives of Cohasset's voters to rein our spending within the new boundaries.

Unfortunately, state-level budget cuts will inevitably take funding from our schools. Cohasset's schools are one of the town's great assets. My wife, Sarah, was a schoolteacher until she decided to stay home and raise our children, and education is an issue close to our hearts. Each of us has an obligation to ensure that our children's education does not suffer during this economic downturn. The Board of Selectmen, working with the School Committee, is your leadership in this effort. We must put the students first as we seek to maintain our high standards. While financial means are tight we will work with teachers and administration to find creative solutions to difficult problems. As a start, I would propose that we all renew our efforts to contribute meaningfully to the Cohasset educational system through volunteering our time or donating our resources to make up for the losses. The Board of Selectman, in conjunction with the School Committee, can and should harness the strength of the community through this difficult time for our schools.

Gabriel Gomez

These are difficult times for Cohasset; these are defining moments for our town. Defining moments call for strong leaders. Cohasset is at a crossroads and the entrenched politics and old alliances are no longer serving your best interests as a Cohasset voter. Unique among this year's candidates, I offer you a clean slate to represent your interests in the improvement of Cohasset. I have a strong understanding of the issues, a proven ability to learn and to lead, a passion for the job and an absolute commitment to listening to your concerns. You can count on me to come to the job with a high level of commitment and dedication, with a businessman's discipline, a military leader's strength and a father's sensitivity.

I look forward to meeting all of you, and hope to have the chance to introduce you to my wife, Sarah, as well as our children, Olivia, Zander and Antonia. Over the next few weeks I will be knocking on your doors, and I look forward to hearing your view of the issues. I want to hear your perspective as I work to make the Cohasset Board of Selectmen better reflect your interests.

POLITICAL NOTES

Bradley leads call to halt the runway

After meeting with fellow members of the Legislative Caucus on Air Transportation, state Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, and the Caucus called on various state and federal agencies to immediately halt all Logan expansion related endeavors, including current legal battles, in order that the Governor and FAA may examine new information relative to the economic benefits of Logan expansion. Based on previously unreleased reports it now appears that the economic value of the proposed Logan Airside Improvements Project, the primary facet of which is the construction of a new 5,000 runway, was exaggerated by a factor of 10.

Because of this material flaw in the way the original proposals were presented to state and local environmental officials, and because this economic data factored prominently in the original certifications that were issued, Bradley and many of his colleagues have called for an immediate moratorium and a reexamination of the project. Such reexamination, according to Bradley, should take place both in the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and in the Governor's new Office of Commonwealth Development.

"This new information demands that the Governor halt this project and review it on its merit," Bradley said. "I have also asked the Attorney General to meet with us to discuss this critical new data"

The apparent exaggeration of economic benefits stems from a fundamental flaw in the proposal's drafting process. Expansion proponents (Massport and the New England Regional FAA) utilized a private consultant, Simat, Helliesen & Eichre (SH&E), in the preparation of their public arguments and ultimately their Environmental Impact Report/Statement (EIR/S) (This is the document proponents were required to submit to state and federal environmental regulators). SH&E created its own, and previously unused model, to predict delay costs and economic benefits of the project. After public comments on the EIR/S were submitted the FAA hired the MITRE Corporation, which is a frequent consultant to the FAA on a national level, to conduct their own review of SH&E's work and to conduct an analysis using the accepted cost/delay model endorsed by the federal Office of Management and Budget. The results of that MITRE analysis indicate that the economic benefits of Logan expansion were exaggerated by a factor of 10.

Local Democrats elect delegates

Cohasset Democrats, at a caucus held 10 a.m. Saturday, Feb. 8, at Town Hall, elected five Delegates to attend the June 7 Democratic State Convention. Delegates elected were: Gail Collins; Tania Diatchenko, John McNabb, Kevin McCarthy, and Chartis Langmaid..

Five Alternates were also elected: Donna McGee, Susan Kent, Coleman Nee, David McMorris, and Patricia A. Laugelle. Democratic Town Committee Chairwoman Agnes McCann and Democratic State Committeeman Fred Koed will also attend the Convention as ex-official delegates.

The main order of business at the State Convention, to be held at the Tsongas Center in Lowell, will be to consider changes to the Massachusetts Democratic Party Platform and Charter.

What's his name quiz

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was checking the Irish sports pages (i.e., the obituary pages) the other day to see if they were planning a party for me (they weren't) when I came across a name that was vaguely familiar yet I couldn't quite place it.

The name was Robert St. John and I had to read the obit before it all came back to me. He was one of those early day radio reporters who broadcast the Blitz from London and the D-Day landing from Normandy.

The man whose name was once on everyone's lips, along with Edward R. Murrow and William L. Shirer, had passed on to that Great Newsroom in the Sky, recalled only by those who grew up on his words.

There are quite a few of those once well-known names that now cause an old timer to scratch his or her head and ask: "I know the name and I can see the face, but who is it?"

For instance, can you identify these names of people who had their 15 minutes of fame — some much longer — when you old timers were growing up 50 or more years ago? Answers below. Don't peek now!

1. John F. "Jafsie" Condon
2. Deanna Durbin
3. Harold Russell
4. Dr. Allan Dafoe
5. Joe Penner
6. Horace T. Cahill
7. Elmore Morganthaler
8. Vidkun Quisling
9. Bob Burns
10. Westbrook Pegler

And the answers are:

1. Jafsie Condon was the go-between who paid a man who claimed to have kidnapped the Lindbergh baby a $50,000 ransom for the child's safe return. The baby was already dead.

2. Deanna Durbin was a singing and acting rival to Judy Garland whose first movie kiss (by Robert Stack) was heavily promoted by Hollywood. She quit the movies and moved to France to be a housewife.

3. Harold Russell was a sailor who lost both arms in World War II and won an Oscar as best supporting actor for playing himself in "The Best Years of Our Lives."

4. Dr. Allan Dafoe was the country physician who presided at the birth of the Dionne quintuplets in Callendar, Ont.. The radio serial drama "Dr. Christian" was based loosely on his persona.

5. Joe Penner was a radio comedian who, for some reason, never failed to draw laughs when he asked, "Wanna buy a duck?"

6. Horace T. Cahill of Braintree was lieutenant governor with Governor Leverett Saltonstall and ran unsuccessfully for governor. He was one of the few statewide officerholders from the South Shore.

7. Elmore Morganthaler was a seven-foot basketball player recruited from Texas by Boston College Coach General Al McLellan to make the Eagles a national power. He didn't.

8. Vidkun Quisling was Adolph Hitler's puppet premier of Norway during World War II. He was executed for treason after the war. His name has been adopted by the English language as a synonym for "traitor."

9. Bob Burns, "the Arkansas Traveler," was a comedian who played a homemade instrument consisting of two gas pipes and a funnel called "a bazooka." The name was later given to a military weapon.

10. Westbrook Pegler was a vitriolic columnist for the Hearst newspapers who never failed to refer to Eleanor Roosevelt as "la boca grande" or the big mouth.

LIBRARY CORNER

We're moving!

This library will closed on Monday, Feb. 17.

The new library at 35 Ripley Road is scheduled to open on March 3.

All Cohasset materials will be due back after the move. In other words, you get to keep these items for an extra two weeks! The correct due date will be stamped in the book. No overdue fines will accrue during this period.

Please do not use the Book Drop while we are closed. If you have a book that came from another library, you should return it to the Hingham Public Library or any other Old Colony Library Network (OCLN) library.

While the library is closed, you will not be able to place "holds" on Cohasset materials. However, "holds" can still be placed, but they will be filled only by another library in the OCLN. Be sure to specify a "Pick-up Location" other than Cohasset!

All Inter-Library Loans (books from outside the OCLN) must be returned before Friday, Feb. 14.

Finneran flexes his muscles to show who's in charge

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The only people wordier than politicians are political reporters, and both had words aplenty after the strange spectacle in the House last week.

Inexplicably, House Speaker Thomas Finneran moved to assign increased pay for people who serve in committee leadership roles that have never carried bonus pay before. Explicably, he did so in a way that would confer the bonus pay on people who are loyal to him. That is the polite phrase. The less polite phrase, which is "suck up to him," was also heard.

He also distributed the rank-and-file members on committees in a way that diminished the influence of people who criticized his leadership. They were by and large consigned to committees that don't handle important topics.

The Democrats met in caucus and let their leader know he was going too far. While the punitive committee assignments will stand — as ratified by the caucus — the pay increases have been taken off the table, for now as Finneran pointed out. So has the Speaker's bid to exempt pay hikes from the full legislative process.

Announcing the withdrawal of his proposal, Finneran demonstrated, as he has before, that he knows when to yield to the membership he supposedly leads so inflexibly. He's yielded before in such situations, as when he announced a few years back that no member would be allowed to propose amendments to the state budget, then had to reverse himself.

Yet all he was doing was giving back some of the ground he had taken. And members did enable him to punish those with whom he's displeased. An autocracy needs not just an autocrat, but a compliant peasantry.

Finneran's proposal left tongues wagging, questions hanging and theories abounding: — Did he propose the bonus pay because he didn't understand how negative the reaction would be? — Did he do it because he misperceives himself as immune to criticism or reprisal, and the members enjoy that immunity too? — Maybe he did it because it gave him the chance to abandon the idea, proving he's willing to listen to feedback from the membership. — Or: Maybe it was to keep members and the press from focusing on how the House was keeping state employees from paying more for health insurance while again drawing down reserve funds and making the state's budget problems even worse.

Synthesizing all this, one wonders if the bid wasn't simply the statement: I'm still here. Romney isn't the only player in this building. One thing is sure: when Romney starts cutting the kind of questionable spending Finneran likes — like the over assignment of court employees to Suffolk County — we'll see who's really in charge.

Synthesizing all this, one wonders if the bid wasn't simply the statement: I'm still here. Romney isn't the only player in this building.

In this budget climate, it should come as no surprise that most of the news was bad last week:

• Budget leaders of the House, Senate and Romney administration announced they agree the budget for fiscal 2004 should be based on an expectation of $14.67 billion in state tax revenue. That's less than a 1 percent increase from this year, and less than inflation — meaning leaders are projecting the economy to stay stagnant for another year and a half. But the figure is so conservative that even if times stay tough, the state will run a surplus if the Legislature and Romney can match spending with available revenues. With a $3 billion divide between current spending levels and projected revenues, that's a big if.

• No one was surprised to hear the fund, which relies on the performance of the stock market, lost money. What was disturbing was that the loss was $2.1 billion, or 9 percent — and that's worse than other funds of comparable size.

• The political world was murmuring, more than buzzing, with the fallout of a recent Globe story. It detailed how U.S. Sen. John Kerry's family name was originally Kohn, because on his father's side, his family is Austrian, and Jewish. Most people thought Kerry was a mix of Brahmin (which he surely is) and Irish (which he disputed, but not vigorously).

• The Department of Education said it ruled favorably on the appeals of 112 of the 196 students who said they should be allowed to graduate despite recording failing grades so far on the high-stakes MCAS exam. Meanwhile, the state was said to be investigating allegations that some students in Cambridge may have received improper coaching and help to boost their MCAS numbers.

• The first public exhibition of proposals for the exciting new opportunity presented by the Central Artery depression brought mild praise but more calls for innovation from the panelists assembled at the Boston Public Library.

• Joseph Sullivan of Braintree said goodbye to his colleagues, as he departed his job as Transportation Committee chairman to become Lottery commissioner under Treasurer Timothy Cahill of Quincy. Sullivan is hoping to parlay his relationships in the Legislature into effective lobbying for the Lottery's interests as lawmakers consider whether to approve new, alternative forms of gambling such as casinos.

• A sign of the tensions developing in these difficult times came when the Globe ran a story recounting how on, after taping a segment on local aid cuts, North Adams Mayor John Barrett and Romney's director of communications, Eric Fehrnstrom, almost came to blows. A freelance technician who had to separate them said the pair swore at each other, and Barrett called Ferhnstrom a "wuss."

Bar association hosts legislative breakfast March 4 at Sheraton Tara

Governor Mitt Romney is the speaker for the event.

The Bar Association of Norfolk County has scheduled their annual Legislative Breakfast at the Sheraton Tara Hotel, Braintree, on Tuesday morning March 4. The Breakfast begins at 7:30 a.m. and will conclude around 9 a.m.

Governor Mitt Romney is the speaker for the event. Traditionally this breakfast has attracted a wide audience from the judicial, political, and legal fields but is open to anyone wishing to attend. More than 85 percent of Norfolk County's State representatives and Senators attend. The Legislative Breakfast sponsored by the Bar Association of Norfolk County successfully as a vehicle of communication between the people and their State Legislators.

President James M. Brady and Chairman John E. Garland, along with committee members Attorneys John J. McGlone, Harold Cohen, T. Mark Herliby, Michael A. Podolski, T. David Raftery and Richard Sadowki expect a tremendous response. Tickets are $20 per person payable to the Bar Association of Norfolk County. For further information, call Adrienne C. Clarke, Executive Director.

QUESTIONS

"Beacon Hill Roll Call" (BHRC) is a clear and concise compilation of the voting records of area state representatives and senators at the Statehouse. It provides an unbiased summary of each bill or amendment and arguments from floor debate on each side of the issue along with local legislators' votes.

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of (insert name of newspaper). It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on three roll calls and local senators' votes on two roll calls from recent sessions. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

GIVE ROMNEY POWER TO CUT LOCAL AID AND HIGHER ED FUNDS (H 2010) House 124-28, Senate 29-8, approved different versions of the bill giving Gov. Romney the power to make cuts to local aid and higher education funding in order to balance the fiscal 2003 state budget. The House and Senate eventually approved a new version on a voice vote without a roll call and Gov. Romney signed it. Prior to passage of the law, the governor's power to cut was mostly limited to health and human services areas. Supporters said that without the ability to cut local aid, the governor would be forced to make drastic cuts in human services and health programs that were already underfunded and were further decimated by former Gov. Swift's cuts. They argued the bill is a reasonable and balanced one that includes safeguards to ensure local aid is not excessively cut. Some opponents said it is simply unfair to cut local aid to communities after promising them a certain amount of it. They said the cuts would hurt cities and towns and result in cuts in local essential services, education and public safety personnel. Others said they opposed giving this power solely to the governor and argued the legislature should be involved in determining where cuts are made. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill. A "Nay" vote is against it).	Y	N
USE RAINY DAY FUND PRIOR TO CUTS (H 2010) House 136-15, rejected an amendment requiring the governor to use all the money in the state's rainy day fund prior to making any cuts in the state budget. Amendment supporters said it is irresponsible to make devastating cuts in human service programs and local aid when the state is sitting on a $300 million reserve fund which was set aside for emergencies. Amendment opponents said the state has already spent nearly $3 billion in reserve funds over the last year and a half and argued it is essential to keep the last $300 million to help offset even higher budget shortfalls in the months ahead. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment prohibiting cuts until the rainy day fund is spent. A "Nay" vote is against the prohibition).		N
LIMIT CUTS IN HOUSING, HEALTH CARE AND HUMAN SERVICES (H 2010) House 130-23, rejected an amendment prohibiting the governor from cutting more than $200 million from housing, health care, human services or welfare programs without the approval of a majority vote of the House and Senate. Amendment supporters said that former Gov. Swift already made huge cuts in these areas including funds for breast cancer, hospitals, community health centers and AIDS and smoking prevention programs. They said the legislature should not allow Romney unilaterally to make cuts over $200 million in important areas which affect the elderly, sick and poor. Amendment opponents said the governor must have the flexibility to determine where to make the cuts in a timely fashion. They noted the legislature can later use its power by considering a supplemental budget to restore the cuts and/or make cuts in other areas. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment limiting the cuts in specific areas. A "Nay" vote is against the limitation).		N
SUBCHAPTER S CORPORATIONS (H 2022) House 139-5, rejected an amendment eliminating a deficit reduction package provision requiring all Subchapter S corporations with gross receipts of more than $6 million to pay a corporate tax in addition to their shareholders paying a tax on their personal returns. This corporate tax is three percent on receipts of $6 million to $9 million and 4.5 percent on receipts above $9 million. The amendment reinstates the current law under which these corporations have been able to avoid this tax if they restructure in a certain manner. Amendment supporters said the provision is nothing more than a tax hike, imposed without a public hearing, and would hurt more than 1000 companies and cost each one up to $200,000 per year in additional taxes. Amendment opponents said the provision closes a loophole that has allowed these corporations to avoid paying any corporate tax by essentially restructuring and establishing a dummy corporation. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment reinstating current law allowing these corporations to avoid the tax by restructuring. A "Nay" vote is against allowing the corporations to avoid the tax).		N

MBTA, towns wrangle over need for 4-quad train gates

By James Russell
CORRESPONDENT

Local officials rebuked the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority's efforts to resolve outstanding historic and archeological resource mitigation issues on the controversial Greenbush railroad project at a Feb. 5 meeting at Hingham Town Hall that lasted longer than most marathons.

The Army Corps of Engineers, which called the meeting due to pressure from Greenbush towns, heard criticism about delays, missing and incomplete project designs, a fragmented process of construction document distribution, broken promises and unease with the "project conservator."

But leading the list, at least as far as Hingham and Cohasset are concerned, is the MBTA's plan to use 2-quadrant gates, which require median strips or barriers as a safety measure to prevent cars from driving around the gates to beat the train. The towns want 4-quadrant gates that don't require the unattractive medians that they feel would have a negative impact on historic areas.

In the town's corner is state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, who has been a vocal Greenbush critic.

"Two-quad gates with medians will create a blight on the towns," the Weymouth Republican said.

The Army Corps — which determines if mitigation measures for historic properties and archeological resources comply with federal law — has permitting authority over the $465 million Greenbush project under Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act.

Slated to carry riders in 2005, Greenbush would extend 17.5 miles of track from Braintree through Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

Hingham's preservation consultant, Minxie Fannin of Concord, said 2-quadrant gates would be an abomination in historic districts.

"Medians increase the black asphalt area by road widening; it removes shades trees and lessens green space," she said. "The Lincoln National Historic District will be a very different place with medians or 'channelization' devices. This will degrade the scale and character of this historic district."

But according to Project Engineer Eric Fleming of DMJM Harris — that is contracted by the MBTA to oversee the design and build contractor, Cashman, Balfour and Beatty — the use of 4-quad gates is a safety issue.

"Safety is the main consideration and the highest priority," Fleming said. "There is a general lack of acceptance in the railroad industry for 4-quad gates; one reason is the trapping hazard."

But Stephen Follansbee, a Quincy attorney representing Hingham, said cases of trapped vehicles do not exist with a 4-quad gate system.

"I have not seen any data that suggest people have been trapped in a vehicle between 4-quad gates," said Follansbee, who referred to a North Carolina Department of Transportation study comparing 2-quad gates with median barriers to 4-quad gates without barriers.

"That study concludes the risk of accidents are 86 percent less using 4-quad gates versus a 77 percent reduced risk when 2-quad gates with median barriers are used," said Follansbee. "The real issue the MBTA is concerned about is money, not safety; 4-quad gates would cost an additional $3.6 million."

"Medians increase the black asphalt area by road widening; it removes shades trees and lessens green space,."
— Minxie Fannin, Hingham preservation consultant

Follansbee said the transportation authority had agreed to use 4-quad gates and to evaluate each intersection on a case-by-case basis.

"The MBTA made a commitment in writing on May 15, 2000 to use 4-quad gates. This was premised on 4-quad gates being consistent with state and federal laws. They are consistent with those laws," he said "The MBTA said it would look at each and every intersection. But they now conclude all intersections need median barriers."

Andrew Brennan, the MBTA Director of Environmental Affairs, said determining how to have safe grade crossing without whistles is the goal. Except in the case of emergencies, Greenbush is going to be a whistle-free corridor. "Given no whistles, what is the best recipe?" he said after the meeting.

Fleming, the MBTA's consultant, said 4-quad gates are "experimental in nature."

"If an accident occurs, the first thing an attorney would say is: 'Did you go by the book?' And we would have to say: 'No, we made up our own rules,'" said Fleming, adding, "Using a median barrier is a prudent safety measure, with or without 4-quad gates."

Hingham's Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan disputes that 4-quad gates are experimental. He cited an ongoing rail construction project in Illinois containing 96 grade crossings that will employ 4-quad gates at 68 of the crossings.

"4-quad gates have been installed at nine crossings along the new Acela Amtrak route between Boston and New York City. It is in place; it is not an experiment," he said.

Public safety officials also have concerns about the median barries.

"We consider 4-quad gates a vital device to enhance public safety," said Hingham Fire Chief Willaim Johnson. "Median barriers will negatively effect the response times by prohibiting access in key areas. 4-quad gates without median barriers are very important to the safety of the community."

"There is no way Hingham Police can go on record, except with 4-quad gates without barriers," added Captain Mills of the Hingham Police Department.

Pedestrian and bicycle traffic also needs to be addressed, said Hingham Design Consultant Richard Cook.

"As a design engineer, you need to look at the environment you will be working in before you design a project," Cook said.

Two other areas in which little or no progress has been made since the last Section 106 meeting the Corps hosted in December 2000 are in Scituate: the terminus and layover facility to park Greenbush trains, and the intersections of Route 3A and Route 123, where a roundabout has been proposed.

"The MBTA has made a final determination the layover will be north of the Driftway" for overnight storage of trains, said Fleming.

Items that await resolution include:

- 2 quadrant gates with median barriers vs. 4 quadrant gates without barriers;
- Weymouth Landing station design; 3] final location of the Greenbush Line terminus and layover in Scituate;
- design of the Route 3A/Driftway roundabout intersection in Scituate;
- design of the crossing at Rocky Lane in Cohasset; 6] design of several roadways and crossings in Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate;
- measures to resolve adverse effects at the former Cohasset Railroad Roundhouse site.

Where to submit comments:

For email submission, send to: Theodore.m.lento@usace.army.mil or by mail: Ted Lento, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, New England District, Regulatory Division, 696 Virginia Road, Concord 01742-2751. Specify: "Greenbush Section 106 Comments." Deadline is Feb. 19.After comments are reviewed, the Corps will give an update.

"Within 30 days of today's meeting, the Corps will be providing a Progress Report," said Army Corps Project Manager for Greenbush Theodore Lento, who ordered the Greenbush Section 106 review process reopened for public comment.

Lento was noncommittal if the Corps would convene a formal hearing and consultation.

"We have received requests for a public hearing; a determination has not been made," he said.

Greenbush hotline

The MBTA/CBB 24-hour Greenbush telephone hotline is 781-682-6350.

Residents will receive a prompt return call regarding their Greenbush-related problem or query, Greenbush officials say.

Fred Piepenbrink, who was a WWII veteran, at a recent Memorial Day ceremony.

Frederick Piepenbrink

Frederick Piepenbrink, 83, of Cohasset, a retired postal worker, died Feb. 6, 2003, at the Veterans Administration Hospital, West Roxbury, after a lengthy illness.

Born in Newton, the son of Clarence and Ada (Smith) Piepenbrink, Mr. Piepenbrink was a lifelong resident of Cohasset. He graduated from Cohasset High School in 1938.

Mr. Piepenbrink worked for 34 years as a letter carrier in the Cohasset Post Office.

He was a veteran and a prisoner of war.

He served in the Army Air Forces from 1941 to 1945 and flew 24 bombing missions over Europe before he was shot down and taken prisoner after the Allied bombing of Dresden.

Mr. Piepenbrink was an active member of the Southeastern Chapter of Ex POWs, the sergeant at arms at American Legion George H. Mealy Post 118, and a life member of the Cohasset Veterans of Foreign Wars 9146.

Husband of the late Shirley (Brende) Piepenbrink, he leaves four sons, Frederick "Chip" Piepenbrink Jr. of Cohasset, Thomas Piepenbrink and his wife, Barbara, of Kingston, Kirk Piepenbrink and his wife, Keri, of Marshfield and Robert Piepenbrink and his wife, Jennifer, of Cohasset; a daughter, Susan Piepenbrink, a sister, Betty P. Enders of Cohasset; a brother, Charles Piepenbrink of Inverness, Fla.; and six grandchildren, Daniel, Callie, Cody, Kyle, Katie and Taylor.

A memorial service was held at the Second Congregational Church, Cohasset. Interment was private.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset, handled the arrangements.

Donations may be made to the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, 02025.

Russ Lennon by one of his gardens.

James 'Russ' Lennon

Accomplished horticulturist

James Russell Lennon, of Cohasset, affectionately known as Russ, died Feb. 7, 2003 at Boston Medical Center. He was 72 years old.

Born in Boston, he was a graduate of Jamaica Plain High School and its prestigious agricultural program. He was a lifelong gardener and horticulturist.

Mr. Lennon worked as an engineer for 40 years at AT&T, formerly New England Telephone. He had received awards for his engineering expertise from the Boston Police Department, the FBI and other federal agencies. He retired in 1993.

Mr. Lennon was a veteran of the U.S. Navy as a Seabee MCB-6 in the Korean War, at Santa Barbara, Calif. He also served in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba and in North Africa.

He was a member of the Telephone Pioneers of America and a member of Cohasset's "Old Goats," a lively club of retired gentlemen.

He loved the ocean and was an avid collector of nautical antiques.

But his greatest enjoyment and passion was his gardening. While still attending Jamaica Plain High, he was able to hone his horticultural skills by working on some of Greater Boston's larger estates. He also participated in the New England Flower Show as well as Breck's of Chestnut Hill Flower Show.

Mr. Lennon tended his acre-and-a-half garden in Cohasset for 40 years. It included a waterfall and a koy fishpond, created by him, by hand. He started flowers and plants from seedlings in his greenhouse and his efforts were recognized last year on the New England Cable News TV's "Tour of New England's Great Gardens." They profiled his garden and his was chosen "Great Garden of the Month." The broadcast started as follows: "Forty years in the making, a garden with the natural look, a maze of pathways, over a thousand plants put in each spring, a koy fishpond and waterfall — all man-made."

Mr. Lennon leaves his beloved wife, Jean L. (Shorey) Lennon; his two loving children, Therese M. Joslin and her husband, Robert of Matinecock, N.Y., and Gregory J. Lennon and his wife, Maria of Cohasset; his sister M. Frances Donovan of Albuquerque, N.M.; his beloved grandchildren, Harrison and Olivia Joslin of New York and Sophia Lennon of Cohasset; his aunt, Mildred Doherty McCarthy of Hingham; his mother-in-law, Mary Shorey of Winchester; and many nieces and nephews. He was the brother of the late Patricia Lennon Connelly.

Russ will be greatly missed by his family and his many friends.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Feb. 12 at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Funeral arrangements were made by the Pyne Keohane Funeral Home of Hingham.

Donations may be made in Russ's memory to the St. Anthony's Parish Center, 129 South Main St., Cohasset 02025.

Marjorie T. Ladd at her antique shop.

Marjorie T. Ladd

Marjorie T. Ladd, a collector of antiques and owner of the Lincoln Mill Antique Shop died Friday, Feb. 7, 2003 following a brief illness. She was 81.

Born in Columbus, Ohio, she grew up in Zanesville, Ohio, Paris, Ky. and Owensboro, Ky. She attended the University of Kentucky where she pledged Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority. It was there she met her late husband of 49 years, Don Ladd, who as a member of the Michigan State Swim Team, competed in a swim meet at the University of Kentucky. They were married and have been Scituate residents since 1956. Over the years both have enjoyed restoring the historic home and mill in North Scituate built by Abraham Lincoln's great-great-great-grandfather.

Her interest in history and her passion for collecting antiques led Mrs. Ladd to travel all over New England in search of interesting things from various historical periods, and to do volunteer work in local historical societies, such as the Cohasset Gown Museum.

She helped run antique shops until it was suggested she go into business with another antique lover, the late Carol Connor; together they opened the Lincoln Mill Antique Shop in the mill on Mordecai Lincoln Road.

Mrs. Ladd was active in the First Baptist Church on Country Way, where she enjoyed working on crafts and other items for the various church bazaars. In addition to her talents in refinishing and reupholstering furniture, Marjorie was an accomplished seamstress who also embroidered, did crewel work, hooked rugs, and had a "great eye" for finding treasures and home decorating.

Wife of the late Donald B. Ladd, she leaves her three sons, Charles Ladd of Syracuse, N.Y., Donald Ladd of North Scituate, and Jeffrey Ladd of Wolfsboro, N.H.; two brothers, Forrest G. Thompson of Jacksonville, Texas and Richard P. Thompson of Westfield, N.J.; her two granddaughters, Erica Ladd of Syracuse, N.Y. and Jocelyn Ladd of Minneapolis, Minn.

A memorial service will be held for Marjorie Ladd this Saturday, Feb. 15 at 3 p.m. at First Baptist Church, 660 Country Way in Scituate.

In lieu of flowers, contributions, made in her memory, to the Russian Missions Fund, c/o First Baptist Church, 660 Country Way, Scituate 02066 is sincerely appreciated.

Donald B. Woomer

Donald B. Woomer, age 83, of Watertown, Conn. and formerly of Cohasset, died Jan. 12, 2003 at home following a long illness.

Born in Mount Vernon, N.Y., he was the son of Percy B. and Edna (Dillon) Woomer.

A veteran of World War II, he served as a quartermaster in the U.S. Navy. He received his master's degree in economics from Columbia University and taught economics at the University of Buffalo.

Mr. Woomer worked as a systems analyst for the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad where he assisted in the installation of the railroad's first computer system. He later worked for Millennium Chemicals, Inc. and for United Fruit Co. He had lived in South Kingston, R.I. for most of his retirement.

In his retirement, he aided senior citizens with their tax returns and started each day by completing the New York Times Crossword Puzzle. He loved woodworking and was an avid sailor. When he resided in Cohasset, he was a member of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

Mr. Woomer leaves his wife, Frances (Gibson) Woomer; his daughter, Deborah (Woomer) Protulis of Cohasset and his son, William B. Woomer of Scituate; his granddaughter and grandson and two great-grandchildren.

He was the father of the late Donald B. Woomer, Jr.; and the former husband of Mildred (Krauss) Woomer of Cohasset; and the brother of the late Grace (Woomer) Butcheck of Oklahoma.

He also leaves his step-daughter, Sandra Festa of Connecticut, his step-son, Lawrence G. Smith of Cohasset; his five step-grandchildren and seven step-great-grandchildren; two nephews and a niece.

A memorial service was held Jan. 18 in Wakefield, R.I. where he had lived for the better part of his retirement. Interment will be at a later date in Gate of Heaven Cemetery, White Plains, N.Y.

Etta Lillian Lincoln

Etta Lillian (Stoddard) Lincoln, of Cohasset, died peacefully Feb. 8, 2003 at Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home following a brief illness. Mrs. Lincoln was 87 years old.

She was born in Cohasset and attended area schools.

Mrs. Lincoln, committed to her faith, was a deaconess and lifelong member of the Beechwood Congregational Church in Cohasset where she worshipped for 65 years, and singing in the church choir.

She was an active and respected member of the American Legion Women's Auxiliary in Cohasset; past president of the 60 Plus Club; the Harborview Tenants Association for the Housing of the Elderly; and the Cohasset Strutters Walking Group.

In addition, Mrs. Lincoln was a volunteer of various charitable organizations in Cohasset and enjoyed quilting, reading and walking.

She was the wife of the late Lawrence F. Lincoln, Sr., and leaves her son, Lawrence F. Lincoln, Jr. of Cohasset; her three daughters, Priscilla Trush of Seattle, Wash., Martha Lincoln of Franklinville, N.J. and Elizabeth Lincoln of Vineland, N.J.; two brothers, Sheldon and David Stoddard; three sisters, Nellie Lincoln, Olive Morris and Hannah Sawyers; and her three grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

She was the sister of the late Charles and Elmer Stoddard and Mildred Salyards.

A funeral service will be held in the spring.

Funeral arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Cohasset.

Donations may be made in Etta's memory to the Beechwood Congregational Church, 51 Church St., Cohasset 02025.

Lieut. Michael Joseph Hevey, Ret.

Marshfield firefighter and outdoorsman

Michael Joseph Hevey, age 61, of Kingston and formerly of Marshfield and Cohasset, died Feb. 6, 2003 at his home.

Born in Boston and raised in Cohasset, he was the son of the late Joseph M. and Frieda (Moeckel) Hevey. He graduated from Cohasset High School, Class of 1959, where he played varsity football. He lived many years in Marshfield and moved to Kingston in 1981.

He entered the U.S. Navy after high school and served aboard the destroyer, the U.S.S. Forest Sherman. He was later in the Naval Reserves.

Mr. Hevey was a Marshfield Firefighter for 30 years, having joined in 1968. He was appointed to lieutenant in 1970 and retired in 1998.

He was also a part-time commercial lobster fisherman in Cohasset Harbor since the age of 13.

He leaves his beloved wife, Cynthia J. (Gallagher) Hevey; his loving children, Patricia Healy of Kingston, Jim Hevey and wife, Elizabeth of Plympton, and Michael Hevey and wife, Erina of Stafford, Conn.; he also leaves a brother and sister, John J. Hevey and Patricia (Hevey) Doyle, both of Marshfield; his beloved grandchildren, Brandon Weckbacher of Maine, Bryan and Samantha Healy of Kingston and Jimmy Hevey of Plympton; and several nieces and nephews. He also leaves his devoted dog, Jake and his horse, Julie Bee.

A memorial service will be held Thursday, Feb. 13 at 2 p.m. at the Shepherd Funeral Home, 216 Main St. (Route 106) in Kingston. Visitation with the family will take place immediately following the service at the Upland Sportsman's Club, Upland Road (off Route 80) in Plympton from 3-7 p.m.

Donations may be made in Mr. Hevey's memory to the Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Bay State Drive, Braintree 02184.

Renovations set to begin at Capt. John Wilson House

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Historical Society is undertaking a long overdue renovation project.

With the help of a $150,000 grant from the Community Preservation Act, the society is overseeing a plan to stop moisture damage at the Captain John Wilson House, which dates back to 1810.

Tom Gruber, a co-vice president of the Historical Society, said runoff is to blame — with each storm water runs down the ledge that the Wilson House is built on and finds its way into the floors and the walls.

The Historical Society has hired Powers and Company renovation architects of Boston to examine the house and find the best solution. The artifacts that once decorated the house when it was museum have been removed. The floorboards have been systematically pulled out — each one numbered with a small sticker, each nail put in an envelope so it stays with the same floorboard it came from.

"I call it forensic deconstruction," said Gruber. "The idea is to take enough of the building apart so you can see the extent of the damage."

Gruber said the exposed bottom layer of flooring reveals a patchwork job where wood from the original home lies next to wood from the late 1800s and two by fours from as late as the 1950s. In places where the wood is close to the ground, it has rotted completely.

"What this says to me is that this floor has been taken apart and restored over the years, probably as a result of moisture damage," Gruber said.

In one corner of the bottom floor, a small concrete "dam" was built inside one of the walls but it has failed to work properly.

"The biggest part of this project is going to be the method that the engineers come up with for diverting the water away from the house," Gruber said.

The Wilson House and its neighbor, the Bates Ship Chandlery (a.k.a. Cohasset Maritime Museum), along with the Central Cohasset Cemetery, were added to the National Register of Historic Places in December.

Gruber said improvements to the interior of the building would not jeopardize the Wilson House's position on that list. "That's a big misconception," he said. "The Register only applies to the exterior of the house."

Other properties in Cohasset on the National Register are the Cohasset Common Historic District, Government Island, the Caleb Lothrop House on Summer Street and the Walter Gropius House off Atlantic Avenue.

Another part of the planned renovation for Wilson House is the construction of handicapped access, what Gruber said could prove to be a tricky project. "We want handicapped access but we don't want a bunch of ramps in front to obscure the building. Any handicapped access will have to be sensitive," he said.

Gruber estimates renovations at the Wilson House will take at least two years, after which the building will go back to being a museum, open in the summer and staffed by high school students.

For a private tour of the Wilson House during renovations, contact the Historical Society at 781-383-1434.

No drought in water system upgrades

The Water Commission has made progress on the latest phase of distribution system improvements that began in September, 2002.

"So far we have installed 4,580 feet, or about 9/10 a mile, of new or replacement water mains," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "These improvements will help to improve fire protection and water service throughout Cohasset."

The following projects have been completed by Water Commission contractor D&C Construction under the supervision of Tutela Engineering since September:

- Lothrop Lane — replaced approximately 1,000 feet of undersized 6-inch pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe.
- Hobart Lane — replaced approximately 1,350 feet of undersized 2-inch pipe and 6-inch pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe.
- Redgate Lane — installed approximately 1,050 feet of new 8-inch ductile iron pipe to complete a loop to Jerusalem Road, plus an extension of about 270 feet requested by residents.
- Hammond Avenue and Locust Road — replaced about 200 ft of under-sized 2-inch pipe, and installed about 500 feet of water main to create a distribution loop with 8-inch ductile iron pipe to an existing main on Locust Road.
- Hammond Avenue and Locust Road — approximately 60 percent of the drainage project for the Town has been completed, including the installation of about 1,000 feet of 12 to 24-inch drainage pipes, and 50 feet of 24x36 ft. box culvert and drain manholes drop inlets and catch basins.
- Windsor Road and Westgate Lane — about 210 feet of approximately 900 feet of undersized 2-inch pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe has been replaced to date

The following projects, to replace about 1,300 feet of undersized water mains, will be completed this Spring:

- Sheldon Road — replace approximately 500 feet of undersized 2-inch and 6-inch pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe
- Nichols Road — replace 8-inch water main located in Cat Dam Bridge to restore Nichols Road water distribution loop.
- Beechwood Street — replace undersized isolation valves at intersection of Doane Street.
- Beechwood Street — replace approximately 200 feet of undersized 6-inch pipe with 10-inch ductile iron pipe.
- Bound Brook Lane — replace approximately 550 feet of undersized 2-inch pipe with 8-inch ductile iron pipe.

Cohasset boys stun Harwich in 'Senior Night' win

Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

To play high school sports is to love to compete. It involves love of not only the sport itself, but everything connected to it: your teammates, your coaches, the fans that are made up of family and friends and your school.

The Cohasset boys basketball team has showed their love and played with pride over this last stretch of the regular season, and for many the last few games of their high school careers.

This past Tuesday Cohasset defeated the South Shore League's second place team Harwich, 67-61, to improve their overall record to 6-11 (4-7 in the league).

"This was our best game of the year," said Cohasset head coach Ron Ford. "It was just a great Senior Night. I'm very proud of how our guys played tonight."

The Skippers, who have won three of their last four games, jumped out to an early 4-2 lead and never trailed the rest of the game. The early excitement came from the five seniors who started in one of the last home game of their careers.

The five seniors that started were Ian Kidder, Ben Lynner, Jared Krupczak, Scott Faber and Ross Lieb-Lappen. Kidder scored 18 points, and Lynner and Krupczak each added 11 points apiece. Faber had four points and played solid defense all game and Lieb-Lappen chipped in with nine rebounds.

Cohasset jumped to a 39-25 halftime lead, and the closest Harwich would get in the second half was five points.

"This team got knocked out of the tournament a week ago and over the last four games they have played with great heart," acknowledged coach Ford. "It shows a lot about the character of a team when you really have nothing to play for and you go out like we did tonight and play your best ball of the season."

Cohasset struggled at home early on in the season, but they won their last three home games of the season.

No holds barred

Cohasset wrestlers appear primed for this weekend's Sectionals

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

And the beatings go on.

The Cohasset wrestling team closed the regular season in style, sweeping a quad meet at home on Saturday over New Bedford, Marshfield and Norwood to finish up with a best ever 18 wins for the program, against three losses and two ties. Coach Torin Sweeney can only hope this record run of success carries over into the "real season."

"The 18 wins was great, but know comes the real test," said Cohasset's longtime mat pacer. "I think we've got some guys who could do some things at Sectionals and States. Now, it's time to see."

Cohasset is one of 21 teams readying for this weekend's Div. 3 South Sectionals at Foxboro High (Friday afternoon and all day Saturday), a Section Sweeney considers quite possibly the state's most competitive top to bottom.

"You've got one dynasty-type team there with Foxboro, and then about five good teams that will all probably be in a dogfight for second place: us, Canton, Mansfield, Duxbury and Rockland," appraised Sweeney. "And you've got a lot of good individual wrestlers there too."

Cohasset was expecting several of the wrestlers from his South Shore League co-champion team to get top 10 seedings in their respective weight divisions when the rankings came out last night, including as many as six possible top five placements.

Senior Terry Baroudi, with two losses this season (both upsets) and ranked sixth in the state among all grapplers at 135 pounds, could well get a number one seed.

Senior captain Chris McKenna, also with just two losses, is likely to get a two or three seed at 145, as one of his

The joint school tumblers finished up their season with a 10-2 record, taking second place in the Pilgrim Conference, and were awaiting word at the time of this writing from last night's state sectional selection meeting to see if their season will be extended. Hold those Tigers

Sci-Coh swimmers earn split against much larger OA

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Ask one who does not attend swim meets regularly, and they will probably tell you intimidation is not really a big factor. Try telling that to the Scituate-Cohasset swim squad, who entered the Massasoit College pool with a roster that injuries, absences and sicknesses had downsized to 15 athletes.

This past Tuesday, the fierce 15 took on an Oliver Ames team (numbering well over 30) that was hungry to avenge last year's slim 10-point loss to the Scit-Cohs. Although the girls were overmatched, 98-78, the boys showed the Tigers a thing or two about "quality over quantity," taking their meet 56-46. Equipped with only four boys, the minimum required amount simply to make a relay team, the Sci-Coh males won all but two events for their first non-combined win of the year.

"That was just an incredible effort by our boys," said third year coach Jamie Kearney. "We were missing (freshman phenom) James Smith, but we still surprised the heck out of them. A team of that size and caliber could not have believed that just four boys could do what they did today."

The senior trio of Maran Monaco, Bryan Bilton and your reporter himself all registered first place finishes in both of their (our?) individual events.

Monaco typified the selfless teammate, as the usually sprinting Brazilian exchange student put in an incredible effort to win two distance races, both of which he had never swam before in competition. He took the 200 Individual Medley with a solid 2:46.85, and won the 500 freestyle in a shade over seven minutes.

"Maran has always been the guy that's willing to do whatever the team needs," observed junior captain Delia Regan. "He'll always worry about what is best for the team before he thinks about what he wants to do."

Bilton took both of his individuals, the 50 and 100 yard freestyles, inching closer to Sectional qualification. He will have one last chance to qualify this Sunday at the All-League meet, held at North Attleboro

Do-or-die time

Coach pulls no punches as Cohasset icemen continue to slide

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High hockey team qualified for the state tourney on Saturday with a 4-4 against Mashpee down on the Cape, but one got the impression in talking to head coach John Blake following that game that he'd almost prefer not to go to the postseason at all, given the way his team has been playing of late.

The rookie head coach makes no bones about it: he has been disappointed by the way his charges have played over the last four games, going 2-1-1 over that stretch against teams his squad swept the first time around and outscored 25-5. Cohasset came away from the four second go-rounds with a narrow 11-9 advantage in tallies, and Blake is now pointing fingers.

"Our leadership has been letting us down," charged Blake, whose team also clinched the South Shore League title with Saturday's tie, going to 9-5-2 overall (8-1-1 in league play). "I thought our leadership was further along at this point of the season, but it seems instead like it's taken a step or two back."

The former assistant coach at Blue Hills and Thayer Academy notes the problems of late—lack of hustle, heart and attention to defensive responsibilites, for starters, he charges—have been a teamwide epidemic. He has looked to his leadership to lead the charge in reversing these trends, but thus far is far from thrilled with what he's seen from those in this circle.

"When it happens in one game that's one thing, but losses came to a wrestler in this Sectional.

Coach Sweeney sounds confident that both of his stars could avenge those losses and walk away with the top prize at Sectionals, which would give them a high seed at the State Div. 3 championships at Burlington High School next weekend.

The others CHS grapplers Sweeney feels should get consideration for top five seeds are senior Phil Strazzulla (140 pounds) and sophomore Jonathan Littauer (103), Joey Kehoe (125) and Matt Baroudi (215).

Regardless of where they start, however, Sweeney feels extremely good about the chances of all six of these wrestlers finishing top six over this weekend and, thus, advancing on the States.

"All of those guys are wrestling well right now, and, from what we know of the competition, I'd say they all have a very good shot at advancing," offered Sweeney.

The coach also feels he has a few strong darkhorse candidates for this weekends proceedings, among them junior Jake Berger (heavyweight/215), sophomore Matt Casey (152) and freshman Dave McKenna (119).

Berger, in particular, is a wrestler who has really come on down the stretch this season, as witnessed by his performance this weekend. Thrown into the heavyweight division, the 205-pound Berger stunned New Bedford's 270-pound behemoth by pinning him.

"Jake is really wrestling well right now," noted Sweeney. "He's out-quicking a lot of the bigger guys and he's really got a few of the moves from on top down. He's using what he has in his arsenal very well right now."

Senior Terry Baroudi (right) and coach Torin Sweeney have had lots to celebrate together this season. Both hope that trend continues this weekend at Sectionals.

Wrestling Notes

Of the three wins on Saturday, only the showdown with Div. 1 New Bedford was relatively close at 37-33. Of course, Cohasset had it clinched with three matches to go when Casey notched his win at 152, and Sweeney played with the lineups a little after that.

Marshfield was taken down, 55-15, and Norwood was less of a challenge, falling, 49-9.

Cohasset had five triple winners: Littauer (103) with two pins, Terry Baroudi (135) with one pin, Strazzulla (140) with two pins, McKenna (145) with three pins and Matt Baroudi (215) with three pins.

High School. The 100 breaststroke and the 100 butterfly were both won by yours truly, quite the satisfying end to a 13 year dual meet swimming career.

The boys really won the meet in winning the last two relays. The team of Monaco, Bilton, Ingber and Garrett Donovan (who pitched in greatly to the winning cause with a pair of second places in the 200 free and the 100 backstroke) took top scores in both the 200 free relay and the 400 free relay.

The 11 Sci-Coh girls, although arguably more talented than their hosts, were simply overwhelmed by the much larger Tigress team.

Becky Keys, the Scituate sophomore, was for the third straight week the main attraction in this contest. Her score of 156.4 in the diving competition was well above any other diver, and she also became the fourth member of the team to qualify for Sectionals, doing so in the 100 freestyle with a time of 1:03.12.

Freshman Mamie Daley, who qualified two weeks ago for Sectionals in the 100 backstroke, continued her winning ways in the event with a time of 1:18.40. Daley also took second in the 200 IM, narrowly edging teammate Coral Yang of Scituate. Yang, in addition to her Medley, won the 100 butterfly with a season best time of 1:12.34, a nine second drop since the start of the season two months ago.

Scituate frosh Jenny Driscoll stepped up big in this contest, winning the 100 breast with a 1:24.98, 12 seconds ahead of her closest competitor. While Keys was trying to qualify in the 100, Driscoll filled in at the 500 free, taking second with a time of

The cheerleaders that participated in the competition were: (front row) Mascots: Shannon Mahoney, Kathryn Neil and Meri-Lenn Harris. (second row) Cheerleaders: Caitlin O'Neil, Lindsay Adams, Megan Sacchitella, Kimberly Neil, Nicole Dias, Laura Clancy. (third row) Cheerleaders: Anna Fortuna, Cara Donnelly, Michelle Mahoney, Brittany MacDonald, Caitlin Chase, Ellen Wise, Katlin Johnson. (fourth row) Cheerleaders: Justine Sholes, Melissa Warren, Jill Anderson, Kaylee Crane, Tasia Lund, Kaitlyn Buckley, Andrea Skane.

Trendowicz scored seven goals and five assists in the recent Cohasset-Duxbury game, which his team won 29-7.

Cohasset Little League signups

The Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball is opening an exciting new chapter in its history and will hold its registration for the upcoming softball and baseball season on Saturday, March 1, 2003 from 9 to 11 AM outside both the Osgood and High School gymnasiums. This registration is for boys and girls aged 5 to 12 as of July 31, 2003.

This will be the only registration opportunity for the upcoming season for this age group. All parents /guardians who are unable to make this registration should register their child by obtaining the necessary registration forms by contacting Anne Kearney on 781-383-1451. All registrations accepted after March 1, 2003 will be subject to a $10 late fee. A copy of the child's birth certificate must accompany a new player's registration forms. The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the major league baseball (ages 10 to 12) and softball divisions (ages 11 and 12) will be $100. The registration fee for boys and girls participating in the minor league divisions for baseball (ages 7-11) and softball (ages 7-10) divisions will be $85. The fee for the farm league instructional tee ball division (ages 5-6) will be $65.

In addition, due to recent the child protection program instituted by Little League governing organization, all adults interested in coaching, managing or volunteering in any way, are required to register at this same time and supply a photocopy of a government issued identification. Individuals not complying with this requirement will not be allowed to participate in the CYBSA program.

Questions regarding either player or coach registration may be directed to Mike Kearney on 781-383-1451 or Nancy Froio on 781-383-1897.

Scituate/Cohasset Youth Cheerleaders score big

Scituate/Cohasset Youth Cheerleaders participated in the Old Colony Youth Cheerleading Competition held at Taunton High School on Nov. 17, and earned fourth place in the dance division. This division was highly competitive, since every town placed a squad in this dance division. The Scituate/Cohasset Cheerleaders performed extremely well and were rewarded for their hard work, precision and enthusiasm.

This achievement was the result of dedication and the hard work of the Junior coaches: Nicky Bonomi, Kate Donavan, Jessica Fopiano, Emily Tiedmann and the parent coaches: Sheila Mahoney, Josie Dias and Lorie Neil. Thanks are also in order for all the supportive parents, Linda Harris, Sheila Harris and our Shark mascot Shaquille Lund for helping out on competition day.

Hitters' Workshop returns to SSBC

February school vacation, Feb. 18-21, in Hingham

HINGHAM - The popular Hitters' Workshops returns to the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham during the February school vacation.

The third of four special Hitters' Workshops, under the direction of veteran SSBC instructor Rick DelVecchio, will be offered Feb. 18-21 to players in two different age groups: 8-12 and 13-18.

"Lectures and drills are intended to create habits that will give hitters what they need to succeed in games," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. explained. "Our Hitters' Workshops have been designed to directly focus on hitting and improving all aspects of a player's hitting. Players can get plenty of at bats and receive first-class instructions from SSBC's veteran staff at this Hitters' Workshop.

SSBC's Hitters' Workshop features daily hitting lectures, five different hitting stations, various skills work and drills, live hitting cage with pitchers, soft toss and bunting stations, two live hitting stations, and a safety station for inside pitches.

Players 8-12 report at 9 a.m. to 10:45 a.m., while ages 13-18 go from 11 a.m. to 12:45 p.m.

The fourth and final SSBC Hitters' Workshop of the 2002-2003 academic year will be conducted during the April school vacation.

SSBC is a year-round, full service club and training facility for baseball and softball players, boys and girls, ages five and older, in Hingham. For more information about SSBC or any of its programs for members and non-members, call 1-888-749-6466/781-749-6466 or visit its Web site at www.ssbc.com.

Hope still springs for Coh-Nor gymnasts

Sectional tourney still a possibility

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The Seeding meeting for the State Individual Gymnastic championships was scheduled to take place last night, with one member of the Cohasset/Norwell team seen as a shoe-in qualifier.

Meredith Bixby, of Cohasset, is seen as a top candidate to qualify for the State All-Around competition.

Meredith finished second in last weekend's Pilgrim Conference Championships, taking a 34.2 in the All-League meet.

Bixby was also one of three Cohasset/Norwell gymnasts named to the all-star team. Bixby received her vote for an all-star honor in the all-around: the Big One.

Kerriann Hart, of Hanover, was first in the all-around with a 34.7. Jen Ng of the Randolph/Milton team finished third with a 33.15. Katie Donovan of the Hingham/Scituate team was fourth with a 32.6.

Also named Cohasset/Norwell all-stars over the weekend were Katherine Coyne on the beam and Nancy Durkin on the vault.

Cohasset-Norwell head coach Kara Connerty split the Coach of the Year award three ways with Hanover's Ruthann Ardizonni and Carver's Jenn Stadelmann.

Individual honors in the vault were Nancy Durkin with a first on the vault with an 8.3. Amy Maree was third and Lauren Kilduff turned in a sixth.

Taking a sixth place on the balance beam was Erin Kelly with a 7.9.

Lisa Spirito finished third on floor exercise with an 8.3, and Durkin was fifth with a 7.5.

Cohasset-Norwell gymnast Carlie Arena performs on balance beam at recent South Shore League meet. The C-N tumblers have finished up their regular season, and were awaiting word at the time of this writing from last nights state sectional selection meeting to see if their season will be extended.

Earlier in the week, Hanover clinched the Pilgrim Conference title outright and was assured that it was heading to the South Sectional tournament with a perfect record as well.

Hanover had an overall record of 11-0, and a conference record of 10-0.

The Nor-Coh squad finished second to Hanover in the season with an 8-2 record. In fact, both of their losses came to Hanover.

Four league champions in the state's South-Central region qualify for Sectionals, as will four other teams, with this matter being determined by the average of the top four team scores on the season. The Nor-Cohs boast an average just under 130, which would seem to give them a decent shot of advancing to Sectionals.

improved Carver team, the boys won 59-50. Cohasset scored the last 10 points of the game and held Carver scoreless over the last 4:15 of the ball game.

Senior captain Ben Lynner scored 22 points and pulled down eight rebounds, and junior guard Chris Bilodeau had 20 points.

Cohasset closes out the season this weekend in the Mansfield tournament. They played Hull at home Wednesday night after the Mariners' press time.

MAXLAX REPORT

Game of the Week:

U12 Cougars top Blades, 7-3

In a week where the real winner was Mother Nature as the first "real" winter storm hit our area and canceled Friday's games, we still saw plenty of good action on Saturday and this one was the best of the week.

This game was a victory for both defenses as throughout the majority of the game, the score was locked in a close draw from midway through the first period through to the final couple of minutes of play and while there was certainly enough scoring to decide a winner, each and every goal was talliedthe "old fashioned way" - they earned it . . .

Scoring for the Cougars were Eamon Davis who had two points on the day along with a nice assist and the game winner; Will Wise with two, that kept his streak of scoring at least 2 points a game intact; and the goalies on the team Ian Porter and Jack Murphy both scored a goal and an assist. At the heart of this victory was the consistent play of the entire squad on both sides of the ball as they controlled their passes, set up the best scoring opportunity, and relentlessly "hounded" their opponents offensive drives.

Jackson Dean, who is a clear favorite for the "Most Dedicated Player" played one of his best games at Attack and while he didn't notch any for the score sheet, he had some marvelous near misses that allowed his teammates to take advantage down the stretch. Anchoring the defensive stand was Richard Buckley and Derek Cyr who kept coming back for more and created an impenetrable force around the net repelling all but the best executed advances. Olly Forrer, who came directly from the slopes to make the game, also demonstrated some defensive prowess at Midfield to make sure that this victory would remain intact.

The Blazers had scores from Logan Chase and two from Christopher Benoit to keep the game within reach, but the real story was the goaltending of Wes Ulmer who commanded the defensive end like a seasoned General, taking the ball across mid-field on several rushes when there wasn't a safe outlet pass to be had. He also made a number of multiple saves and confounded the Cougars with an aggressive "in your face" combativeness that made many of the Cougars just a little nervous when they started to get to close to the goaltender. The Blazers got great Middie play from John Kearney as he continues to demonstrate tremendous improvement in his game and who is now routinely notching hat tricks and assists over the last several games to give his team a much needed spark on offense and defense.

Though the score doesn't indicate that this was close one, it's not always the score at the end of the game that makes it a great contest. This one was won in the trenches and both sides came away as better lacrosse players after they were through.

PLAYER of the GAME: Spartans George Reynolds (7 Goals/2Assists)

PLAY OF THE WEEK: Talons V Stingrays - Did you see this one ?

Jake Gray is sometimes overshadowed by the skills of his "big" brother Zach on this talented Talons team, which is hard to do as Jake is an imposing figure at 180lbs and shoulder to shoulder with most of his coaches. But, you wouldn't have suspected it after watching Jake (who playing defense) took the ball off of a broken play that he caused and "danced" through defenders switching hands as if he had been doing it naturally all his life.

Needless to say, it was fun to see the "big man dance" . . .

You don't see this one very often . . .

'Rough' going for lady hoopsters

Girls basketball team proves no match for Carver, Harwich

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It's been a rough season for the girls basketball team. Armed with experienced seniors, good defenses, inside post-players and all-range shooters, the Lady Skippers have just not been able to get on the right track and beat their South Shore League opponents.

The team dropped a pair of SSL contests earlier this week, losing to Carver 72-44 in a snow make-up game and 60-41 in Harwich on Tuesday.

Against Carver, the final point differential would certainly indicate a great disparity between the two teams. However, anyone at the game could attest that the teams are not too far from even, as shown in the 24-24 halftime score.

Cohasset center Danielle Pinkus (white shirt) tries to disrupt the shot of Scituate's Christina Obert in recent non-league tilt.

For the first 16 minutes of the game, the trio of Justine Hill, Julie Ann Burns and Meaghan Jesse were held under raps by the always tricky triangle-and-two defense, which combines a low post zone with an ability to control the top ball-handlers man to man. Cohasset sophomore Casey Anderson did a particularly impressive job defending Jesse, the Crusader center, holding the three time all-star to one basket the whole half.

"Casey played phenomenal defense," noted assistant coach Deb Beal. "We did an outstanding job containing in the first half."

But the second half told a very different story. The ever dangerous Burns, voted an all-star as well on Tuesday night, began to hit her outside runners, en route to a lethal 23 points. When the defense shifted to contain her perimeter presence, Jesse made her inside presence felt, scoring 21.

Justine Hill, rounding out the threesome of all-stars, managed only nine points while under the defense of junior Jenn Buckley. Cohasset senior captain Lindsay Grossman, voted Cohasset's lone all-star selection this year, led Skipper scorers with 12 points, although the bench rotation left her with far shorter minutes than normal.

Against Harwich, the Rough Ryders used a very balanced attack, along with a vicious press to outlast their visitors for the 19-point victory.

Sharee Daluze, a senior and no-brainer pick for the all-star squad, led all scorers with 13 points. Sophomore Jayne Vagenas, Harwich's other all-star, had eight. The Rough Ryders went deep into their bench, with 10 of their 12 players contributing points.

Grossman again took the scoring reins with 12 points. Junior center Danielle Pinkus threw in nine points down low, especially impressive against the heighty Harwich team.

Cohasset captain Tom Anderson (#2) has been lauded almost weekly by coach John Blake for his steady play this season.

Do-or-die time

we've been having the same problems for a while now," said Blake. "We've just been flat emotionally. Our guys are being beaten to the puck, outhustled and out-worked. We need someone to give us a spark, and the ones I was looking to just don't seem like they're into it."

Two of the veterans specifically absolved from this broad slam were defensemen Tom Anderson, a senior captain, and junior Mike Devine.

"Tommy (Anderson) has been giving it all," said the coach. "He's one player you never have to worry about."

And Devine: all he did was score three of the four goals in Saturday's 4-4 tie.

The slick-skating junior blueliner put the Skippers on the board first with 1:41 to go in the first period, with assists going to Mike Rasmussen and Matt Davis.

Mashpee's Trever Fronius tied the game back up just 58 seconds later, and that's the way it stayed until Devine punched home his second with 4:46 to play in the second period on a helper from Anderson.

Devine staked the Skippers to a two-goal lead 2:10 later, with freshman Matt O'Connell and senior John Durkin getting the assists.

A Mashpee goal inside the final minute of the middle frame was answered by Cohasset sophomore Mark Donovan on a pass from freshman Brandon Smith midway through the third, seemingly putting the Skippers in the driver's seat.

However, Mashpee, 2-9-3 coming in (1-8-1 in SSL play), managed to put two behind Cohasset netminder Stefan Parnell inside the final 10 minutes, the equalizer delivered by Fronius with just 35 seconds to play, to steal the tie.

"If I was Mashpee, I'd be absolutely thrilled to come away with a tie with two late goals making the difference," offered Blake. "Obviously, though, it's a bad loss for us."

Now, too many veteran coaches to name have observed over the years that playing on the Cape is almost like playing in a foreign land and by foreign rules, and Blake did not exactly defame that notion. However, he also did not accept this as an adequate excuse for what he described as "some lackluster performances."

"We've got kids who've been around long enough to know what hockey is like on the other side of the bridge," he charged. "Instead of worrying about the Cape refs and the calls they weren't getting, they should have been worrying about just playing and controlling the things they can."

The coach did soften somewhat, noting his team was also somewhat snakebitten right now, particularly team and league leading scorer John Durkin (21 goals, 15 assists), who he says has hit no fewer than five posts in the last three games.

Blake also acknowledged the loss of practice time on Friday due to the snow storm didn't help, giving his team three days off since the start of the season. Ditto for the first "long bus ride of the year."

His predominant message, however, did not waver.

"We've got three games now to turn it around, and it's not going to get any easier," Blake concluded. "Teams that do well in the state tourney are generally the ones who finish strong, and right now we're going the other way. There's still time, but we need to get it going now. It's not something you can just turn on and off like a light switch."

Hockey Notes

Skippers 2, Hull 0

Last Wednesday, Parnell made 18 saves to notch his third shutout of the season. Matt O'Donnell and John Durkin provided the difference for the Cohasset offense, which threw 36 shots on Hull's returning league all-star netminder Mark Saville.

Scoring leaders

Durkin, with 36 points, continues to hang on to the league scoring lead despite netting just one goal and two assists in his last four games. Davis trails him with 27 points (11 goals, 16 assists), and he's followed by junior Mike Rasmussen (6-11—17) and Devine (8-6—14).

In net, Parnell continue to be among the league leaders in goals against, posting an extremely solid 2.19 mark (35 goals, 16 games).

Next on tap

The Skippers were scheduled for their second "long" bus ride of the season, last night, with Harwich on the slate down in Orleans. Coach Blake noted his team's performance in this second go-round with Harwich (9-6-1, 6-3-1), who the Skippers embarrassed the first time around by a 7-1 score, could be pivotal to his team's prospects the rest of the way.

Cohasset follows this up with a hosting of Carver on Saturday night (7:20 p.m., Pilgrim Arena) to close out the SSL schedule. Blue Hills travels to Pilgrim next Wednesday for the regular season finale (7:40 p.m. start).

The postseason will get underway following the school vacation.

Middle/Senior High fund-raiser

The Middle/Senior High School is holding a raffle fund-raiser to raise money for a portion of the athletic trainer's position at the middle-high school.

The school has been fortunate to have Jim Levenson on staff as athletic trainer for the past two years. The school's goal is to raise about one third of the cost of the position.

Two Cohasset graduates, Phil Mahoney and Robert Donahue, have generously donated tickets to a number of Celtics and Bruins games coming up in March. The following tickets will be raffled off as prizes:

Grand Prize: Four tickets, Wednesday, March 5, Celtics vs. Knicks ($360 value).

Second prize: Two tickets, Friday, March 7, Celtics vs. Clippers ($160 value).

Third prize: Two tickets, Thursday, March 13, Bruins vs. Devils ($170 value).

Fourth prize: Two tickets, Saturday, March 15, Bruins vs. Panthers ($170 value).

Raffle tickets may be purchased before Feb. 28 from any winter sport athlete or from Ron Ford, athletic director, 781-383-6103. They are $5 each or five tickets for $20. Checks should be made payable to Cohasset Middle-High School.

Pilgrim Arena offers scholarships

Applications for ten $2,500 scholarships are available (starting Friday, Feb. 14) at the Pilgrim Skating Arena, 75 Recreation Park Drive in Hingham.

This is the 30th consecutive year that the Pilgrim Skating Arena is awarding scholarships to area high school seniors planning to further their education.

Interested seniors must pick up and sign for the application in person at the arena pro shop. Completed applications must be returned by Monday, March 31.

Applicants will be judged by members of the Scholarship Committee of the Board of Directors at Pilgrim Arena.

For more information, please call Hoby Taylor, 781-749-6660.

Postprom party donations sought

Preparations are underway for Cohasset High School's sixth annual Postprom Party 2003. The party will follow the Senior Prom, scheduled for Friday evening, May 20. The Postprom Party 2003 will be held in the Cohasset Middle/High School. It's a magical night with a surprise-decorated theme and includes music, entertainment, food and prizes. This traditional event is a chance for seniors and their guests to celebrate together in a safe, alcohol and drug-free environment. It has traditionally been a success with the majority of the seniors and guests attending.

Support is needed because contributions are relied upon to fund a major portion of the expense.

Please make donations payable to Cohasset Postprom Party 2003 and mail to: Cohasset Postprom Party 2003, 27 Forest Ave. Cohasset, MA 02025.

Kindergarten registrations

Kindergarten registration for Cohasset students entering Kindergarten in September 2003 began on Monday, Feb. 10. Children must be five years old on or before Sept. 1, 2003 in order to be eligible for enrollment. Parents may register daily from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Osgood School office. A copy of your child's birth certificate and proof of residency is required.

Early registration is encouraged to enable the school to plan for the number of students who will be attending Kindergarten in the fall. Please call the Osgood School at 781-383-6117 for any questions or concerns.

SAFEGUARD expands, new programs planned

When Project SAFEGUARD first began in Cohasset back in the mid 1990s, a few parents working closely with School Health Education Coordinator, Michael Gill, set out to raise monies in the community to support a special seventh grade program.

Last December, this Project SAFEGUARD Committee joined forces with the school-based Health Education Advisory Committee and the community-based Town Drug and Alcohol Committee. Together these three groups will work to develop and promote physical, social, and emotional/ mental health programs for K-12 students.

In addition, because of the at-large community work that the Town Drug & Alcohol Committee has performed for many years, the Project SAFEGUARD Committee will make an effort to be responsive to the needs of the entire community by working with the Parent School Organization, the Social Service League, the Department of Public Health, the Police Department, and other agencies and organizations.

What is special about this program is that it's designed to bring students and parents together to attend presentations and workshops designed to address a number of child and adolescent health and social issues. Last October, the Committee organized an exceptional program for seventh-grade students and their parents at several sites surrounding the town common. Presently, plans are being made for a program for eighth grade students and their parents on March 12 at the Middle-High School auditorium and on April 9 for sixth-grade students and their parents at the Deer Hill School. Both programs will be held during the school day. Parents, please note the dates.

Project SAFEGUARD meetings are generally held in the Middle-High School library, one morning per month. Community members interested in working with this committee are invited to contact Health Education Coordinator, Dr. Michael Gill (383-4205) mikegill@chs.ssec.org, or parent reps., Sally Sisson (salsisson@attbi.com), Karen Oronte (oronte@attbi.com), or the Reverend Clifford Cutler (ccutler@ststephens.org).

Send in your school news

The Cohasset Mariner wants to develop a school news page to run every week. Short news items from teachers and school organizations are welcome. Photographs of events, accompanied with a short article or longer story are also sought. If you have "Stars of the Month", an interesting program or student volunteer effort, artwork, student writings, interesting field trip, or special projects, please share them with us.

Also, if you would like to request a photographer for your school event, please let us know. Contact editor Mary Ford at 781-741-2933. News items my be sent by email to mford@cnc.com or dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street in the village.

Hingham Symphony to stay in tune with tomorrow

Wants to ensure continued success

Hingham Symphony Orchestra is moving forward with plans to stabilize and enhance its organization, to enable it to grow as a source of classical music and hands-on educational opportunities for audiences across the South Shore. After extensive strategic planning, the Board of Trustees has decided that a minimum of $3 million will be needed over the next five years to implement its vision.

To meet this ambitious goal, the HSO Board has decided to undertake the largest enhancement program in the organization0s 57-year history. It is currently recruiting a development campaign steering committee, made up of major supporters from towns across the South Shore, who will recommend to the Board a dollar goal and lead the fundraising effort.

"This is an exciting time for the HSO," says Mary Beth Alger, President of the HSO Board of Trustees. "We have a very clear mission, that includes performing a full season of concerts employing the finest professional musicians and award-winning conductor Jin Kim, offering progressive opportunities to young musicians, and partnering with local community organizations.

"HSO is critically recognized as one of the best professional orchestras in New England. Now it is time to align our funding with the program and organization that we have developed," she says.

As is typical with arts organizations that keep ticket prices reasonable and perform in small venues, tickets sales account for only one-third of annual revenue. Since its conversion in 1997 from a community orchestra to a professional symphony orchestra, the Board of Trustees and the staff of the HSO have successfully addressed the growing needs for operating and program funds through annual donations, grants, and corporate sponsorships.

"It is now time to round out funding for all aspects of the organization capital, program, operating and reserve," says Alger. "We have grown quickly and efficiently, to become a major resource for classical music on the South Shore. At this point, we must increase staffing, pay musicians at a more competitive level, and add to marketing and educational efforts."

Managing Director Nina Wellford cited additional priorities.

"Capital needs include office space and updated technology," she says. "As befits an arts organization that relies on contributed income as well as generated revenue, the HSO is run on a lean budget. As we develop programs that impact audiences across the broader region, expenses grow proportionately. We need to create a reserve of funds to help with cash flow, and to increase stability."

The eventual campaign goal will reflect the funding level necessary to sustain an orchestra of the highest caliber on the South Shore, Alger says.

Blizzard exhibit at Hull Lifesaving Museum

On the afternoon of Feb. 6, 1978 a storm arrived on the South Shore that would virtually hold the area hostage for nine days. By 6 p.m. many towns had lost power. Electricity would not return for four, or in some areas, five days. Many residents saw their homes devastated by heavy snowfall, high winds, and extreme flooding. Forced to evacuate, most found shelter in the public schools. Suddenly the need arose to feed and care for thousands of cold, hungry, and exhausted people. While the storm soon ended, its effects were felt for years to come.

The Hull Lifesaving Museum, 1117 Nantasket Ave., has opened a new exhibit to mark the 25th anniversary of this unforgettable storm. The story of the South Shore's nine-day ordeal through the Blizzard of '78 is a fascinating account of New England weather as well as New England character. Through photographs, newspaper articles, personal testimonies, and film clips the Blizzard of '78 Anniversary Exhibit examines the impact of the blizzard on the South Shore in terms of both physical damage and community experience. IT'S HAPPENING

Alzheimer's support

A six-part weekly series "Home Based Care: Techniques for Caregivers" will begin Wednesday, Feb. 19, sponsored by the Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore, Inc. This educational series was developed and will be presented midday by the Massachusetts Alzheimer's Association. The goal of this series is to give caregivers techniques for caring for an at-home patient, as well as self confidence and perspective on their roles as caregivers. The class is limited to 18 participants. For more information and to register, call Jean Coffin, LICSW, at 781-740-7481.

This series is made possible through a Title IIIe grant through South Shore Elder Services. There is no fee for the course, but donations are welcome.

Oldies at Atlantica

The Timetations will be performing oldies hits from the 50', 60's and beyond at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset Saturday evening March 1.

This dinner show features "Chantilly Lace, Da Do Ron Ron, I Got You Babe, He's A Rebell' and many more. For reservations and details call 508-746-2939.

'Sound of Music' auditions slated

The Cohasset Dramatic Club will hold auditions for its spring musical "The Sound of Music" at Cohasset Town Hall on Sunday, March 2 from 12-3 p.m. for children, and 3-5 p.m. for adults, and also on Monday March 3 from 7-9 p.m.. Call backs will be on Tuesday March 4.

Please be prepared to sing a song from the show, and read from a script. If you are auditioning for one of the children, Rolf or Maria, you will also need to dance. Those auditioning for "Nuns Chorus" must sing harmony. Basic guitar skills a plus for Maria and Captain von Trapp. There are five non-singing male roles from 30-70 years old and one non singing woman's role, 35-70. There are five singing roles for girls 5-22 and three singing roles for boys 10-22.. The performances will be the first three weekends in May. For further information, call the producer, Jean at 617-750-8987.

'Relay For Life' meeting Feb. 25

Hundreds of area residents have taken up the fight against cancer by taking part in the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life. The volunteer planning committee for the Society's seventh annual Relay For Life in Cohasset is hosting a kickoff for new team captains and interested participants from 7-8 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 25 at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St., Cohasset.

Relay For Life is the Society's signature activity taking place in more than 3,800 communities nationwide. This unique, overnight event raises cancer awareness while serving as a celebration for cancer survivors, a memorial for loved ones lost, and a rally for the community. Teams formed by local businesses, schools, organizations and families camp out around a local track overnight and take turns walking or running while enjoying music, entertainment and camaraderie.

The American Cancer Society's seventh annual Relay For Life in Cohasset is set to take place on May 16-17 at Cohasset High School. Funds raised support the Society's programs of research, education, advocacy and services that benefit local patients and their families.

Events are taking place in towns and cities throughout Massachusetts. For more information, to volunteer or to find an event near you, please call 1-800-ACS-2345 or visit the Web site at www.cancer.org. Community Newspaper Company, parent of the Cohasset Mariner, is a media partner of the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life.

African dance band at the Coffeehouse

On Saturday, Feb. 15, at 8 p.m., the Old Ship Church's Coffeehouse off the Square presents Boston's premier African dance band, Rumbafrica. Congo's Tshibangu Kadima and his exotically costumed international musicians, singers, and dancers draw on contemporary and traditional Congolese, Cuban, and other styles and rhythms towards one end — great dance music. They include the sweet vocal harmonies and lilting dance rhythms of classic Congolese Rumba, as well as guitar theatrics, percussion breakdowns, and traditional dancing.

The coffeehouse is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham Square.

Tickets are $10 at the door and coffees, teas, cider, and homemade desserts are 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian/Universalist Service Committee. For more information, contact: Jim Watson, 781-749-1767 or John Leonard, 781-749-2852.

'The Crucible' tickets available

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents, "The Crucible", directed by Lisa Rafferty at the Cohasset Town Hall. Feb. 28, March 1, 7, 8, 14, 14 & 15 at 8 p.m. and Sunday March 16 at 2 p.m. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset, Front Street Books in Scituate, at the door or by phone at 781-544-0304.

Garage hours

During the February school vacation, the Garage will be open on the following days and times:

Saturday, Feb. 15 from 5-10 p.m.; Monday, Feb. 17 from 4-9 p.m.; Tuesday, Feb. 18 from 4-9 p.m.; Wednesday, Feb. 19 from 4-9 p.m.; Closed — on Thursday, Feb. 20; and Friday, Feb. 21 from 5-10 p.m.

For information, call the Cohasset Recreation Commission at 781-383-4109.

Series on Alzheimer's care

The Norwell Visiting Nurse Association (NVNA), through a generous grant from South Shore Elder Services, is pleased to present a six-part, free public series called Caring Connections: Alzheimer's Caregiver Education and Support Program.

This program was launched on Jan. 16 and will continue until Feb. 20. Sessions are held every Thursday at 7 p.m. at the Sunrise Assisted Living facility, located at 125 King St. (Rte. 3A). Participants are given the opportunity to ask questions to further their understanding of key topics. Thus far, attendees have learned more about such topics as "Challenges and Activities of Daily Living" and "Care for the Caregiver."

Upcoming topics for the remaining three weeks of the series are:

- Feb. 13: "Maintaining Family Relationships" with facilitator Barbara Tortorella, LICSW.
- Feb. 20: "Legal and Financial Issues" with guest speakers Mary Cedrone, Protective Services and Elder At Risk Supervisor at South Shore Elder Services and Attorney Thomas F. Williams, who specializes in wills and estate planning.

The NVNA Alzheimer's team includes: Barbara Tortorella, LICSW; Gerry Sanderson, BSN; Janet Sennett, MEd, RN; Kris Leary, RPT; and Meg Doherty, NVNA Executive Director and Adult Nurse Practitioner. The team is presenting this program to help caregivers and families understand the nature of the disease and provide them with the ability to meet the needs of their loved ones or friends.

The public is invited to attend any or all of the sessions in this series. All sessions will take place at Cohasset's Sunrise Assisted Living facility. For directions, please call 781-383-6300. For more information about the Caring Connections series, please call Barbara Tortorella at 781-659-2342 ext. 357.

Adult caregivers discussion is set

Cohasset Elder Affairs will be holding an adult caregivers presentation and discussion on Thursday, March 20 from 1-2 p.m. titled "Adult Caregivers: Coming Up To Bat." The guest speaker will be Carolyn Housman, L.I.C.S.C. who will speak at the Cohasset Elder Affairs facility at 3 North Main St. Housman's talk is about the complexities and concerns of family dynamics when an elder person needs care.

Please RSVP to Cohasset Elder Affairs by calling 781-383-9112.

Brick by Brick program for new playground

Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum celebrated its groundbreaking in November 2002 and renovations are underway to the museum's space which will be located adjacent to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sohier Street in Cohasset. Our World has raised one-third of the funds needed to meet its goal for the opening of the museum and are portions of the museum are expected to open in the fall of 2003.

The focus now is on fundraising for the playground which will be built adjacent to Our World. The play structure previously donated to the town of Cohasset (known to many families as the Pirate Park) was outdated and eventually removed for safety reasons. The goal is to renovate the existing area and provide a new playground that Cohasset residents, along with visitors to Our World and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will enjoy for years to come.

The estimated cost to rebuild the playground is $125,000. One of the ways the Our World Playground Committee will be raising funds for the playground is with the "Brick by Brick" program.

Through the Brick by Brick program, your donation of $100 will be recognized with an engraved brick. You can have your name, your family's name, loved one or your business name celebrated in brick. If you prefer, you also have the opportunity to contribute a larger engraved paver or a beautiful hardwood bench complete with an engraved brass plate.

Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. Construction on the walkways is slated to begin in the spring of 2003. All the funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance.

To participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399. If you have any questions about the playground project or would like to make a larger contribution, please call Our World at (781) 383-3198. Please note that your donation is tax deductible.

The first 100 brick orders received will be entered into a drawing for a $100 gift certificate for dinner at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset.

STATUS REPORT

Police arrested 11 in January

January was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department, Police Chief Robert Jackson said. There were 11 arrests, two for Operating with a Suspended License, one for Violation of a Restraining Order, two for Outstanding Warrants, two for Protective Custody, one for Operating a Motor Vehicle Unlicensed, one for Operating Under the Influence of Alcohol third Offense, one for Breaking and Entering in the Nighttime, and finally one for Possession of a Class D Substance, Jackson said.

During the month of January the police department investigated 11 motor vehicle accidents, five of which resulted in personal injury. There were 153 Motor Vehicle Citations issued totaling $6,670 in fines. Additionally there were 99 parking tickets issued for $2,925 in fines.

In the month of January there were four Criminal Complaints issued, all four for Motor Vehicle Violations.

Also in January our Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,045 calls for police services, of those 114 were Emergency 911 calls.

In the month of January there were no breaking and enterings, Jackson said.

POLICE BRIEFS

Snowstorm crashes

Cohasset police said there were no less than seven motor vehicle crashes during last Friday's snowstorm. The accidents were minor and no serious injuries were reported. But Police Chief Robert Jackson reminds all drivers to slow down during inclement conditions. He also said SUVs adhere to the same laws of physics as regular cars do, and require just as much distance to stop.

Rte. 3A break-ins

Police are investigating break-ins at two stores along Rte. 3A.

At 11:34 p.m., last Thursday, thieves forced the front door of Good Sport open and grabbed a variety of sports clothing before fleeing.

At 4:13 a.m. Saturday, officers responded to an alarm at the Shoe Market and discovered the door facing Rte. 3A had been shattered. It could not be immediately determined if any merchandize was taken, police said, and therefore, they are treating it as an attempted burglary.

Police Chief Robert Jackson said if anyone sees anything suspicious along Rte. 3A, especially at night, to notify the police.

LEGAL NOTICES

SPECIAL TOWN MEETING
LEGAL NOTICE
ATTORNEY GENERAL'S NOTICE
pursuant to G.L., c.40, 32, as amended by Chapter 299 of the Acts of 2000

Town of Cohasset - Case No. 2362
Special Town Meeting of November 18, 2002
Article #8

Attorney General's Authority to Waive Pro-cedural Defects in the Notice of the Planning Board Hearing
Pursuant to the provisions of G.L. c.40, 32, as amended by Chapter 299 of the Acts of 2000, if the Attorney General finds there to be any defect in the procedure of adoption or amendment of any zoning bylaw relating to the form or content of the notice of the Planning Board hearing prescribed by G.L., c.40A, 5, or to the manner or dates on which said notice is mailed, posted or published as required by that section, then instead of disapproving the bylaw or amendment by reason of any such defect, the Attorney General may elect to proceed under the defect waiver provisions of G.L. c.40, 32. Under those provisions, the Attorney General is conditionally authorized to waive any such defect.

Defect Determined in Notice of Planning Board Hearing
The Attorney General has determined that one or more of the notice requirements for the Planning Board Hearing relating to the above Article(s) failed to comply with the notice requirements for such hearing as set forth in G.L. c.40A, 5. Section 5 provides in part:

No zoning ordinance or bylaw or amendment thereto shall be adopted until after the planning board in a city or town, and the city council or a committee designated or appointed for the purpose by said council has each held a public hearing thereon, together or separately, at which interested persons shall be given an opportunity to be heard. Said public hearing shall be held within sixty-five days after the proposed zoning ordinance or bylaw is submitted to the planning board by the city council or selectmen or if there is none, within sixty-five days after the proposed zoning ordinance or bylaw is submitted to the city council or selectmen. Notice of the time and place of such public hearing, of the subject matter, sufficient for identification, and of the place where texts and maps thereof may be inspected shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the city or town once in each of two successive weeks, the first publication to be not less than fourteen days before the day of said hearing, and by posting such notice in a conspicuous place in the city or town hall for a period of not less than fourteen days before the day of said hearing. Notice of said hearing shall also be sent by mail, postage prepaid to the department of housing and community development, the regional planning agency, if any, and to the planning board of each abutting cities and towns.

(Emphasis added.)

In the materials submitted to us in connection with the amendments to the zoning bylaws adopted under Article 8, the notice of the planning board hearing was not posted pursuant to G.L., c.40A, 5. The failure to post the notice of the planning board hearing for the required time period is a procedural defect that could result in our disapproval of the proposed amendments. Apart from these defects, the notice in all other respects appears to satisfy the requirements of the statute. We specifically note that the planning board hearing notice was duly published in a newspaper of general circulation in the town on October 22, 2002 and October 29, 2002. Article 8 also received the unanimous recommendation of the planning board at town meeting.

Attorney General's Election to Proceed Under the Waiver Provisions of G.L., c.40, 32
The Attorney General has elected to proceed under the defect waiver authority conferred by G.L. c.40, 32, as amended by Chapter 299 of the Acts of 2000.

Suspension of Review of Zoning Bylaw Amendments
The 90-day period prescribed by law for the Attorney General's review of local bylaws is therefore suspended in accordance with the provisions of G.L. c.40, 32, as amended by Chapter 299 of the Acts of 2000.

Posting and Publication of This Notice
The Town Clerk shall post a true copy of this Notice in a conspicuous place in the Cohasset Town Hall for a period of not less than 14 days and shall publish a copy thereof once in a newspaper of general circulation in the Town of Cohasset.

Filing of Claim That Defect in Notice Was Misleading or Otherwise Prejudicial Within 21 days of the date on which this Notice is published in a newspaper of general circulation in the Town of Cohasset, any resident of the Town of Cohasset, or the owner of any real property in the Town of Cohasset, or any other party entitled to notice of the planning board hearing may file with the Town Clerk a written statement that the notice defect was misleading or otherwise prejudicial. The statement must set forth the reasons supporting the claim that the defect in the Planning Board Notice was misleading or otherwise prejudicial. This statement must be actually on file with the Town Clerk not later than 21 days from the date on which this Notice is published in the newspaper.

Town Clerk's Certification of Compliance with This Notice
Forthwith after the expiration of the 21-day period in which any claim may be filed, the Town Clerk shall submit to the Attorney General a true copy of this Notice endorsed with a certification of compliance with the publishing and posting requirements of the preceding paragraph, and a certification that either (a) no claim was filed within the 21day period, or (b) one or more claims were filed within the 21-day period. The Town Clerk shall submit to the Attorney General true copies of any such claim(s).

Resumption of Attorney General's Review
Upon receipt of one original copy of this Notice with the Clerk's notification endorsed thereon, the 90-day period provided for the Attorney General's review under G.L. c.40, 32 shall resume; but if the expiration of the 90-day period is less than 10 days from the date on which the Attorney General receives from the Town Clerk such Notice of certification, then the review period shall be extended to the tenth day following such receipt. If no claim is made, the Attorney General may waive any such defect; if any claim is made, however, the Attorney General may not waive any such defect.

NOTE: By NOT filing a claim under this provision, a person shall not be deprived of the right to assert a claim of invalidity arising out of any possible defect in the procedure of adoption or amendment, as provided in G.L. c.40, 32, and in G.L. c.40A, 5.

Hingham designer's a trendsetter in restaurant interiors

By Jerry Elsden
CORRESPONDENT

Bob Palmer belongs to a creative breed of professionals who design restaurant and nightclub interiors.

"I am in the entertainment and hospitality design business," Palmer says, modestly.

His latest creation is FELT, a stylish nightclub housed in an early 20th century four-story brick building at 533 Washington Street in Boston's newly-fashionable Ladder District.

"The owners chose FELT as a name because of the felt on the pool tables. It's also about having a great experience," says Palmer, who graduated from Hingham High during the late 1970s and admits to being "north of 40."

His work at FELT, and other clubs, has won accolades. Wendy Samonian, Associate Publisher of the magazine Improper Bostonian, thinks Palmer's designs are "exciting for Boston, because he has more of a New York City style. His work is progressive for Boston," a city known for being traditional and conservative.

Business has been good at FELT, which opened in March 2002. Palmer is now designing the fourth floor as a separate admissions venue, with DJ dancing and a VIP lounge. But when Palmer first saw the building in March 2000 he peeked in the front window and thought "what a mess!"

"There had been quite a few businesses here...a sports bar named Yesterdays, a Euro club named Joy, and there were broken mirrors and ugly dance floors. Also, this was a tough neighborhood," Palmer recalls. The building had originally housed a restaurant catering to shoppers at the former R.H. Stearns, Raymonds and Jordan Marsh department stores.

FELT's owners were reaching for an American crowd. "In the club industry, there are Euro crowds and there are American crowds and the two don't mix," explains Palmer. Doors open at 5 p.m. for the dinner and after work crowd. At 9 p.m. tables are removed and the first floor becomes a lounge until the 1 a.m. closing.

Palmer used circles and spheres on all four levels at FELT reinforce the billiard ball theme. The effect is stunning against red and purple velvet in banquettes lining one wall, and in floor-to-ceiling draperies hung against an opposite brick wall. The second floor mezzanine is open to the first floor so that people can furtively watch one another, thanks to Palmer's inventive placement of four oversized mahogany-framed mirrors angled just right.

"I had to remember my old high school geometry classes to make that happen," he says.

His custom designed half-sphere chairs and companion cube-shaped ottomans are a hit with club patrons. They've since been copied at several other Boston clubs.

Because Palmer respects classical architecture, he carefully restored the first floor's original fluted columns and carved plaster beams, now painted off-white and agreeably juxtaposed with the room's more modern materials. Over the bar floats an airplane-like wing he designed out of thin skinned aluminum, chandeliers resembling the 1950s spacecraft Sputnik hang over his custom made barstools, and running down the middle of the wooden bar is a strip of white neon which throws off a flattering light "like a beauty counter," says Palmer's girlfriend. A bemused Palmer explains why mirrors and specialized lighting are used in nightclubs.

"It's all theater, as if everyone is on a stage. People go to clubs to get out of their ordinary lives, to see and be seen."

From the first floor to the second — mezzanine — floor, is a curved staircase that was covered with "awful carpeting" Palmer recalls. He ripped that off to reveal near pristine marble steps, just as he did with the terrazzo floor above, discovered beneath a wooden dance floor.

The mezzanine bar is a popular hangout. Palmer's custom-

Pink Floyd tribute band headlines at Weymouth club

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Come Saturday night, those rocking at Club Odyssey in Weymouth will see you on the dark side of the moon. Or they may just wish you were here.

The Odyssey will host Pink Voyd, the much-acclaimed, Boston area tribute band to Britain's original and most successful art-rock mega-group Pink Floyd.

The Voyd — as fans have similarly called the Floyd — makes this return South Shore appearance back by popular demand, following a roundly well-received and much talked-about show at Plymouth's now-closed Ricky T's final night last fall.

Pink Voyd is described as New England's premier Pink Floyd Tribute on the band's Web site at www.pinkvoyd.com. According to band spokesman Dan Fisher, of Plymouth, who fills the role of original Floyd member Richard Wright on keyboards and guitar, Voyd is a faithful and record-perfect recreation of The Real Thing, not only in Floyd's original and subsequent four-piece lineups but also in the expanded 14-member (or more) editions of the band in its later years, including backup singers, string and horn sections. But, said Fisher, all of the augmentation, from musical performance to mixing and programming, is handled by the four members of Voyd as well.

Whatever songs or albums you remember as a Pink Floyd fan, the Voyd show recreates them in the band's extensive tribute repertoire.

"A true 4-person lineup recreates these timeless classics without sequences or backing tracks," said Fisher, also the tribute band's Web master, on the pinkvoyd.com homepage. "Impressive computer controlled lasers, video projection, and robotic lighting provide a multimedia spectacle for which Pink Floyd is so well known."

Along with Fisher, Pink Voyd includes guitarist/saxophonist Walter Stickle, bassist John Pitingolo and drummer Tony Caliendo. All of these players hail from the Boston and North Shore areas and, with Fisher, share in various vocal and other instrumental duties, recreating the respective Floyd roles of members Roger Waters (vocals, guitar, bass), Nick Mason (drums) and David Gilmour (vocals, guitar), plus the original band singer/guitarist and ill-fated, rock 'n' roll LSD casualty Syd Barrett, whom Gilmour replaced in Floyd's early days.

But equally essential to the Pink Voyd experience, said Fisher, is the band's production and creative crew, including digital video projectionist J. Max, a pair of lasers and lighting specialists named Amon Tighe and one who simply dubs himself Hobbit, and soundman John Teele.

"My devotion, or obsession, with Pink Floyd began back before I was in high school, with the first time I heard the Dark Side of the Moon album," Fisher recalled. "I was camping out in the woods, and someone was off in the distance with bullhorn speakers strapped to his car playing the track called `On the Run' from that album. And so this freaky, voluminous sound was just coming from out of the woods, and I thought that a spaceship was landing or something. The whole sound of the band just intrigued me. And I started buying all the Pink Floyd albums, and their music became the soundtrack to my life."

Fisher, now in his late 30s, is a former U.S. Army staff sergeant who specialized in Electronic Warfare, Intercept Systems. He was later discovered by a Chief Warrant Officer of the Army band who heard him jamming at a local Army club. Fisher then spent two years touring Europe with the 84th Army band, followed by another two years travelling the States with the U.S. Army Rock Band. He is currently a professor of Music Technology and Synthesis at Berklee College of Music in Boston.

Whatever songs or albums you remember as a Pink Floyd fan, the Voyd show recreates them in the band's extensive tribute repertoire, including the early Barrett-era psychedelic jams, the prime era of Meddle (even all epic, 20-plus minutes of "Echoes"), Dark Side, Wish You Were Here, Animals, The Wall and beyond.

Saturday's show begins at 9 p.m. For more information, call the Odyssey at 781 335-1400.

Caine shines in 'American'

The Quiet American (A-)

Slipped into town for September's Boston Film Festival and brought back now but given little promotion, "The Quiet American" encompasses one of the handful of best performances of 2002. If Michael Caine's incarnation of the jaded but cordial British journalist, Thomas Fowler, ensconced in Vietnam in the early 1950s, calmly observing the unraveling of the French imperial venture in Indochina, and besotted by an enticing former taxi dancer, doesn't win an Oscar nomination, chalk it up as another of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences absent-minded goofs.

Graham Greene's 1955 novel was first filmed in 1958, when Hollywood's gurus either loved America to the point of wearing blinkers about our faults or pretended to, lest the witch hunters go for their scalps. It now comes to us at a time when movie makers, like movie critics, tend to loathe America or at least find appealing the sneering at and supposedly superior awareness of our boorishness, insularity, wrong-headedness. This version is truer to Greene's searing book. Its American, Alden Pyle, an intelligence operative masquerading as a medical aide worker (given solid, slightly stolid incarnation by Brendan Fraser), is the stand-in for American obtuseness. The film's unneeded coda connects America's baby steps into involvement to the later war, though America's complicity in the subjugation of Vietnam to communist tyranny vanishes.

Greene's devout Catholicism appears here in Fowler's wife, never seen but alluded to, who, back in England, refuses to grant

Chewy oatmeal cookies

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Years ago, I developed a recipe for oatmeal cookies that produced thick cookies that were moist with a hint of chew. Since then, I have tasted oatmeal cookies at bakeries that had big-league chew, really a whole different style of oatmeal cookie. I didn't want them greasy or too sweet – two of the most common problems with this common confection — but I did want to give my jaw a workout so I investigated how to bake the chew into the cookie.

The basic recipe includes butter, white and brown sugars, eggs, oats, flour, soda or powder, spices, salt, and raisins. I started my testing with the butter, which I left at two sticks. I found that melting the butter produced a greasier cookie than when I creamed (beat) it with the sugars. In my original recipe, I had used 1 cup granulated sugar and 1/2 cup brown sugar. When I reversed these quantities, I got more chew. As far as oats and flour are concerned, I knew that more oats and less flour would provide more texture and therefore more chew although too little flour made the cookies spread too much during baking. I settled on 3 cups oats to 1 cup flour. (Toasting the oats ahead of time wasn't necessary – they "toasted" during baking.)

The eggs (two) and the leavener (1/2 teaspoon baking soda) remained the same, much to my surprise. Adding baking powder or more soda simply made the cookies thinner and less chewy since they deflated a bit during baking and cooling. I reduced the spices considerably, ending up with just vanilla, salt, and a 1/2 teaspoon of cinnamon. My secret ingredient turned out to be 2/3 cup of toasted and finely chopped pecans. They fortified the nutty flavor of the oats and gave the cookies some backbone. Coarsely chopped macadamias and blanched almonds also worked nicely as an optional addition.

The oven remained at 350 degrees from the original recipe and baking time was about 14 minutes. Be sure to remove them from the oven before they appear fully cooked.

CHEWY OATMEAL PECAN COOKIES

The batter can also be mixed by hand or with a hand-held mixer. If using the latter switch to a wooden spoon or spatula before trying to incorporate the oats, raisins, and nuts. These cookies will not appear fully cooked when they must be taken out of the oven. If baked too long, they will become hard and dry when cool.

1/2 pound (2 sticks) unsalted butter, softened but still firm
1 cup packed light brown sugar
1/2 cup granulated sugar
2 large eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup all purpose flour
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
3 cups rolled oats
1 cup raisins
2/3 cup pecans, toasted and finely chopped
3/4 cup macadamia or blanched whole almonds coarsely chopped (optional)

1. Heat the oven to 350 degrees and position a rack to the center position. Line two cookie sheets with parchment paper.

2. In a large bowl of a standing mixer fitted with the paddle attachment beat butter and sugar until light and fluffy, about three minutes. Add the eggs and vanilla and beat until well-combined, about one minute more.

3. In a separate bowl whisk together the flour, soda, salt, and cinnamon. Add to the butter/sugar/egg mixture and mix on low speed until the dry ingredients are fully incorporated. Add the oats, raisins, pecans and optional macadamias and mix until the batter is homogeneous.

4. Place generous 2 tablespoons of dough (#24 ice cream scoop makes simple work of this step) on parchment paper leaving at least 2 inches in between each scoop of dough. Bake one cookie sheet at a time for about 14 minutes or until the cookies are light brown around the edges, puffy and cracked, and appear to be undercooked on top. Rotate the pan half way through the baking time for even browning. Bake second sheet of cookies and then repeat with remaining dough as necessary using new parchment as needed. For best results you should let the cookie sheets cool between batches.

Makes about 36 cookies designed top looks like cracked ice. "We hammered some tempered glass to get the look we wanted and underlit it with blue," he explains. The bar's backdrop is a wall of original windows with curved wooden mullions, draped with sheer silver-threaded curtains.

On the third floor — the purple level —Palmer removed a rusted-out tin ceiling and revealed oak beams. He reused a granite bar at the room's far end, adding Sputnik lights overhead and Swedish martini stools for seating.

Right now Palmer is designing FELT's fourth floor.

"I start with a colored drawing, then execute the plan to scale, and build a model for the many areas within the floor's space." He's already defined the palette ("Zenish, with calming colors") the bar top ("some exotic marble") and the lighting ("LED lights in blue, red and green, programmed by computer").

Besides FELT, Palmer's currently designing projects for a Providence restaurant aptly named Prov, the Caprice Restaurant in the Tremont House, and the just-opened News on Kneeland Street. To meet deadlines he "works seven days a week."

A labor of love, obviously. But he's used to juggling. While at Hingham High he took architecture courses at Harvard School of Design and fell in love with the classics. After graduating Boston University's School of Communications he designed materials for trade shows, did some animation, and started his own production company called ACME Design in Boston "We did a bunch of stuff on the cutting edge of computer animation," Palmer recalls.

Cutting edge, indeed. It's atypical of Palmer to boast about his work, but according to longtime friend and former colleague Marc Manderosian "Bob does his homework, studies trends, knows what works design-wise, and then it becomes mainstream." The two collaborated for years animating for commercial projects and illustrating children's books, even winning an award in the 1980s for an animated short film promoting the former Apollo Computer Company. The computer-generated graphics he used then are commonplace now.

Palmer's other projects include designing the former Vogue Nightclub in Hull, Waterworks and Hot Water at Marina Bay in Quincy, and Pasha Bar at the former Harborlight Mall in Weymouth. Only Waterworks remains today. Still, by opening day of any restaurant or club Palmer's work is finished, and he bears little responsibility for their success or failure. "The best part about this job is the designing," he says.

Obviously, Palmer grew up in a creative environment. His mother is Dorothy Palmer, a well-known artist from Hingham and Nantucket. "Bob's amazing," she says. "He can take a concept and apply it to any part of his senses. He can play many percussion instruments, and speaks several languages. Every part of him is a gift." Bob's brother, Nicholas, is a symphony orchestra conductor, and does guest performances at the South Shore Conservatory of Music every July.

Samonian describes Palmer as "a style setter …who doesn't follow the norm, and is taking Boston to the next level."

The basics of seed sowing

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

February is historically the snowiest month of the year and as news reports flashed back memorable scenes of the Blizzard of '78 on its 25th anniversary, Mother Nature seemed determined to provide an exclamation point with yet another wintry offering. Only a few days before, torrential downpours had washed away all signs of winter giving many gardeners a touch of spring fever as our lawns and gardens became momentarily visible during the fleeting thaw, but it was back to reality by week's end. Although I am reluctant to give any credence to that chubby, prognosticating rodent, Punxsutawney Phil, it seems likely that the advent of spring may be weeks away.

As the storm passed out to sea leaving a foot or more of fluffy snow in its wake, a new day dawned under crystal clear blue skies, beckoning me forth, my camera in hand, to document the beauty of our winter wonderland. Few events in nature rival the serenity and pristine elegance of a new fallen snow when even an average landscape can be transformed into a picture postcard. On this perfect winter afternoon, spring seemed light years away, but even for gardeners who yearn for the greening of the landscape, the peaceful solitude of the storm's aftermath was undeniably mesmerizing.

With muscles aching from hours of shoveling, I paused periodically to observe the changing patterns cast by the elegant forms and distinctive lines of the winter landscape as the light shifted throughout the afternoon. A small flock of robins, perched high above, seemed out of place in this wintry scene, their occasional calls to one another sounding like protests to Mother Nature's for her most recent chilly offering.

Dusk, fatigue and falling temperatures compelled me to retreat to the warmth and comfort of my home. I wondered if February storms were Mother Nature's way of preparing gardeners for the labors of spring. In a few short weeks it will be time to rake, clip, and begin turning over new gardens. With more snow in the forecast, muscles should be toned and ready for the spring cleanup. I collapsed into a cozy chair and allowed my mind to wander, envisioning the beauty of spring nestled beneath the blanket of snow. Eager to preserve these visions of flowers and greenery, I sought refuge in my gardening catalogs, their colorful illustrations providing just the needed touch of springtime splendor.

One of the most economical ways to produce a garden full of beautiful flowers is to grow your own plants from seeds. Quantities of annuals, perennials and vegetables can be raised from seed packets at a fraction of the cost of buying flats or individual plants. There is also a tremendous sense of pride and accomplishment when you successfully grow plants from seed. Gardeners of all ages experience an indescribable thrill when they discover that leaves have sprouted from the seeds they have sown. The magic of a tiny seed germinating and growing to produce a clump of exquisite flowers, a vine covered with delicious, plump tomatoes, a flowering shrub or a stately tree, is one of nature's greatest miracles.

Another advantage to starting your own seeds is the fantastic diversity available from seed sources. While many local nurseries offer a wide selection of plants and seeds, the possibilities from seed catalogs are infinite. Raising plants from seeds enables the gardener to select the colors, attributes, and varieties best suited to their needs rather than being limited to those offered as transplants later in the season at local nurseries.

The month of February is an ideal time to begin the process of gathering seeds and supplies. Seeds, containers and growing medium can be bought locally or through catalogs. Perhaps the most difficult task will be selecting which types and varieties of seeds to purchase with so many enticing descriptions and photographs offered by the seed companies. A good reference book on seed starting is highly recommended, as well. Although most packets provide pertinent information on how to treat the seeds contained within the package, a complete reference will assist you in making your selections and provide many details which simply cannot fit on the back of a small seed envelope.

Should you have seeds from previous years, they should be tested now for their viability. Most seeds remain viable for a number of years if stored in a cool, dry environment, but some types last better than others. Airtight containers, plastic bags or canisters are ideal for storage. Place a number of stored seeds between damp layers of paper towels and keep in a warm location consistently above 70 degrees. Keep the toweling damp but not soggy and start checking the seeds in a few days for up to three weeks. If none or only a very small percentage of the seeds germinate, fresh seeds should be purchased.

While it is wise to begin planning and preparing for seed starting now, be sure to wait a few weeks before starting most seeds. Limited sunlight and short day length often lead to leggy, spindly seedlings if seeds are to be grown on sunny windowsills. Fluorescent lighting generally produces stocky, healthier transplants but little will be gained by beginning the germination process too early. For now, be content to research, purchase and dream of your upcoming bounty of seedlings and the rewards they will produce through the spring and summer months.

him a divorce. Since, therefore, he can't marry his alluring, plaint Phuong (Do Thi Hai Yen) and can only have her so long as he is employed and in Vietnam — his employers at The Times are about to summon him home — Pyle is the logical next step for her. Pyle has fallen for her, as he stumblingly but unabashedly tells Fowler, at first sight, and the two men, despising each other but loving the same woman and attempting always to do the right thing and retain that stiff upper lip, keep in close contact, becoming entwined. Vietnam's hideous war for independence from France invariably scooped up everyone in its wake.

The milieu becomes palpably entrancing and terrifying, validating Fowler's open voice-over. He says people come to Vietnam looking for something and invariably finding it. A terrible bombing of civilians in downtown Saigon — a no-doubt unintended, swift reminder of the ongoing barbaric "suicide" atrocities committed by Arab fanatics in Israel, Judaea and Samaria — jolts. But what lingers, making this an unforgettable film, is Caine's Fowler, world-weariness incarnate but still throbbing with sexual yearning, palpable adoring his mistress, loving the country, its people, its aura. Absent histrionics, this is arguably Caine's best performance.

None who subject themselves to the contemporary American cinema will be shocked, shocked, to find its ideology is of a piece with movie-land's habitual reflexive leftism. But this is much superior to most of the clunky, preachy films showing Americans as jerks, our economic and social systems as oppressive and vile, and our politics and world involvement as wrongheaded. TV and movies are the captives of willful purveyors of a dogma permitting neither nuance nor any possibility that another point of view may have even an iota of validity. Endure that as we must — an alternative is to stop watching most TV and most mainstream movies — and concentrate on what Caine does with this part, and the experience is decidedly worth your time.

LISTEN To Life
by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

SOUNDS FALLING ON YOUNG EARS

If you think your baby is not totally focused on all you have to say, you are right. Researchers have known for some time that babies do not hear as well as adults. A sound that adults can hear must be made much more loudly for a baby to hear, and this is true until a child reaches age 6, or older. Babies cannot focus on important sounds the way adults can. Instead, they listen more generally, unselectively, to a range of sounds around them. As a practical matter, this means that all noises register equally to babies. As a result, mothers naturally talk a little louder to their babies, lean over to make eye contact, and/or repeat their words. Communication is a vital part of our world no matter what our age. And at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we'll do all we can to ensure that the isolation of a hearing impairment doesn't keep you or your child on the outside looking in. We'll start with a comprehensive hearing test to determine the best course of action. If a hearing impairment is detected, we'll use our knowledge and experience to match the correct instrument to your needs. Stop by soon at our new offices at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), easy to find, across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth, PH: 781-337-1144. For your convenience, we also have an office in Abington.

P.S. If you want your baby to pay better attention to your words, eliminate such background noise as a TV or radio.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 12

Storm clouds move out today. The loquacious Gemini moon forms a harmonious contact to Uranus at 9:28 a.m. and becomes inactive. Plan to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 12:19 p.m., placing a focus on home and domestic responsibilities. The planet Mercury moves into Aquarius at 8:00 p.m., remaining there until March 4. This is a favorable time for new learning or travel experiences.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13

The Cancer moon opposes Venus at 7:22 a.m. and becomes inactive. It will travel void-of-course throughout today and most of tomorrow. That means that new starts are off limits. Instead, take the time to follow through on unfinished projects, review and redo, make repairs, clean and reorganize. Share a special dinner with close friends and family this evening.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 14

An inactive Cancer moon can make for a slow start to this day. Others may be moody, hypersensitive. Think about what you are saying. Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. Planetary influences turn around completely, however, at 7:04 p.m., when the moon enters playful Leo. The evening is prime for social activities, romantic rendezvous. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15

A full moon is building and will culminate tomorrow evening. Expect the unexpected this weekend. Energy and emotions run high. This full moon is intensified by two major planetary alignments. Mars will conjoin with Pluto; avoid power struggles, disagreements with others. Drive defensively. A polarity of Jupiter and Neptune also occurs, making it difficult to separate the facts from the fiction. Keep it light. Don't overdo or overindulge. Stay busy with practical projects.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 16

Read yesterday's advice. Jupiter opposes Neptune at 4:12 a.m. Mars and Pluto conjoin at 19 1/2-degrees Sagittarius at 10:55 a.m. The full moon culminates at 6:51 p.m., 28-degrees Leo/Aquarius. The Leo moon opposes Uranus at 8:18 p.m. and becomes inactive until 10:22 p.m., when it enters Virgo. This day can go either way. A positive, easygoing attitude is your ace in the hole.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17

Conflicting planetary influences occur today. The moon continues to travel in practical Virgo. However, a sun-Uranus alignment takes the spotlight, prompting you to take a break from your daily routine. Do something different. Be willing to entertain new ideas, view worries or concerns from another perspective. Free yourself from negative thinking, bad habits, emotional baggage.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 18

Storm clouds move in this morning. The Virgo moon forms stressful 90-degree alignments to Pluto, Mars and Saturn until 10:56 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Remain calm and upbeat no matter what is going on around you. Stay busy with work projects. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging, chores you've been meaning to get to. Clean out drawers and closets; get rid of the clutter. The sun enters Pisces at 9:01 p.m., remaining there until March 20. The moon enters Libra at 11:48 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 19

A social Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Mercury, Jupiter and Neptune today. However, an applying polarity of Mars and Saturn urges you to face your responsibilities and fulfill promises you have made to others. Cool your heels; put the needs or demands of others on top of your 'to do' list. If you have been experiencing tension in a relationship, now is the time to make concessions and smooth things out. A kind word or thoughtful gesture will make all the difference.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20

Mars opposes Saturn at 9:13 a.m., making for a rough start to this day. You may have to face the facts about a situation that has been troublesome and take action. On the other hand, this influence is prime for getting down to brass tacks and taking care of important business projects. You can be most productive. The moon travels in Libra, forming easy contacts to Pluto, Saturn and Mars this morning. Planetary action turns around completely this afternoon, as alignments of Mercury to Jupiter and Neptune take over. Social activities get the green light. Kick back and enjoy yourself. Don't take anything or anyone too seriously. The Libra moon aligns with Uranus at 11:29 p.m. and becomes inactive.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21

At 1:09 a.m. the moon enters serious Scorpio, remaining there today and tomorrow. Mercury aligns with Neptune at 1:55 a.m., and the moon interacts with Mercury and Neptune this evening. That means that you should sleep on new ideas; don't take action today. Things may not be as they appear. On the other hand, this is an ideal time for developing creative projects. You can also make gains on an inner, spiritual level. Spend time alone. Look within for answers.

TEAM HARMONY FOUNDATION®

What is a Day of Harmony? WLVI-TV (WB56), The Team Harmony Foundation, Community Newspaper Company and the Boston Herald have joined together to bring the message of Team Harmony directly to your school and your community on Thursday, February 27, 2003!

WB56 will host a live, interactive television show, "RealTalk Live" on February 27 from 10 am - 11 am. This commercial-free educational hour will be dedicated to the issues of diversity and ending bigotry and hatred in our communities. Teens will co-host the show, students will form a studio audience and schools will be able to directly participate by calling or emailing their questions and comments.

Through Newspapers in Education (NIE), Community Newspaper Company and the Boston Herald in conjunction with Educators for Social Responsibility, will publish lesson plans and discussion questions to assist educators in facilitating a dialogue in their schools around the issues discussed during the program. Newspapers are provided free of charge to classrooms when you sign-up at www.townonline.com/nie. And, parents can participate at home by using the newspapers to open-up dialogue with their children.

How do I get involved? Encourage your teacher to sign-up your school or classroom for an assembly to watch "RealTalk Live" on WB56. Sign-up or find more information at www.teamharmony.org.

Sign-up to get free newspapers delivered to your classroom by calling 508-626-3859 or log on to www.townonline.com/nie.

Tracking the high cost of Greenbush restoration

Changing politics could hurt train

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Welcome back aboard the Greenbush roller coaster.

With contracts awarded, a regional construction office open in Weymouth and miles of old track being removed from the 17.7 miles of railroad bed that wends its way from Braintree to Scituate, most bets were on that the controversial rail spur would be up and running by Spring 2005.

But last week, the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority stalled the estimated $470 million project [of which $282 million is for construction] for six months due to a key right-of-way issue in Braintree and delays in obtaining necessary regulatory permits.

While the move caught local legislators, town officials and area residents by surprise because they had no advance warning the MBTA would suspend construction — the issues surrounding Greenbush are nothing new. In addition to filling wetlands, environmental and historic district impacts, and land-takings, at the center of the Greenbush controversy has been its rising price tag. Expected to attract some 4,200

About Greenbush

Estimated cost: $464 million

Total riders: 4,200 inbound per typical weekday

Stops: Seven new commuter rail stations along the right-of-way.

One-way trip time: Greenbush to South Station including a stop at Quincy Center, 59 minutes.

Town projects may be in limbo

A six-month delay in the Greenbush railroad project may have also derailed projects that were part of a mitigation package between the town and the MBTA.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he did not yet know exactly how the town would be effected by the delay, but Joe Pesaturo, a spokesman for the MBTA, said mitigation projects would not be exempt.

"Anything that involves construction is on hold for at least six months," said Pesaturo.

A meeting between MBTA officials, Haddad and Greenbush town ombudsman Kristina Patterson was cancelled Tuesday morning due to

Selectman's race tops spring ballot

Three candidates focus on economy

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

In what will be the only race in town for the second year in a row, three candidates will vie for a single seat on the Board of Selectmen this spring.

Incumbent Michael Sullivan will run for his fourth term on the board, while challengers Roger Hill and Gabriel Gomez seek their first.

All of the candidates realize that a tough economic road lay ahead for Cohasset. While Sullivan says his experience makes him the man for the job, Hill and Gomez say Town Hall needs new blood.

"The most important thing is that we're going to be looking at some difficult financial issues with the cuts from the state," said Sullivan. "We've rebuilt the infrastructure of the town and you don't want to take that apart. We really need to scrutinize the whole budget thoroughly. It becomes a balancing act."

While Sullivan says his experience makes him the man for the job, Hill and Gomez say Town Hall needs new blood.

"In light of that, I think having some experience is important," said Sullivan. "I think continuity is in the town's best interest."

The candidate who can convince voters he is most capable of solving the town's budget woes may emerge victorious. No other issues — in particular, ones that the candidates seem to disagree on — have come to the forefront.

St. John tragedy on the record

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

There's something about this song.

Rik Tinory knows it, that's why despite decades in the music and recording business he's as excited as a teenager with tickets to a sold-out rock concert.

"I woke up in the middle of the night and was staring out into the woods behind my home, when the song came to me."
— Rik Tinory

Tinory, whose home and studio is on Pond Street, also knows when a song comes from the heart — the soul, if you will — it's got a quality that will endure.

"Mother of Ireland" with music and lyrics by Tinory also tells a story — the true story about the brig St. John disaster off the Cohasset coast nearly 154 years ago that claimed the lives of 99, most of whom were emigrants from Galway, Ireland on their way to a better life in America.

Stacy Rock, a Boston University graduate, sings the ballad, which is getting airtime on some 100 radio stations across the country so far.

The genesis for the song took root about three years ago when Tinory, by happenstance, saw a long procession at Cohasset Cemetery at Joy Place off North Main Street and inquired what it was all about. The answer shocked him. He couldn't believe after 40 years in town, he had never heard about the brig. St. John or had taken note of the large Celtic cross in the cemetery that marks the mass grave of 45 victims, whose bodies were recovered.

But Tinory was all too familiar with the infamous Grampus Ledge off Cohasset where the brig St. John broke up. He's never forgotten the day 25 years ago when he was out with his family on their cabin cruiser "Lady Claire" and had a run in with the ledge that is hidden just below the surface. Despite water pouring into the stateroom below, Tinory was able to beach the boat and bring his family to safety.

But it wasn't until on night last September that Tinory had the inspiration to memorialize the brig St. John story, which had so touched him. The song, which was released Feb. 1 and has already been played in Ireland, may indeed be the vehicle to share the tragic, but enlightening, St. John story with the world.

"I woke up in the middle of the night and was staring out into the woods behind my home, when the song came to

Entrance, parking changes at CMHS

Cohasset Middle High School will have a new layout when students return from vacation.

Supt. Edward Malvey said the Middle School side of the building and the High School's main entrance will be closed. The temporary main entrance will be the door closest to the old Dorr Gymnasium.

The changes come at the beginning of the third and final phase of construction on the school, which Malvey said would last through December this year.

Malvey also said parking would be tight when students returned. He said the parking lot on the Middle School side of the building would be closed by the end of February, and parking would be limited to the main and front lots.
